SECTION 1. Be it ordained by the Constitutional Convention of the State of Louisiana, That the Sheriffs and Tax Collectors of the State, except of the city of New Orleans, Orleans right bank, and the parish of Jefferson, shall give notice to the taxpayers of their respective parishes to pay the tax of one mill per cent levied by ordinance of the twenty-fourth December, 1867, by this Convention; and thirty days after service of said notice those who shall not have paid the tax due by them shall be considered in default, and the Sheriffs and Tax Collectors shall exact an additional tax upon such persons of twenty-five per cent upon the sum due by them for the first default, and an additional tax of ten per cent to be computed on the original tax for every subsequent thirty days said persons shall continue to be in default, up to the date of the final settlement.

SEC. 2. Be it further ordained, That the Sheriffs and Tax Collectors of the city of New Orleans, Orleans right bank, and parish of Jefferson, shall by public notice in one newspaper published in their parish, call upon all taxpayers to pay the tax levied by the ordinance of December twenty-four above mentioned, and all persons who shall not have paid the amounts due by them on account of said tax ten days after the publication of the above required notice shall pay an additional tax of twenty-five per cent on the original tax, and an additional tax of two and a-half per cent on the original tax of one mill per cent for every subsequent ten days said persons shall be in default.

SEC. 3. Be it further ordained, etc., That immediately after the taxpayers shall have been put in default by the expiration of the thirty or ten days, as the case may be, given in the notice required by the first and second sections of this ordinance, the Sheriffs and Tax Collectors throughout the State shall proceed to seize and sell after ten days' notice property of the delinquent taxpayers, movable or immovable, sufficient to pay the original tax, all additional taxes herein levied, and costs.

Adopted in Convention at the city of New Orleans, this fourth day of January, Anno Domini eighteen hundred and sixty-eight.

THE GERMANIA LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY, established in 1860, and based upon the most approved principles of Life Insurance security, presents its claims for consideration, believing that its solid foundation already secured by the faithful and efficient management of its officers and Board of Directors will give it the preference above all other similar institutions.

It is purely Mutual, as the net profits are distributed among the parties insured, the interest of the capital stock being only five per cent according to its charter.

It assumed the system of cash payments at the commencement of its existence, and maintained it faithfully until now, and promises the same for the future, thereby securing to policy holders the full amount for which they are insured. The advantage of this system over the half cash and half note system is patent to every careful observer, but will be more fully illustrated by the following statement and table:

If a person of thirty years of age insures his life for the amount of $1000 in one of the credit companies, and pays a premium of $28 30 per year, with a note for half of the premium, then by means of this note and interests thereon the amount will become less and less in the following proportions:

|---|---|
| After 10 years the $1000 will amount to | $887 44 |
| After 15 years the $1000 will amount to | 795 28 |
| After 20 years the $1000 will amount to | 666 02 |
| After 25 years the $1000 will amount to | 484 73 |
| After 30 years the $1000 will amount to | 220 47 |
| After 33 years the $1000 will amount to | 32 53 |
| After 34 years the $1000 will amount to | Nothing. |

So that after a lapse of 34 years the whole amount will be eaten up, notwithstanding the parties insured paid their money in good faith.

The large dividend of 40 per cent declared last January is evidence of the care and success with which the Managers have conducted the enlarged and rapidly increasing interests of the Company, and vouches for its future brilliant and permanent prosperity.

Parties contemplating an assurance on their lives will do well to examine the status of this Company, every facility for which will be given by the

WHEN THE DOVES SOB.

BY LU BILLINGS SPALDING.

When the doves sob to the stillness,
Deep in the forest dim,
And the morning sun is shining
Into the mist so thin,
I fold my tangled tresses
And sit me down and muse,
And list to the brown wrens singing
Out in the early dews.

When the doves sob to the stillness,
In the pearly glow of night,
And the grain-ricks rustle softly
Under the white moonlight;
And the leaves are telling legends,
And the winds in the jasmin flowers
Are full of a musky softness
Wafted from dewy bowers.

When the doves sob to the stillness,
Sweet dreams will sadly come
Of a hand that wove the lilies
Under the summer sun;
When the stars stream into the moorland bells,
And die in their hearts of snow,
And the mist-buds burst their silver shells,
And the fair-faced lilies flow.

When the doves sob to the stillness,
I long with a hungry soul
For a face beneath the daisies,
And a hand that's gone to mold;
When the yellow wand of morning
Puts back the weary stars,
And the mist flees to the mountains
In their thin and silvery cars.

(For the New Orleans Advocate.)

THE NAMELESS GRAVES.*

Place the fairest flowers on each unknown grave,
'Tis the hallowed spot of a soldier's last sleep;
His life for his country he gallantly gave,
Yes, the flag that we honor from insult to save;

Though unknown here he rests, yet friends, loving and true,
Flow freely to-day; then these roses strew
For her, who never may welcome him home.

A father fond saw the son of his hope
Hasten promptly, at liberty's call, away,
In conflict with merciless traitors to cope;
Without this last staff, on the downward slope
Of life he now stands, and grieves to-day.

A sister, perchance, for the patriot's brow
A laurel wreath had in fancy prepared;
But she greets not her noble brother now,
May not in these floral gifts have shared.

And is there another than all these more dear,
(Question not whether bride or betrothed she may be,)
Who gladly the treasures of love would bring here—
Scatter flowers for her who this grave ne'er may see.

And, living or dead, her heroes doth call;
Though the voices of freemen shall never proclaim
Their gratitude here by the heralds of fame;
The nameless we'll guard—they belong to us all.

Coral and the Coral Fishery.

The immense extent of coral formation found in various parts of the world is seldom fully realized by the many millions of people who only see small fragments of this substance fashioned into ornaments, and exposed either for sale or the gratification of vanity.

When we reflect that the great "Barrier Reef," one thousand miles long, on the north coast of Australia, and many other reefs nearly as great in extent in other places, are the growth of animal life, we might almost excuse the belief of the ancient Greek philosopher, that the whole world is either one animal or a mass of insects.

The growth of what is erroneously called "coral plant" assumes many forms. Sometimes they resemble a gigantic plant, with flowers and leaves. Often they grow like a large tree with leafless branches. Sometimes one stem spreads out into a broad flat surface in the shape of a fan. Whatever shape the growth of coral formations takes there is an astonishing regularity in maintaining an equilibrium, each branch being balanced by another opposite, and each stem or main body growing perpendicular to its plane.

Coral as we see it here is the bone or shell of an insect, from which the flesh of living substance has been removed. A living branch of coral when first taken from the sea has a rough, irregular surface covered with a slimy substance, and dotted with little spots of what appears to be red jelly. These spots are the coral insects. Examined minutely when growing in the sea the insect is seen in thousands, each having a room of its own which it never leaves.

In many kinds of the polypi or coral insects the head has a little parasol-shaped cover. The arms, which are furnished with eight claws, are long in comparison with the body, and are generally seen extended for the supposed purpose of gathering food; but what that food really is I am unable to say.

It is generally supposed that the coral insect is industrious; that it is a builder; and that by its labors, commenced at the bottom of the sea, the coral islands have been formed. This is only partly true. They live and multiply—that is all; and in doing this a family that starts at the bottom of the sea in time reaches the surface at low water. The structure they form is not elevated one inch above the sea level, for the insect can only live in the warm salt water.

The older the coral shells or bone the stronger is the color, and the more difficult it is to procure. The money value of coral depends wholly on its scarcity, or the difficulty of obtaining it, although as far as use or ornament is concerned one kind is worth in reality as much as another.

At Honolulu and other places on the Pacific islands, I have seen houses built of coral, which was as common as granite or sandstone here, and was worth no more. If the many-headed public who suffer the sorrows of following fashion, could be made to believe that this common coral was seldom found, and was procured with great danger and difficulty from a depth of five hundred feet under water, it would immediately find some heretofore hidden beauty in that particular kind of coral which would become a valuable article of commerce. Those who are enslaved by fashion are very sharp in learning from others what is common and what is rare; and without the slightest regard to the use of an article the merchants who live principally by the vanity of others, regulate the prices.

To witness the forms of coral structures one would think that the insects must have some means of communicating with each other at a distance, although they can not leave their shells. Naturalists may be able to account for some of their peculiarities, but to me there is a mystery in the way they manage to construct formations of coral rock on mathematical principles. When growing in the shape of a tree what teaches the insect to withhold extending it farther in one direction than another? When one tribe of insects commence a structure in the bottom of the Pacific, what enables them to extend in two directions in a perfect circle until the two ends meet, forming a ring from half a mile to ten miles in diameter? What tells these insects, working in opposite directions, as generations after generations are moving farther from each other, that the circle they are building shall be a large one or a small one? These things to an observing sailor, unacquainted with the theories of the learned, are always a mystery.

Among the South Sea Islands there is a little trade for coral; yet not much is done in the way of fishing for it in the manner I have seen followed in other places. Most of the coral gathered there, of a quality valuable in the market, is obtained in small quantities from the shores of islands surrounded by a coral reef. Fragments of the reef become detached from the main body, and in violent agitation of the sea by storms, pieces of the right kind are thrown within the grasp of man.

The only opportunity I have met for seeing the coral fishery conducted in what may be called an intelligent manner, was off the coast of Africa, where for a few days I was near some natives of Algiers, who were fishing for coral-line plants in the same manner pursued in the Strait of Messina. The coral fishery I witnessed was carried on from three feluccas anchored in about seventy fathoms of water. A felucca is the largest and fastest boat used. It has three masts with lateen sails, and a jib on a short bowsprit. It is also furnished with long strong oars. During the time I remained near those engaged in the fishery, all three were visited, and I became familiar with the mode of gathering coral; but, being unable to converse with the men, I could learn nothing about the trade.

Two strong poles, about twenty feet long, are firmly fastened together at the middle, and at right angles to each other. On the under side of the poles is a net made of strong cord and fastened to the extremities of the poles. A heavy stone, for the purpose of sinking the poles, is fastened where they cross each other, and a strong line is also tied at the crossing. One end of the line is held aboard the felucca, and the net is launched over where the coral branches are supposed to be growing beneath. The net sinks slowly to the bottom, and should it fall over the spot where coral is growing, some of the branches generally become entangled in its meshes, and are broken off and hauled up.

When the net and poles become firmly entangled below with the branches of coral, much force has to be used in freeing them, and often the end of the line has to be fastened to the windlass, and a few turns given to bring the net from the bottom. Only small portions of any large mass brought up on such occasions are of any value. Sometimes the net becomes so firmly fastened below that it is torn in pieces in extricating it. It not unfrequently happens that the line by which the net is drawn up breaks, although to avoid this it is always made of larger and stronger material than the net. Often the net is pulled to the surface and not the smallest fragment of coral is found attached to it. On one occasion I saw, as the net was brought near the surface, a large branch of bright red coral, which was hailed by the Algerine fishermen with shouts of delight. The instant the poles struck the felucca the branch, which was only hanging by what is best described as a twig, broke away and was lost. There was a sudden transformarion of Algerine features from expressions of joy to those of anger and disappointment.

Notwithstanding these little misfortunes the coral fishers are engaged in a profitable business, and make during the season, which lasts from the middle of April to July, enough to keep them with a little economy the remainder of the year. Should they be successful at every cast of the net the coral, such as they procure, would become too common to please those affected with an insane desire for anything that requires time and toil in procuring.

The price of rough coral varies according to its quality and color. The whims of changing taste, or want of taste, and the quantity in the market, have much to do with its value. I have seen it sold for about two shillings per pound, and have seen some sold for more than fifteen shillings. The great market for all the cheaper kind of coral sold is Africa, where it is an important article of commerce, finding its way far into the interior of the country, and is eagerly purchased by the natives for ornaments.—Leisure Hours.

Diamonds.

The works of God are infinite in their variety, and are wonderful exhibitions of skill, wisdom, and power. The diamond has long been celebrated as one of the most beautiful and valuable of all the precious stones. Its name expresses one of its marked peculiarities. It comes from the same Greek word as adamant, meaning something untamable, hard. The name, then, in its origin denotes its hardness or indestructibility. There is no other mineral substance which it will not scratch. Besides this it is the most brilliant stone known; especially is this true of diamonds of the first water. The brilliancy and durability of the diamond, together with its scarcity, make it valuable as an article of ornament. Diamonds are not all of the same color, as might at first be supposed. Those of the first water are perfectly clear and colorless, just like a drop of the purest dew that ever hung upon the tip of some young leaf. Others are a delicate rose color; others of a beautiful green tint; still others are yellowish, or brown or bluish, and some are a clear black.

Diamonds were first known in Asia, and indeed it was only in the first part of the last century that they have been discovered in any other part of the world. Formerly they were mostly found in Bengal, Borneo, and Golconda, but they have since been found in Virginia, North Carolina, and Brazil in great quantities, and in Siberia. It is said that a slave in Brazil, working in the bed of a stream, seeking for diamonds, struck a mass of silicious matter held together by the oxide of iron, and breaking it open found a collection of diamonds worth a million and a half of dollars. Similar good fortune is rare. It is usually a severe and toilsome process to secure these gems. They are usually found in connection with deposits of gold.

In Golconda they are found in black, boggy earth by the natives, who discover them in the mud with their feet. In Brazil they are found in the sand and gravel taken from the beds of small rivers and streams in the dry season. The water is diverted from its natural course, when the material in which the diamonds are usually found is removed to sheds prepared for the purpose, where it is carefully washed and examined.

There are a few diamonds, which by their size or history or both, are famous world-wide. All have heard of the Koh-i-nore, or mountain of light. It now belongs to the Queen of England, who received it the third of July, 1850, from the East India Company, who had acquired it by treaty the year before. Its history dates as far back as the Christian Era, and it has been the cherished gem of many powerful dynasties. A tradition is connected with it that the dynasty from whose possession it passes is doomed to destruction. Then there are still others which take rank with the Koh-i-nore. There is the Orloff diamond, worth at least $500,000, once the eye of an idol at Pondicherry, and stolen from the temple by a Frenchman and brought to Europe. The King of Portugal has one of fabulous proportions, weighing 1680 grains, and if it is as good as estimated it is worth $28,000,000.

But it is well known that diamonds have other uses than merely as ornaments. Every one is familiar with the manner in which glaziers cut the hard and brittle window glass. A little diamond, firmly set in its socket, and lightly drawn across the surface of the glass, almost instantly does the work which otherwise would be nearly if not quite impossible to accomplish. Diamonds pulverized to an almost impalpable powder in a hardened steel mortar produce a material for grinding and polishing other precious stones unequaled in excellence. Again, the fine splinters of broken diamonds are fashioned into little drills, which alone can penetrate rubies and other stones which are employed in the best watches as bearings to diminish the friction of the running parts.

The most wonderful thing about diamonds, after all, seems to be the fact that they are composed of precisely the same substance as common charcoal. By what process pure carbon has been transformed into the brilliant diamond is one of the secrets of the great laboratory of nature. It is another display of the power and wisdom of Almighty God. Perhaps it has been produced from vegetable substance by the application of great pressure and heat; perhaps it is only a specimen of what under certain circumstances all our vast deposits of mineral coal might have been; perhaps it is the resultant of an unknown crystallization of carbon in a gaseous state.

Most of those who read this brief sketch will never own one of these beautiful gems. They are for the wealthy, and for kings and princes; they are the baubles of this fleeting world; but however poor, it is the privilege of every one to aspire to a crown decked with many jewels, which shall shine as the stars, or as the sun in the heavens, forever and forever. Toiling here, if need be, as the slave in the mine, the hour will come when, called to our reward, the King of kings will place upon our radiant brows a crown that fadeth not away.—Zion's Herald.

The Methodist Episcopal Church in Louisiana.

BY REV. E. H. WARING.

As preliminary to a sketch of the original Mississippi Conference that included Mississippi and Louisiana, and having already reviewed the origin of Methodism in the former State, we will now trace its beginnings in the latter State. The minutes of 1807 contain the first name of a Louisiana mission, "Appalousas, Elisha W. Bowman." This new and immense field was in the Mississippi district, Learner Blackman, presiding elder. Bowman, according to Stevens, had been sent out by Bishop Asbury on a tour of exploration the year before, and had made his way to New Orleans and Opelousas. Bowman has left an interesting letter describing his operations, the substance of which isquoted by Stevens. At New Orleans he wholly failed to reach the people. Every door was closed against him, and all that he succeeded in accomplishing was to preach to a few drunken sailors and Frenchmen in the open street. "The Lord's day," he says, "is the general rant of the city. Public balls are held, merchandise of every kind is carried on, public sales, wagons running, and drums beating; thus is the Sabbath spent." To add to his embarrassment he found himself without resources. On the seventeenth day of December he "shook off the dust from his feet against this ungodly city of New Orleans, and resolved to try the watery waste and pathless desert." With incredible difficulty he made his way toward a settlement of American people of which he had heard, about two hundred miles to the west and northwest of the city. He landed a little South of the mouth of the Bayou Teche. Finally he reached the Opelousas country and began the work of his mission. The people he found in a state of almost barbaric ignorance. They knew little more of the nature of salvation than untaught Indians. The vices of drinking, gambling, and Sabbath breaking prevailed almost universally. The natural impediments to travel were great. "Every day that I travel," wrote the persevering missionary, "I have to swim through creeks or swamps, and I am wet from head to feet, and some days from morning till night I am dripping with water. I tie all my 'plunder' fast on my horse, and take him by the bridle, and swim sometimes a hundred yards, and sometimes farther. * * * But this I can say, while my body is wet with water my soul is filled with heavenly fire." At the conference of 1806 he returned 17 white members. This year he was assisted by another hero, Thomas Lasley, and from Ouachita and Opelousas mission they returned forty members. The same year, 1807, Blackman and Bowman were relieved from their frontier labor, Jacob Young taking the Mississippi district, and James Axley and Anthony Houston respectively the Opelousas and Ouachita circuits. Some change seems to have been made in the appointments, as Young represents Axley as having charge of the Catahoula and Ouachita circuits. The same year this eccentric but zealous and useful man built with his own hands the first Methodist church in Louisiana. It was named Axley chapel, was built of pine logs, and covered with shingles. The first day it was opened eighteen joined the Church. The location of this primitive edifice is not given. That year the membership was reported at only thirty. In 1808 John McClure succeeded to the district, and Benjamin Edge and Isaac McKowen were assigned to the Opelousas and Ouachita circuits. The membership at the close of their term remained the same. In 1809 the district remained unchanged, but John Henninger took charge of the Opelousas and Hezekiah Shaw of the Ouachita circuit. The returns were from Opelousas and Ouachita 30; from Orleans territory 43 members. In 1810 the district fell to Miles Harper, Opelousas disappeared, and we have Amite, Rapides, Ouachita, and Attakapas, with Hezekiah Shaw, Thomas Nelson, John Jennings, and William Winans (the latter a name of note) as preachers. They reported the next year a total of 217 white and 26 colored members; the latter being the first of their class reported in Louisiana. In 1811 Samuel Dunwody was presiding elder, and of the circuits already established, William Winans, F. D. Wimberly, Thomas Griffin, and John S. Ford were the preachers. The same year New Orleans appears for the first time on the minutes, with Miles Harper as missionary. The total returns in 1812 were 369 whites and 36 colored, New Orleans returning none. That year the Mississippi District was divided, and for the first time we read

LOUISIANA DISTRICT.

The former retained Eastern, the latter included Western Louisiana. Of the former Samuel Sellus, of the latter Miles Harper was presiding elder. Harper was also in charge of Ouachita circuit, for in the Southwest, in those days, from the necessities of the case, presiding elders were often assigned also to circuit work. The preachers were: Amite, Elisha Lott; New Orleans, Lewis Hobbs; Rapides, Thomas Griffin; Attakapas, John S. Ford. By the division of the Western Conference the work in Louisiana fell, in 1812, to the Tennessee Conference, to which body were reported in 1813 the same members as the previous year. In 1813 the appointments do not appear, owing to the war then raging, but the work went on, and we have the returns of 1814, showing a total of 488 white members and 76 colored. The Church was not only unconsumed but grew in the midst of the fire. The latter year Thomas Griffin succeeded Harper on the Louisiana district, and New Orleans disappears from the list of appointments. From Stevens we learn, however, that Wm. Winans labored there in 1813 and 1814. The latter year Richmond Nolley, one of the most devoted pioneers that ever did the work of a missionary, was assigned to the Attakapas circuit, where he won wonderful success. In 1815 the members were 488 whites and eighty-five colored. That year the Louisiana District was reunited with the Mississippi District, Samuel Sellers presiding elder. A new set of names appeared at that time on the list of appointments, viz: Amite, Elijah Gentry; Rapides, Thomas Owens; Attakapas, Peter James; Ouachita stands unsupplied. One of the laborers of the previous year had fallen. Richmond Nolley went to the Opelousas and Attakapas circuit in 1814. He endured a year of persecution and trial, and appeared at the conference of 1815 "an attenuated, worn-out man." Nevertheless he was returned, and accompanied by Thomas Griffin he started for his work. Finally they separated. In crossing a swollen stream his horse, after bearing its rider to the further shore, swam back to the side of the stream from whence they started. The missionary, leaving his horse with an Indian who was assisting him, started on foot for the nearest house, distant about two miles. He proceeded a mile and then fell down exhausted. In the lone forest he breathed out his soul to God. When found he was lying on the wet leaves, his left hand upon his breast, and the other lying by his side. His eyes were closed, and the gentle spirit had left a smile upon the pallid cheek. He was found next day, and borne to the nearest house. On Sabbath he was buried "in Catahoula parish, near the road leading from Alexandria to Harrisonburg, about twenty miles from the latter place." Thus fell this martyr hero.

The next year, 1816, the membership was reported at 1531 whites and 110 colored.

Thus we have reviewed the history of Methodism in Louisiana up to the organization of the Mississippi Conference. But these meagre notes imply a filling up of toil, privation, exposure, and endurance that would impart to the history more than the interest of romance. Only the indomitable faith, the unconquerable zeal, and the self-sacrificing devotion and love of these early heroes could have sustained them in their work.

Louisiana—General Bussey.

The new Constitution of Louisiana having been ratified by the people, and a Legislature with a Republican majority in both branches having been chosen, two Republican United States Senators will be elected on the assembling of the Legislature in joint convention a few weeks hence. We learn that the indications are that General Cyrus Bussey, of New Orleans, formerly a resident of Davis county, Iowa, will be chosen as one of these Senators. We hope this information may prove well founded. General Bussey is comparatively a young man, but he has the requisite qualifications for an efficient law-maker, even in the upper branch of Congress. We are familiar with his personal history, and can most heartily commend him to the Republican Legislators of Louisiana. He was Ohio born and Indiana bred. His father was a Methodist preacher in frontier regions of the West, and the boyhood of the son was therefore accompanied by indigence and privation. At the age of thirteen years he became a merchant's clerk, and at the age of sixteen began mercantile business under his own name and on his own account! Thirteen years ago he became a resident of Bloomfield, Davis county, in this State, and was prosecuting with great success his occupation as a merchant when he was elected by the Democratic party, of which he was a member, to the State Senate. He was a zealous partisan, was a delegate to the Charleston and Baltimore Conventions of 1860, but when the rebellion broke out in 1861 he ignored the existence and name of Democracy, was an active Union leader against the rebels of Northeastern Missouri, enlisted, organized, and was placed at the head of the Third Iowa Cavalry, bore an honorable part in the active campaigns of General Curtis, discharged the duties of commandant of the district of Eastern Arkansas, succeeded General Washburn in command of the Second Cavalry Division of the Army of the Tennessee, was chief of cavalry under Grant at Vicksburg, Mississippi, and early in 1864 was commissioned Brigadier General for special gallantry in the service of the trans-Mississippi army. During the last winter of the war he was assigned to the command of a district embracing Western Arkansas and the Indian Territory and the Third Division of the Third Arms Corps. The succeeding spring he was commissioned Major General by brevet, and remained in command of his District until about six months after the actual close of the war. After his retirement from the army he removed to New Orleans, re-engaged most successfully in mercantile business, and became an active, influential laborer in the great work of reconstruction. He was one of the delegates from Louisiana in the recent National Convention, and if Congress will place that State in its appropriate place in the Electoral College, he will do his share in helping to roll up the first majority ever cast in Louisiana for a Republican Presidential ticket. He is a clear, logical thinker, a fluent, effective speaker, a partisan whose patriotism has been tried by fire, and if he should be chosen as one of the new Senators from the State of his adoption, his constituency would never have occasion to regret their choice.—Des Moines Register.

Attention to the Feet.

It is utterly impossible to get well or keep well unless the feet are kept dry and warm all the time. If they are for the most part cold there is cough or sore throat or hoarseness or sick headache or some other annoyance.

If cold and dry the feet should be soaked in hot water for ten minutes every night, and then wiped and dried. Rub into them well ten or fifteen drops of sweet oil; do this patiently with the hands, rubbing the oil into the soles of the feet particularly.

On getting up in the morning dip both feet at once into water as cold as the air of the room, half-ankle deep, for a minute in summer; half a minute or less in winter, rubbing one foot with the other; then wipe dry, and if convenient hold them to the fire, rubbing them with the hand until perfectly dry and warm in every part of them.

If the feet are damp and cold, attend only to the morning washings, but always at night remove the stockings, and hold the feet to the fire, rubbing them with the hands for fifteen minutes, and get immediately into bed.

Under any circumstances, as often as the feet are cold enough to attract attention, draw off the stockings and hold them to the fire; if the feet are much inclined to dampness put on a pair of dry stockings, leaving the damp ones before the fire to be ready for another change.

Some persons' feet are more comfortable even in winter in cotton, others in woolen stockings. Each must be guided by his own feelings. Sometimes two pairs of thin stockings keep the feet warmer than one pair which is thicker than both. The thin pair may be of the same or different materials, and that which is best next the foot should be determined by the feelings of the person.

Sometimes the feet are rendered more comfortable by basting half an inch thickness of curled hair on a piece of thick cloth, slipping this into the stocking with the hair next the skin, to be removed at night and placed before the fire to be perfectly dried by morning.

Persons who walk a great deal during the day should, on coming home for the night, remove their shoes and stockings, hold their feet to the fire until perfectly dry, put on a dry pair, and wear slippers for the remainder of the evening.

Boots and gaiters keep the feet damp, unclean, and noisome, by preventing the escape of the insensible perspiration and odor which are constantly emanating from a healthy foot; hence the old-fashioned shoe is the best for health and for the strengthening of the ankle, by habituating it to support itself. A piece of brown or other paper wrapped around the foot over the stocking sometimes keeps the feet remarkably warm. "Cold feet" arise from the want of a vigorous circulation in them; this is often remedied by putting them in hot water in a wooden vessel, so as to cover the toes; in about ten minutes put both in cold water, the colder the better, of the same depth for half a minute, the object being to produce a shock calculated to draw the warm blood to the soles; this may be done on retiring and rising. Nothing should be considered a trouble which can have even a slight tendency to keep the feet warm, because there never can be recovery from disease or substantial good health without it.—Hall.

Touching Incident.

A speaker at a recent sabbath-school conference related an incident of a little girl seven years of age, who, having been taken sick, was carried to the hospital to die.

"The last night," said the speaker, "nothing was heard to break the silence but the ticking of the great clock in the hall as the pendulum swung backward and forward. Then it would strike the hours—eleven, twelve, one o'clock—when there came from the couch of the little sufferer a voice of sweet melody. It was one verse of a Sunday-school hymn:

Jesus! the name to sinners dear,
The name to sinners given;
It scatters all their guilty fear,
It turns their hell to heaven.

Then all was silent again, and nothing was heard but the ticking of the great clock in the hall, until she broke out after awhile in another verse:

Happy, if with my latest breath
I may but gasp his name;
Preach them to all, and cry in death,
Behold! behold the lamb!

The nurse hastened to the bedside of the little sufferer, but she was too late. The angels had been there before her, and carried that little sabbath school girl from beholding the Lamb on earth to his bosom in the sanctuary.

How to Remove the Skin from Peaches.

As the time for preserving and canning peaches has come, many a housewife will doubtless be glad to know how to remove the skin from this delicious fruit with as little trouble and waste as possible. The following method from an exchange deserves trial:

Make a lye as strong as possible of wood ashes and soft water. Fill a kettle with the lye, and, when boiling rapidly, drop in twelve or eighteen peaches and take out again almost immediately, and immerse them in a pail of cold water. Take one in your hand and you will perceive that the rind will slip off entirely, leaving a round, beautiful yellow ball; throw it immediately into another pail of pure water and so proceed till all are done. This process will not injure the flavor of the finest peach, and once tried the old-fashioned way of peeling with a knife will not be again adopted. If the lye is not strong enough put into the kettle two dippersful of clean wood ashes. This is an excellent way to rid small onions of their jackets preparatory to pickling them. Try it.

A Hint for the Pulpit.

John Bright, who, when he speaks usually writes out on a card three or four of the principal branches of his subjects, and walks about the room for a little while fitting them to their proper order, says: "There is one thing I always prepare, and that is the end of my speech. Before I get up to speak I always know how I am going to leave off, and that is half the art. Many a decent speaker has spoken well for a time, but can not while speaking hit upon a few good sentences with which to stop, and at last makes a mess of it, and leaves an unfavorable impression."

ADVICE TO GIRLS.—The New York Evening Gazette tells young ladies what to beware of if they would have a fresh, healthy, and youthful appearance: Late hours, large crinoline, tight corsets, confectionery, hot bread, cold draughts, pastry, decollete dress, modern novels, furnace registers, easy carriages, late suppers, thin shoes, fear of knowledge, nibbling between meals, ill-temper, haste to marry, dread of growing old.

To General Buchanan.

SIR: While Union men are being assassinated by hundreds in your district you refer them to the civil law for protection. The first chance you get you ignore the civil law entirely to displace a Union Mayor, and "install" in his position a rebel, with a man for his private secretary who was the chief instigator of the massacre of the thirtieth July. How do you like your record?

The thugs and assassins who crowded the streets in front of the City Hall were rebel soldiers and members of the Ku-Klux Klan. They shouted hurrah for General Buchanan, and doubtless added the sainted name of Jeff Davis.

How do you like the co-partnership?

Postage on the Advocate.

Inquiries come to us from subscribers wishing to know the regular rate of postage on a weekly paper. Some of these inform us what the postmasters are charging them, and we find it to be three or four times the lawful rate. We state for their information that the postage is only twenty cents a year, or five cents a quarter, payable in advance, and no postmaster has a right to charge more than this.

The amation of the Board of Registration.

We publish this important paper, and hope our friends will send the paper containing it to all parts of the State. There is already a quorum of the General Assembly present in the city. It is important that we have every Republican member present. Let no man fail in the present crisis to discharge the great responsibilities intrusted to him by his constituents.

From Baton Rouge, Rev. James Hayward sends us a statement in regard to his charge for the past quarter which is as follows: Received in full connection 31, on probation 13; adults baptized 4; infants 6; marriages 12. He reports a day school of 120 scholars, and a sabbath school of 80; bible class 4; teachers 6.

The quarterly meeting exercises were held on the 15th and 16th of May, Brother Emperer Williams of this city attending the same. The occasion was one of great interest.

APPLETON'S RAILWAY GUIDE for June is just received. It is the great convenience of the traveling public, containing a large map of the United States, small maps of each of the railroads in the United States and Canadas, an alphabetical list of all railroad stations, names of general ticket agents, etc., besides a considerable amount of interesting reading matter. For sale by news agents.

THE SKIN.—Burnett's Kalliston is prepared expressly to remove all unpleasant conditions of the skin, and to beautify it. New York office, No. 592 Broadway.

DENTISTRY.—We take great pleasure in recommending all who wish an excellent job of dentistry done to Dr. B. F. Wright, 153 Customhouse street, between Dauphine and Burgundy streets. Dr. Wright expects to start North soon to spend the summer, and up to the time of his departure will attend to the work of all who call on him at ONE-HALF of his heretofore moderate rates, if paid in greenbacks. As he is a workman of the best order, we do not see why his rooms should not be crowded during the time he remains in the city, even though it is hard times.

General Buchanan's Usurpation.

General Buchanan's arrest of Mr. Packard, Chairman of the Board of Registration, is not the most high-handed act of oppression which he has committed. It is the last of a series so far, and being the one which most fully throws off all disguise and discloses the temper and designs of the man, it has startled the community the most.

We invite attention to the record he has made in his official conduct, as Commanding General of this district. We do not go back to his record in the war, although it might throw a little more light upon his present course to do so.

He chose as his civil advisers here men who are opposed to the Congressional policy of reconstruction.

All his important appointments to offices have been from the same class of men, and many of them have been men who were in the rebel armies, and who are most bitterly endeavoring to defeat reconstruction.

He placed the late election in the hands chiefly of rebels and Democrats who were opposed to reconstruction.

By these, his agents, he intimidated, abused, and prevented from registering hundreds of loyal voters.

By the same agents he wrongfully and in the most brutal manner arrested and imprisoned hundreds of legal voters on the days of election, and retained them in imprisonment until after the election. These men were not allowed to vote. A large majority of them were Republicans.

By the same agents he illegally and in gross violation of the rights of citizens, by force and fraud, took from hundreds of legal voters on the days of election their certificates of registration. This was robbery.

He has flagrantly violated the act of Congress passed March 23, 1867, which provides among other things "that the persons appointed to superintend said election, and to make return of the votes given thereat, shall count and make return of the votes given," etc., and "he (the Commanding General) shall open the same (the returns), ascertain the persons elected as delegates according to the returns of the officers who conducted said election, and make proclamation thereof," and the act of Congress passed March 12, 1868, which extends the provisions of the previous act in regard to elections to the election of such officers as are "provided for by the said constitution," in this, that he has not made proclamation of the persons elected at the last election "according to the returns of the officers who conducted said election," but he has in various instances proclaimed those to be elected who were not elected "according to the returns" of such officers.

He has also violated the laws of Congress in assuming powers not conferred upon him by law; in this, that he has assumed to revise and recount the returns made to him by the commissioners of election, and to proclaim the election according to his own arbitrary will and not according to the returns of his sworn officers appointed in compliance with the law; and he has assumed to prohibit the General Assembly elected under the constitution, and in the manner prescribed by Congress, by the people of the State, from meeting until he shall give them authority; and in this that contrary to the provisions of section four of the act of Congress, approved July 19, 1867, he failed to remove from office a list of from two to three hundred ruffians, cut-throats, thugs, and assassins who were appointed as deputy sheriffs on the days of election, and were using their position to brow-beat, bully, and terrify voters and drive them from the polls, and this, although he, General Buchanan, was informed of the character of these men, and of their lawless conduct. Now as a fitting climax to this career of usurpation, violation of law, and neglect of his duties, he has arrested Mr. S. B. Packard, the Chairman of the Board of Registration, for the performance of the very duty for which he had been appointed.

The Constitutional Convention, acting under authority of the same law by virtue of which the commanding general exercises his powers, and being as independent of him as he was of it, and having sole and exclusive jurisdiction over the particular duty prescribed to it, to wit: "To establish a constitution and civil government for this State loyal to the Union," thought fit, in the exercise of that discretion confided to it by the supreme law of the land, to appoint a committee of registration and define their duties, among which duties were the following: "To make rules, regulations, and orders concerning the making of returns and the announcement of the results of the elections." And their authority was extended to all matters of execution or detail in the carrying out of the schedule and ordinances of the convention or the provisions of the constitution in the interim between the submission of the constitution to a vote and the inauguration of the State government elected under it. It was also extended to cases of the non-action or omission of the Commanding General to comply with the provisions of the constitution.

Just such a case arose. The constitution provided that the Legislature should assemble on the third Monday after the promulgation of the result of the election. The General forbids them to convene. The Board of Registration created for this very purpose of carrying out the provisions of the constitution in case of the General's refusal to execute them, does its duty and notifies all civil officers elected to qualify and the members of the General Assembly to convene on the day prescribed by that instrument. For this discharge of a plain duty, the duty for which he was appointed by an authority equal to that of General Buchanan, the General arrests Mr. Packard.

In this General Buchanan has committed a wrong which renders him liable to charges and arrest, and which should cause him to be cashiered.

No single provision of the laws gives him any authority to decide when or how the new government shall go into operation. General Buchanan is a subordinate representative of the United States. The members of the Board of Registration, of the General Assembly, and of the new government are also officers of the United States as well as of the State, so long as they are provisional, and the question whether their meeting is legal and their acts binding, is a question for Congress alone. The questions of whether the Convention transcended its powers, or whether the new government is provisional, or whether the Board has authority to convene the Legislature, are questions just as far beyond the province of General Buchanan to decide as they appear to be beyond his depth. He has simply nothing whatever to do with the officers of the new government except to sustain them so far as the law makes it his duty to do so. Apart from this he has no authority to control or interfere with them in the least in the discharge of what they may regard as their duty.

We respectfully suggest to him a perusal of one of the leading cases in the English reports in relation to the responsibility of military men for a transgression of their powers in dealing with persons in civil life.

In the case we refer to each member of the military commission and the officer approving and executing its finding, also, we believe, were held individually responsible in heavy damages.

It is announced in one of the rebel papers, which, by the way, seem to be favored with direct communications from headquarters, that the General assured Mr. Packard that he would have placed him in close confinement if he did not fear the excitement it might produce.

General Buchanan dares not place Mr. Packard in close confinement. Moreover, the General has now an opportunity to arrest the rest of the Board. He will also have an opportunity to arrest all the Republican members of the General Assembly, who will undoubtedly obey the constitution and disobey his illegal order. To be consistent he will also have to suppress all the loyal papers, arrest their editors, and arrest all the ablest and most eminent lawyers and statesmen of the loyal party in the city, for they have all, without exception, counseled, aided, and abetted in this action which he has chosen to arbitrarily forbid.

In conclusion, we ask General Buchanan one question: Did you, sir, advise or counsel with one loyal man as to the step you have taken, or were your advisers not former rebels, or, if you like the term better, "Confederates?"

The Hon. S. B. Packard.

This patriot and true man has the good wishes and praise of every loyal man in this community. He has performed his duty, his sworn duty, nobly, and in the face of the bayonets which were sent here to aid instead of to persecute him. The other members of the Board of Registration also deserves well of the State for the manly and fearless manner in which they have indorsed their chairman and carried out the will of the people who placed them in their position. It was because it was well known that not all United States officers had been loyal to the government whose bread they ate during its peril, and that not all those who sympathized with treason had left or been stricken from its rolls, that the late Convention did not choose to risk the execution of its orders solely in the hands of such of those officers as Andrew Johnson might send here. They feared that possibly some man might be found among them and placed over us who might be opposed to the law he was sent to execute, who might seek to defeat it, who might counsel with rebels, and wield his great powers to oppress and destroy the very men and the very cause he was sent here to protect.

They therefore created this Board expressly to carry out such provisions of the constitution as such a possible general might refuse to execute. The Board are discharging their duty. Let General Buchanan take care that he does not do more than his duty.

Union Bayonets Eject the Union Mayor.

Mayor Heath was on Wednesday forcibly ejected from his office to give place to a bitter rebel—Conway—who, if he has qualified according to law, has committed perjury.

The first act of this enemy of his country upon being left in possession of the Mayor's parlor, was to appoint the ex-secretary of Mayor Monroe, one John Overall, his private secretary.

This Overall is a rebel malignant of the blackest dye. On the infamous thirtieth of July he it was who inspired Monroe with his bloodthirsty plans; he instigated many of the orders which led to that foul massacre; he was seen at the close of that bloody day's work chuckling and making exultant signs over the result of the horrible plot. A worthy commencement this, truly, of the new rebel Mayor's administration.

A glorious work this for the Union bayonets under the command of Brevet Major General Buchanan. General Buchanan restores to power the murderer of the Union martyrs of July 30. We make General Buchanan one prediction. He will live to see the day when the soldiers and officers under his command will brand the time of their service under him in the Fifth Military District as the most humiliating and disgraceful period of their lives.

That Rebel Yell.

We copy the following truthful description from the Republican, and add the significant comments of the Times on the same disgraceful occurrence.

It will make the blood tingle in the veins of all loyal men:

Wednesday, at three o'clock in the afternoon, when Mayor Heath was going down the City Hall steps after he had been forced out of his office by Captain De Russey, who called to his assistance an aid to the chief of police and several policemen, the rebel crowd of paroled prisoners of war congregated in front of the building yelled a shout of triumph at the ejection from office of a loyal mayor and the induction into office of one whose disloyalty has become a matter of record.

This rebel yell aroused the indignation of every loyal man who heard it, and its echoes will reach every hill-top and valley in the North and East and West, and arouse there the indignation of loyal men, whose voices will be heard in November next protesting against intrusting political power to unrepentant rebels.

Captain De Russey may have been a gallant soldier during the war. We do not know his record; but we do know that if at the moment he heard that rebel shout of triumph over a Union man he had torn off his shoulder-straps, released his citizen prisoner, and made haste to tender his resignation to General Buchanan rather than be engaged in the infamous work of aiding rebels, he would have added a lustre to his record that would be brilliant forever.

That rebel shout still echoes in the ears of the loyal men of this city, and thrills them with the most intense indignation. But these paroled prisoners of war were not content with one yell of triumph. They repeated it on the return of Mayor Heath from the office of the chief of police to the City Hall, when they added to the indignity by crying out, "Put him in the Black Maria! Put him in the Black Maria!" and other exclamations of the same nature.

Hear the Times:

Captain DeRussey then conducted his prisoner to the office of the Chief of Police. When the party reached the street the shout of execration was tremendous, and hundreds rushed to every available elevation for a view at the novel procession. So great was the pressure of the crowd that it required the services of perhaps twenty policemen to make a passage. The entrances to the police building were effectually guarded, and after a few minutes quiet was restored. Shortly afterward an impression prevailing that the Ex-Mayor was to be taken back to the City Hall through the Lafayette street door, a rush was made in that direction, the crowd crying loudly, "put him in the Black Maria, the d—n son of a b—h." Order was, however, thanks to the energy of the Chief, speedily restored. The crowd did not seem desirous of doing him any bodily injury, but were simply expressing their scorn and contempt for the man.

We would like next to hear from the La Crosse Democrat.

MAYOR HEATH.

Mayor Heath deported himself throughout the anomalous and somewhat exciting occurrences of Wednesday with marked dignity and propriety. His bearing commanded general respect. He consulted legal counsel in his resistance to military authority, and pursued the course recommended by his advisers.

His appointment having been made by General Sheridan, and formally approved by act of Congress, would seem to place him above molestation by General Buchanan unless something besides political reasons could be urged for his removal. And yet it would be quite difficult to assign any other cause for the haste of General Buchanan to bring to a close the Republican administration of this city.

If Mr. Conway is thrust into office as a military appointee, the act is unwarranted by the intent of the reconstruction acts; but if he is installed because of his supposed election to the office by the people, then General Buchanan has taken an unnecessary and an unauthorized duty upon himself, as the intention of the law is that the civil machinery shall work independently of military interference. The Commanding General of the Fifth District has nothing to do with the installation of municipal officers into positions created by the provisional civil government of the State. General Buchanan's active interference in the matter was therefore as gratuitous as it was bold, and ought to subject him to severe censure.

Mayor Heath, though ejected from the possession of his office by arbitrary military authority and force, claims to be the only legitimate Mayor of this city. A writ of quo warranto has already been issued by Judge Duplantier of the sixth district court, and served on Mr. Conway. The writ is made returnable on Monday. We shall then have a judicial settlement of the question, and as we hope a restoration to the mayoralty of Mr. Heath.—Republican.

Prayer.

BY M. ANNESLEY.

Multitudes have been devoutly thankful that we are commanded to pray, and not to faint. There is always hope in prayer, and we must pray with all manner of supplications—the breathing of the heart, the groaning of the spirit, the silent moving of the lips like Hannah in her trouble, or the earnest cry like David, for he speaks more of crying unto God in his necessities than any of the prophets. The Psalms are full of his cries. "I cried unto the Lord and he helped me." Cries, earnest cries, penetrate the heavens and bring the answer down.

And the blessed, compassionate Jesus, knowing the power he would return to heaven to wield there in the presentation of his own sacrificial offering for the pardon of sin, commands us to seek, knock, and agonize, giving us every encouragement in the answers he personally gave to those who pressed around him, or sent their messages to him.

Prayer is an evidence of dependence and humility, and no matter how the enemy may buffet us, we can not fail if we cleave to God in prayer in the name and merits of Jesus. And this importunity is not to settle upon ourselves and near kindred alone, but for all men—as the written prayer has it, "for all sorts and conditions of men." And as we know that departed saints or angels do not pray, we find our responsibility the greater to do that work which is only limited to time. Saints and angels praise, but no burden leads their buoyant spirits to supplication. They have no cause for it. All there is ready, happy obedience—not a tardy wing in all that glorious company. There are many of God's dear children who can do most in prayer, and they like to enter new fields of this kind of labor. The living soul is pleased when the Master says, "Here is another piece of work for thee." In looking over the mass of human beings in our great country, we find there is a very large class who are idolaters, worshiping images, the workmanship of men's hands; bowing down to stone, wood, and metal; and while we read the word of God, and how he denounces all idolatry, and makes it as an abomination before him, how can we withhold our cries and prayers from those who are in such blindness. They are precious souls who are in this delusion, and if we do not take care of them their evils will overgrow upon us and we shall suffer for our selfishness.

Idolatry ever has been and ever will be cruel, and it must of necessity be so; for pictures and images can not impart feeling, but hardness and unyielding power is its stronghold.

To gain our cause at the mercy-seat we must have special times for special cases. Then our faith is clear and distinct, and we take time to spread the matter before the Lord, as Hezekiah did.

One burden at a season alone before God gives us strength to bring others. But if we bring a great bundle of things we can not draw the divine attention to anything in particular, and we have not had power to lay anything down, and so carry away that which still weighs upon our spirits.

"Thou shalt have no other God before me."

TRANSIENT YOUNG MEN.—Girls, beware of transient young men; never suffer the addresses of a stranger; recollect that a steady farmer boy or mechanic is worth all the floating trash in the world. The allurements of dandy jack with a gold chain about his neck, a walking stick in his paw, some honest tailor's coat upon his back, and a brainless skull can never make up the loss of a father's house and a good mother's counsel, and the society of brothers and sisters; their affections last, while those of such a young man are lost in the wane of the honeymoon. 'Tis true.

NEW ORLEANS, June 5, 1868.

MR. EDITOR:

Please allow me a space in your paper for the insertion of a few remarks on intemperance and its remedy, which if they accomplish no good I hope will do no harm.

In retrospecting our past history and contrasting it with that of our present, we are led to ask what is going to become of Louisiana? The only answer that can be made is unless a change is wrought for the better it, as a State, will soon be numbered among the things that were. A glance at the state of affairs of the land, which should be the peaceful abode of millions, is sufficient to moisten with tears the eyes of the most hard hearted. One of the many prevailing evils, and in no wise the least, which tends to impoverish us, and will, if it has not already, bring upon us God's curse, is the inordinate desire for intoxicating drinks which we are sorry to say is predominant among our colored friends.

I propose now briefly to consider whether the use of intoxicating drinks is an evil, what are the chief causes of intemperance, and what remedies exist for the suppression thereof.

The highest medical authority asserts that the use of intoxicating liquors produces inflammation of the stomach and viscera, and extends the ravages of diseased action to the nerves and brain, involving ultimately the most remote parts of the body. At the same time they predispose the system to epidemics and render them more fatal where they attack those addicted to the vice.

The reports made of the causes of lunacy attest the fact that the same vice contributes largely to fill the hospital with persons whose minds have been deranged through the influence of intoxicating liquors.

The criminal calendar of our courts is but a record of the names of those who, having been demented by "the dark beverage of hell," have progressed from the smaller vices to the commission of enormous crimes that shocked the community by their atrocity.

All those who have read the confessions of great criminals who have expiated their offenses by death are aware that they attribute the sad result to the use of intoxicating liquors.

I can assert that it is my conviction that it is the cause of nine-tenths of the crime, vice, and poverty, and that without its use it will be impracticable to inaugurate another civil war. That the use of intoxicating beverages contributed largely to produce the late rebellion I can truthfully affirm.

My conviction is that intemperance embodies in itself many great evils that will impede progress in sound morality and virtue so long as it exists, and that by extirpation alone can it be prevented from accomplishing its sure work of destruction.

Among the causes that promote the desire and love for intoxicating liquors I mention that these appetites are sometimes inherited from ancestors who have indulged in their use; that they are sometimes engendered by the too free use of tobacco, opium, or morphine. Every stimulant, solid or fluid, that produces a great exhalation of the animal spirits, is followed in a few hours by a corresponding depression; and at such times almost any stimulant that will relieve that depression becomes, eventually, an habitual necessity. Those periods of depression rarely occur when all our dietetical habits are correct. But the chief cause of the evil of intemperance exists in our social habits, and the temptation presented to the young and unwary in the thousand saloons and doggeries existing everywhere, by sanction of law, whereby the pursuit is rendered comparatively respectable, and intemperance is rendered attractive. The appetite is thus often produced by accidental association, and when it has once become established all know that it is difficult to eradicate. How often a slight provocation will persuade the reclaimed intemperate to forget his pledges and return to the damning bowl. Many have relapsed from taking a social drink at a fashionable party, or a tonic administered with alcoholic basis. If knowledge would save the intemperate they would long since have all been saved.

The most eloquent lecturers and writers have presented the evil of intemperance in all its hideous deformity time and again to show who are the victims of that vice, and accomplished very little. If resolves, expressed with all the sanction of solemn vows, were kept, how many would now live honored members of society that are the slaves of intemperance. Man is too often but a bundle of habits, and the laws of the land should not hold forth a temptation that, if not resisted, leads to certain ruin.

Lastly, I propose to consider what remedies exist for the suppression of this monster of vices.

I admit it is well to enlighten public sentiment and show the detrimental influence of such fluids on mind, body, and estate, on private and public morals, and thus persuade the enlightened judgment to desist from the use of such vicious and destructive articles.

Physiology and hygiene should be taught in all our schools, and the young impressed with the results of the pervading evil to whose temptation they will too soon be subjected.

It is also of some advantage to organize and encourage temperance associations and accept the solemn pledges of its members to abstain from the use of intoxicating beverages, and for merchants and others to abstain from hiring clerks, bookkeepers, draymen, porters, pressmen, and others who resort to the grogshop or barroom to quench their thirst with rum, whisky, gin, punches, or other equally intoxicating fluids.

To a limited extent all these efforts have been productive of some benefit and deserve the commendation of the moral community, but, notwithstanding, the giant evil has steadily increased, recording its achievements on the court calendar and the tombstones of its victims.

There yet remains another remedy: to prohibit its manufacture and sale by law.

Many are too weak to stand alone, and are not capable of resisting the temptation which society and appetite present. Thousands of dens exist in every city and village, authorized by law to sell the destroying beverage to all who have the means to purchase. The law licenses and considers them a source of revenue.

The law punishes all crime and vice which are the necessary and legitimate result of using intoxicating liquors, yet hesitates to take any steps to suppress the crime from which they proceed.

The common law of the land declares everything to be a nuisance "which worketh hurt, inconvenience, or damage." The law, under that class of evils, has suppressed gambling houses, brothels, and manufactories that poison the air in the neighborhood. The greatest of all that class still survives and flourishes, because licensed by law. Oh! consistency thou art a jewel.

The Church utters its prayers sabbath after sabbath "to deliver us from evil and temptation," but has not dared to wage an exterminating war against the giant source of vice and crime. I know of but three ministers, Drs. Newman, Palmer, and Walker, who have boldly denounced from their desks the evils of intemperance.

We ask then to-day to whom shall the world look for salvation but to the reformers of the age, those who do not desire popularity, office nor power, but who are devoted to the amelioration and elevation of the race. The people must come to the rescue if we are to destroy the hydra-headed monster. The people are the law-makers and can destroy the evil. Some persons may assert you can not legislate so as to correct men's appetite. They say that was tried in Maine and proved a failure.

If one failure should determine a question, how little would be accomplished in any great or small matter. Many republics were organized, and existing but a brief period, expired before our great experiment commenced.

If those who resisted the encroachments of slavery had retired in despair after the first compromise made to the oligarchy of slaveholders, to-day, perhaps, the evil would have extended over the whole American republic.

To those who have great and worthy objects there should be NO SUCH WORD AS FAIL, and the conflict should pass as our best inheritance from sire to son.

When one's vices are in their effect confined to himself there must exist some plea that the sovereign right of the individual should be protected, and every one permitted to follow his own interests and pleasures; but surely that can not be seriously urged in behalf of a vice which persuades its victim to the perpetration of every crime that affects the lives and property of his fellow citizens, and may endanger the very life of the republic.

We certainly have the right to legislate for our own protection, and for the destruction of what we know to be the prominent cause of so much crime and evil in our midst. Let us, if defeated in one scheme, try another, and thus avoid the cause of failure in the past.

In view of the lights afforded by experience I would suggest that we petition for the passage of a law whereby the people of each city and village may, from time to time, vote and determine whether or not the making and selling of intoxicating beverages shall be longer permitted within their precincts.

That right should be accorded as often as a definite number of citizens filed a notice before the proper officer of the city, or village, or town.

In that way we will soon create great centres of Temperance, from which the destroying evil will be excluded and can demonstrate to the world the good effects resulting from its prohibition. All things, good or evil, radiate out from centres of action and diffuse their influence through the community.

It will thus become an isolated question and can not affect other issues or injure prospects of any political party. The people, the sole sovereigns of this great republic, can determine the question for themselves and suppress the vice by their avowed sentiments when the majority shall so determine. One man or one woman may agitate questions, but can not expect to accomplish much. Great reforms have been made successful by combined and persistent effort.

I suggest, as an aid to this end, great purpose, that we organize an association who shall enter into a solemn pledge to abstain from the manufacture, importation, sale, and use of intoxicating liquors, and also to prosecute the endeavor to insure the prohibition by law, commencing first in such localities as are ready to accept it, and ultimately extending the law to the State. Certainly no reform presented for consideration promises results more beneficial to humanity, and none can more earnestly demand the efforts of philanthropists.

Praying that God may open the eyes of our people, that they may see the error of intemperance, and that he would save our beloved country from inevitable ruin which must follow if the giant source of crime is not exterminated, I close,

Respectfully,

FREDERICK K. HYDE.

Men of genius are often dull and inert in society; as the blazing meteor when it descends to the earth is only a stone.

Brazil has been driven to some extremity by the Paraguayan war. At the headquarters of the army at Tayi $220 has been willingly paid for a ton of coal, and cannon balls are cheap at ten dollars each.

General Cyrus Bussey.

We copy from the Keokuk Gate City and Burlington Hawk Eye editorial notices of our distinguished and worthy fellow citizen General Bussey. While we are not authorized to speak for him, and do not know that he has consented to be placed in the attitude of a candidate for the elevated and responsible position named, we heartily indorse every syllable of the high encomiums bestowed upon him by the foremost representatives of the press of his former State.

His whole career from boyhood has been a remarkable examplification of what a career force of will, breadth of intellect, chivalric daring, and uncompromising integrity can enable a man to carve for himself without adventitious aid.

Starting in life as a poor and friendless lad, he achieved an independence and a fine and widely-spread reputation as an honorable and successful merchant at the early age of twenty-seven. He was sent to the Senate of Iowa, and when the war came raised and equipped at his own expense a regiment of cavalry and went out as its colonel to return a brevet major general, having been twice promoted for gallantry and meritorious services. His health had so failed that he was compelled to reject the most flattering offers and most brilliant career that opened before any young man in Iowa. By the advice of his physician he removed to this State, where he has established his business under the well-known firm of Bussey & Co.

Useful Hints.

Wood ashes and common salt wet with water will soak the cracks of a stove, and prevent the smoke from escaping.

Alum or vinegar is good to set colors of red, green, or yellow.

Save your suds for garden plants, or for garden yards when sandy.

Frozen potatoes make more starch than fresh ones; they also make nice cake.

A bit of glue dissolved in skim-milk and water will restore crape.

Ribbons of any kind should be washed in soft cold soap suds, and not rinsed.

If your flatirons are rough rub them with fine salt, and it will make them smooth.

Oat straw is the best for filling beds. It should be changed as often as once a year.

Scotch snuff put in a hole where crickets come out will destroy them.

A gallon of strong lye put in a barrel of hard water will make it as soft as rain water.

Half a cranberry on a corn will soon kill it.

General Bussey having spent a few days with his friends here leaves for New Orleans this morning. We notice in various papers that the general is prominently talked of for the United States Senate from Louisiana. We don't know whether or not he is a candidate for the place, but we hope that he is, and that he will be elected. And this hope is shared by all Iowans, for General Bussey is one of the most popular and highly esteemed of Iowa's sons and soldiers. To the regret of hosts of friends, he left a people that honored him, he quitted the State when his future, personally and politically, was bright with promise, to go into business in the South. There, while he has been a steadfast, earnest, working Republican, and has given good aid and sound counsel in the work of right reconstruction, he has been no mere politician, no office-seeker. He has done what became him as a patriot, a Republican, and a citizen, to make loyalty triumphant in his State; but further than that, he has only given attention to the demands of his business.

If the Republicans of Louisiana elect General Bussey, they will have chosen no mere politician, but an honest and able man, who is most esteemed where he is best known; who will be a true and safe representative, worthy of all their honors and all their confidence.—Keokuk Gazette.

DAMASCUS.—This is the oldest city in the world. Tyre and Sidon have crumbled on the shore; Balbec is in ruin; Palmyra lies buried in the sands of the desert; Nineveh and Babylon have disappeared from the shores of the Tigris and Euphrates. Damascus remains where it was in the days of Abraham—a centre of trade and travel, an island of verdure in a desert, "a predestined capital," with martial and sacred associations extending beyond thirty centuries. It was near Damascus that Saul of Tarsus saw the light from heaven above the brightness of the sun; the street which is called Straight, in which it is said "he prayeth," still runs through the city; the caravan comes and goes as it did one thousand years ago; there is still the shiek, the ass, and the waterwheel; the merchants of the Euphrates still occupy these "with the multitude of wares." The city which Mohammed surveyed but was afraid to enter, because it is given to man to have but one paradise, and for his part he was resolved not to have it in this world, it is to this day what it was of old.

The Boston steamships Ontario and Erie have been sold at auction for $750,000. It is rumored they were purchased for New York parties.

The World tries to show the only reason Grant defeated Lee was that he had too many men behind him. The same difficulty will occur next fall. Grant will defeat the rebel leader then because he has too many supporters.

General Buchanan's Revolution.

MAYOR HEATH AND MR. CONWAY.

ARBITRARY EJECTION OF MAYOR HEATH.

A Municipal Installation.

Wednesday at twelve o'clock, being the time designated by General Buchanan for the newly elected municipal officers to be installed in their respective positions, Mr. J. R. Conway presented himself at the office of Mayor Heath, accompanied by Mr. J. W. Overall, late Secretary of Mayor Monroe. He handed to Mayor Heath a printed copy of General Buchanan's order declaring the names of municipal officers elected, saying:

"Sir, I hold in my hand the official order of the Commander of the Fifth Military District announcing my election as chief magistrate of the city of New Orleans."

Mr. Heath replied:

"I know of no law authorizing the election in question, and I do not acknowledge the authority of General Buchanan to issue said order, or at least I repeat that I know of no law authorizing the election."

Mr. Conway replied:

"I have called in obedience to the order to assume the duties of the office, and if you do not acknowledge its authority, I shall therefore be under the necessity of reporting the same to the Commanding General."

Mr. Heath replied:

"I decline to give up the office."

Mr. Conway and Mr. Overall then proceeded to the headquarters of the fifth military district, an hour after which time an orderly arrived with a communication from General Buchanan, addressed to Mayor Heath, reading as follows:

SIR—The brevet major general commanding directs me to inform you that he desires to see you at these headquarters at your earliest convenience.

To this Mayor Heath made the following reply:

I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your note inviting an interview.

In reply I will state that I am now, at this moment, officially engaged, but will call on you at the earliest opportunity compatible with my official duties.

Very respectfully,
Your obedient servant,
E. HEATH, Mayor.

Considerable time elapsed, when some persons standing in front of the office of the chief of police saw an army officer walking down St. Charles street accompanied by or accompanying J. R. Conway and J. W. Overall. They turned down Girod street, and thence came down Carondelet and along Lafayette, entering the side door of the City Hall. In what seemed to be ten minutes after they were seen to turn into Girod street the trio entered the mayor's office, Captain De Russey, of the First United States infantry, presenting to Mayor Heath an order reading like this:

CAPTAIN DE RUSSEY—You are hereby directed to proceed to the Mayor's office with J. R. Conway and induct him into office.

To this Mayor Heath replied verbally:

I was duly appointed by military authority, and my appointment was confirmed by Congress. I know of no election by which Mr. Conway was elected Mayor, and I do not recognize any authority in General Buchanan to direct that Mr. Conway shall enter upon the duties of that office.

Captain De Russey then suggested as the crowd around the Mayor was quite large he should like to talk with him more privately. The spectators fell back, and then when Captain De Russey suggested that he should like to have him go out quietly, and did not want any publicity given to the proceedings Mayor Heath replied that he should not vacate the office voluntarily, and should not vacate at all unless he was compelled to by superior force.

Captain De Russey then said that he should be compelled to use force.

Mayor Heath replied that he could take any course he saw fit.

Captain De Russey rejoined, "I must arrest you, then." This he did by putting his hand on the Mayor's shoulder.

Captain De Russey immediately went off, leaving in the Mayor's office Mr. Conway and Mr. Overall among the other spectators, and in about half an hour, some two minutes before the Mayor's clock denoted that the hour of three had arrived, returned with Mr. Smith Izard, one of the aids of the chief of police, and some half a dozen policemen, whom it is presumed the commanding general instructed the chief to furnish.

Captain De Russey demanded that Mayor Heath should turn over the keys of the office to him. This he declined to do unless he gave him a written order to that effect. Captain De Russey said he would give him a written order if he would go over to the office of the chief of police with him. He did so, and Mayor Heath now has the order in his possession. They returned to the Mayor's office in a few minutes, when Captain De Russey took the keys that were hanging up, Mr. Conway in the meantime having seated himself in the Mayor's chair.

THE CONVENTION TAX.

The following communication from th headquarters Fifth Military District, addressed to the Board of Registration, was received by that Board Wednesday:

I. The writ of injunction in the case of the Citizens' Bank of Louisiana vs. L. E. Lermarie, issued by the Judge of the fourth district court of the State of Louisiana, is hereby set aside, and the tax collector will proceed at once to collect the taxes as imposed by the Constitutional Convention.

A RUINED REBEL.—A correspondent of the Chicago Tribune says:

I saw on the streets of Nashville an attenuated and emaciated form belonging to a man who filled quite a large space in the public eye during the war. It was none other than Clement C. Clay, one of the commissioners of the rebels abroad, and the companion of Mason and Slidell in their negotiations with France and England. Clay was the man who was met by Horace Greeley at Niagara Falls toward the close of the war, the two ostensibly coming together for the purpose of arranging for some sort of peace. The negotiations were all futile, as will be remembered.

Clement Clay was one of the most remarkable men in the South at the breaking out of the war. His family were wealthy and powerful, and Mr. Clay entered upon what seemed destined to prove a most brilliant career in public life. By the war he lost all his property, and is now racked with asthma and consumption. He was riding through the country on horseback, seeking by the change of climate and excitement to better his health. He lives in Huntsville still, and practices law. "We are all poor folks now," he said to a friend of ours, "and have to work for a living."

Dr. Potter, of Connecticut, leaves a fortune to his sons on condition that they shall never use tobacco.

PROCLAMATION

Of the Board of Registration.

BOARD OF REGISTRATION,
State of Louisiana,
New Orleans, June 5, 1868.

WHEREAS, By the ordinance of the late Constitutional Convention creating this Board, passed February 13, 1868, this Board is empowered, and it is by said ordinance made the duty of this Board to take control of "all matters of execution or of detail not fully provided for in said reconstruction acts (of Congress) and Constitution (of Louisiana), and in case of the non-action of any officer of the State or District Commander, or any omission in carrying out said law, regulations, or ordinances, or details necessary to carry into effect the purposes of said act according to their letter and spirit;" and

Whereas, The District Commander of the Fifth Military District in his Special Order No. 121, promulgating the election of civil officers in Louisiana, dated June 2, 1868, has failed to recognize the requirements of said Constitution, which provides

First, That "all civil officers thus elected shall enter upon the discharge of their duties on the second Monday after the return of their election shall have been officially promulgated, or as soon as qualified according to law, and shall continue in office for the terms of their respective offices herein prescribed, said terms to date from the first Monday in November following the election. (See article 158 of Constitution.)

2. "The General Assembly elected under this Constitution shall hold its first session in the city of New Orleans on the third Monday after the official promulgation aforesaid, and proceed, immediately upon its organization, to vote upon the adoption of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States, proposed by Congress, and passed June 13, 1868," etc. (See article 159 of Constitution.)

He, the said District Commander, having refused to recognize the requirements of the Constitution, as above shown, in his said order, in the following language: "The General Assembly will not convene until the Commanding General shall have been officially notified of the acceptance by Congress of the new State Constitution. Immediately after receipt of this information a day will be appointed for the meeting of the General Assembly to take action upon the amendment to the Constitution of the United States, known as article fourteen, and to define by law the powers and duties pertaining to the offices newly created by this Constitution."

"Article 158 of the new Constitution of the State provides that the terms of all civil officers elected under it shall date (not begin) from the first Monday in November following the election. Therefore the officers whose election is herein announced will only enter upon and hold their offices from that date;" and

Whereas, The failure to inaugurate the State officers elected under the new Constitution at the time appointed by the Constitution would necessarily prevent the General Assembly's legal existence, as well as action upon the fourteenth proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States (the present acting Governor being constitutionally unable to approve any act of said General Assembly, and without the approval of the Governor it being impossible for any legislative enactment to become a law), and thus effectually prevent Reconstruction in accordance with the laws of Congress, which provide that "the Legislature elected under the Constitution shall have adopted the amendment to the Constitution of the United States proposed by the Thirty-ninth Congress, and known as article fourteen" (see section 5, law passed March 2, 1867,) prior to admission into the Union, the adoption of said Constitutional amendment by the Legislature of Louisiana being thus rendered utterly impossible; and

Whereas, The Commanding General is not above the laws of Congress, nor is he above the Convention that framed the Constitution under which these officers are to be inaugurated, both being the creatures of Congressional will, independent of each other, yet both subject to the paramount authority of the Congress of the United States; and

Whereas, The Reconstruction Laws fully empowered the Constitutional Convention to govern all matters of detail in regard to the inauguration of the new government authorized by Congress; and

Whereas, Said Constitutional Convention has delegated its full powers in the premises to this Board, which is the legal representative of said Convention; Now, therefore, I, S. B. Packard, Chairman of the Board of Registration aforesaid, in obedience to the duty imposed by said Constitutional Convention upon, and by virtue of the authority thus vested in this Board, do hereby notify all civil officers elected under said Constitution that said Constitution requires that they qualify and take possession of their respective offices on Monday, June 15, 1868, in accordance with Article 158 of Constitution.

I also notify the members of the General Assembly of Louisiana, elected under said Constitution, that by Art. 159 of said Constitution they are required to convene in the city of New Orleans on Monday, June 22, 1868, at 12 M.; and I further notify all civil officers now in office that by the new Constitution their terms of office will expire at 12 M. on Monday, June 15, 1868, at which time they will deliver up said offices, with all appurtenances thereto, to their successors declared duly elected by the Special Order No. 121 of the Military Commander of the Fifth Military District, issued June 2, 1868; Provided, That in all cases where the officers elect do not qualify according to the laws of Congress and of this State, present incumbents will hold over until such officer shall qualify, or a successor shall have been appointed, or an officer declared elected who is able to qualify.

S. B. PACKARD,
Chairman Board of Registration.

R. C. RICHARDSON, Secretary.

THE BOARD OF REGISTRATION.

BOARD OF REGISTRATION,
State of Louisiana,
New Orleans, June 6, 1868.

At a regular meeting of the Board held on Saturday, June 6, 1868, the following preamble and resolution were unanimously adopted:

WHEREAS, The Commanding General of the Fifth Military District has interfered with the prerogatives of this Board, conferred upon it by the Constitutional Convention, by arresting its chairman, and threatening to try him by a military commission on personal charges for impeding reconstruction, thereby holding said chairman personally responsible for the late proclamation issued by this Board relative to election; therefore

Resolved, That while we denounce the aforesaid act on the part of the Commanding General as unauthorized, illegal, and a high-handed outrage upon the rights of the loyal men of this State, and a gross violation of the laws of Congress, we declare that said proclamation was authorized by this Board, and the Board alone is responsible for the publication of the same.

ADDRESS

Of the Board of Registration to the People of Louisiana.

FELLOW-CITIZENS: The conflict of jurisdiction and prerogative that has arisen between the Commanding General of the fifth military district and this Board, and the high-handed measures he has seen fit to pursue toward the chairman of the Board, render it imperative on us to submit a fair and full statement of the facts at issue between us to the people of Louisiana.

The late Constitutional Convention was as much the creature of Congress as is the office of military commander of the district. Both derive their origin and power from the same original source; are independent of each other, yet intended by Congress to act in unison in carrying out the will of their creator as legitimately expressed in the reconstruction laws of that body.

The prerogatives and duties of each department thus created are specifically defined by that creating power. Section four of supplementary act passed March 23, 1867, says: "And said Convention, when organized, shall proceed to frame a constitution and civil government according to the provisions of this act, and the act to which it is supplementary." The fact of assigning the convention the duty and prerogative of framing a civil government demonstrates that Congress did not intend to assign this duty to the Commanding General; that the government they were to inaugurate should supersede the provisional one already recognized, and if so, then they had the right to inaugurate the new government when they pleased (which could only be stated in their organic laws), and the term of inauguration is not subject to the will or caprice of the Commanding General. The attempt therefore of the Commanding General to interfere in this matter is an unwarrantable stretch of prerogative and an invasion of the rights of the people in convention assembled.

It being a conceded principle of law that the principal can delegate all his rights to his agent, it follows that the Convention had the right to delegate to this Board all its prerogatives in the premises. This Board therefore stands before the world and in the eye of the law as the legal agent and representative of the Convention that created it, and fully empowered to do all that the Convention could have done in the premises, and any attempt on the part of any one to interfere with its prerogatives and duties is a direct interference with the prerogatives and duties of the Convention and with the expressed will of Congress.

The whole duty of framing the civil government being vested exclusively in the Convention and its agents, the Commanding General therefore has no legal authority or right to either promulgate the election of civil officers (Congressmen excepted) or to say where or how they shall be inaugurated. His only prerogative in connection with the whole matter is to promulgate the ratification of the constitution and members of Congress (which last duty was only assigned him by the last Congressional bill) and to take charge of the election.

The evident intention of Congress was that the Commanding General while taking charge of the late insurrectionary States, during their provisional condition, should assist the Convention by taking the initiatory steps toward its organization, and then aiding—not hindering—it in fulfilling its assigned duties.

We therefore hold and charge that the Commanding General, in his late special orders relative to election, has transcended his prerogatives.

1. In promulgating the election of State, parish, and municipal officers.

2. In naming a time for the said officers to qualify and take possession of their offices different from that required in the constitution of Louisiana.

3. In assuming the power to convene the General Assembly at his will.

4. In assuming the power of appointing persons to fill all such offices in cases where the persons declared elected can not qualify in accordance with the laws of Congress, thereby ignoring the voice of the people, it being the undoubted right of the person having the highest number of votes who can qualify to fill said offices.

5. In sending the returns of election to the present Secretary of State he thereby ignores the only constitutional State officers, the acting Secretary being an entirely irresponsible party in this matter, and by refusing to send the returns to this Board, as was his duty, when this Board legally demanded the same, he unlawfully refused to do his duty in the premises, and prevented this Board from carrying out the will of Congress.

6. Thus manifesting a determination to ignore the will of the people of Louisiana as expressed at the ballot-box, and a desire, if not settled purpose, to impede reconstruction by thwarting the expressed will of Congress.

While, therefore, we exceedingly regret the collision that has arisen between these respective agents of reconstruction, and earnestly hope and are persuaded that cool and candid reflection will induce the Commanding General to retrace the steps he has so hastily taken, we can not, in view of the responsibilities imposed upon us, pause for a moment to consider personal safety or unpleasant consequences. The course before us is one of duty, plainly marked out by law, and we shall unhesitatingly follow it, leaving to the people and to Congress to justify us in our determination.

We, therefore, notify all municipal officers declared elected by the people of Louisiana under the new constitution, in special orders No. 125 from military headquarters, dated June 4, 1868, that article 158 of the constitution of Louisiana requires them to qualify and enter upon their offices on Monday, June 15, 1868, and that any orders from any source directing contrary to this article are illegal, not binding, and the parties so attempting to take office will lay themselves liable to an action at law by the parties they may thus unlawfully eject, as well as risk a certainty of removal from office for failure to legally qualify and enter upon the discharge of their duties as required by law.

One of the young ladies referred to her catalogue, and said, 'This is "Helen on the Walls of Troy."' 'Yes,' remarked the young gent, 'that is near Albany, I believe!' We left immediately."

The Boston Transcript observes:

One of the most noticeable indications of the times is the business-like way in which many journals refer to the proposed purchase, by the Democratic party, of Chief Justice Chase. Some Republican and many copperhead journals seem to see in the transaction nothing but a question of political profit and loss, and the discussion relates, not to the infamy of the bargain, but to the largeness of the price. "Will it pay?" is the query put on both sides.

Fifteen years ago a man left Gardner, Maine, to try his fortunes in Chicago. He had $800, which he invested in buying house lots about a mile from the centre of the then city. To-day that same property would sell at public auction for $250,000. The spare change he got from practicing law he put into house lots and then into a banking house, and now pays a tax upon $3,000,000 of safe investments, while he is one of the leading Republican managers of the whole Northwest.

At a ladies' fair in Berlin one young lady attracted a host of customers by her witty answers, and sold her goods at enormous prices with wonderful rapidity. An old gentleman, who was quite fascinated by her, took heart and asked her: "Tell me if you sell kisses, too." "Of course," replied the young lady. "What is the price of your kisses?" "A hundred dollars apiece, cash in advance." "Here are a hundred dollars," said the aged adorer of the lady. But instead of the kiss he expected, he saw to his dismay that the young lady kissed her little white hands with her charming lips to him, amid the loud cheers of the bystanders, and then took the hundred dollars as coolly as if she had sold something at a very low price.

The throngs of passengers on the Boston routes tax the capacity of the boats to the utmost. A few nights since the Newport brought a thousand passengers from Boston, the Narragansett was equally crowded, and the steamers of the other lines are filled at every trip. The competition is likely to continue for some time, as none of the companies seem inclined to yield.

The scenes on board the boats in the small hours of the morning are described as exceedingly ludicrous. It is neces-ary to secure state-rooms a week in advance, and late-comers are provided with the limited accommodations of a narrow berth or a mattress spread upon the cabin floor. Some of the latest arrivals do not get the comfort of a "shake-down," but have to content themselves with the soft side of a carpeted plank, with traveling bag for pillow, and overcoat for covering. In the new restaurant plan of the supper rooms, the companies find a profit from the demands of hungry thousands, and by this means are perhaps able to keep the treasury full.—New York Post.

GRANT THE PLANNER OF SHERMAN'S MARCH. In an address to the Philadelphia Union League the other night, Governor Geary related the following important fact:

"On a certain occasion when dining with Grant at Chattanooga, after the cloth had been removed he called for his maps which he spread before me and said: 'Sir, you and your division have been instrumental in obtaining the victories around this city. The plan for the next campaign is already formed, and it is proper that you should know it. I intend to concentrate my troops around this place, and pour them on Atlanta, while a strong attack is made on Richmond. After Atlanta falls a line will be taken for the sea shore, ending either at Charleston or Savannah;' and having thus made our point we will enter the Carolinas and attack Richmond.' This was in 1863, nine months before the city of Atlanta was taken. Justice should be done, and I tell you so that you will know who it was that planned the march to the sea, and dissected the Confederacy, and brought rebellion to a termination."

LOCAL INTELLIGENCE.

THE BOARD OF REGISTRATION.—With that ubiquity which is the natural prerogative of repertorial existence this reporter glided unseen within earshot of "these headquarters" on Monday afternoon to obtain a few scraps of pabulum on which to feed the sensational news hunger of his numerous readers.

The great sensation of the day—the arrest of the Board of Registration—being on the tapis, and hearing loud talking, we drew near listningly and overheard the following:

"So, gentleman, you have done this to bring on the issue between us."

"No, General, we desire no issue, but intend to do our duty regardless of consequences."

"But when in the contingency that arose the commanding general took charge of this matter it was presumptuous on your part to interfere."

"You do not state the case fairly, General. The only case of a contingent nature that arose was your taking charge of the election of State officers, etc., which we agreed to delegate to you, sir."

Hearing something like a clap of thunder just at that moment we looked in suddenly and saw the Commanding General standing on tiptoe a perfect embodiment of outraged dignity and astounded surprise.

"Now, sir," turning suddenly round upon each member of the board, "I want to know, sir, if you acknowledge that you signed that article published in the REPUBLICAN yesterday morning. Did you do it, sir?"

"I did, sir," "I did, sir," was responded on every side.

"Well, gentlemen, I have received a telegram from army headquarters which I shall read and by which I shall be governed in this case."

Here we heard the telegram read from General Grant suggesting the propriety of his dropping that little matter about Packard, as Congress might possibly do something that might interfere with his calculations and spoil this nice little game of "my policy" in defeating, or at least retarding reconstruction.

"Inasmuch, therefore, gentlemen, as you are hardheaded enough to acknowledge that you had the hardihood to beard the 'my policy' lion in his 'Headquarters,' why I shall be compelled ——!"

Here we became a little dizzy with fright at the awful danger in which it appeared the plucky but apparently doomed "seven" were about to be precipitated. Visions of bastiles, parish prisons, Ship Island, Dry Tortugas, Andersonville, Libby, and a thousand other places of terrible reminiscences loomed up ghastly before us, and we were about to topple over from our watchtower, when we listened and the soothing words feel on our greedy, listing ear like drops of rain on a parching earth——"to release you."

Blessed words, kind words, magnanimous words; how great, glorious, and magnanimous did the hero of the hour appear! And with emotions too big for utterance we rushed to grasp the hand of the lucky, plucky fellows as they emerged from headquarters and walked down St. Charles street.

THE SASH-FACTORY HOMICIDE.—Judge Gastinel on Monday began an examination of Philip Witte, accused of killing S. C. Lorenson at a sash factory corner of Treme and Toulouse streets on the second instant:

Hypolite Maillot testified that he is employed in the sash factory corner of Treme and Toulouse streets; on the morning of the second instant, about eight o'clock, saw deceased and accused in a small rear building; as I went in I said, "A Frenchman, a Dutchman, and an Englishman; I will put the Frenchman between us; how is politics?" speaking to deceased; deceased answered that Republicans had gone to hell; then accused said, "That's the way before the war—a Frenchman, a Dutchman, or an Irishman could not walk the streets after nine o'clock without being knocked down by Know-Nothings;" deceased got up and said to accused, "You are so much in love with the Republicans I hope your wife will get a nigger baby;" when deceased made this remark he did not appear to be serious; accused said, "Yes, you have already allowed that once before with Bouchie;" accused followed deceased; accused said to deceased, "You are the meanest man on earth; I heard no reply from deceased; when the two had got up stairs I heard two shots; ran up and got there too late; met accused coming out with a revolver in his hand; he said: "Never mind Hyppolite, I will surrender myself." The pistol now in court is similar to the one accused had at the time; I followed accused down stairs; when I got down stairs told another man to follow him, and see that accused did not run away; afterward I assisted to carry deceased to the drug store; the apothecary told me it was no use, as nothing could be done for him; I then sent for a cab and took deceased to Charity hospital; I afterward saw him dead.

Deceased after making the remark about the nigger baby went up stairs in his usual slow manner; accused followed him up stairs in a very excited manner, going up very fast.

F. Steinfel—Was in the factory on the morning of the 2d instant; deceased and accused worked there; on the morning in question I was on the second floor, when accused came up in a great hurry; saw him go to his clothing; accused's clothing was in this shop room; accused came from the back part of the building; spoke to accused, but he did not reply; I turned around to pick up a sash; heard accused fire a shot at deceased; I turned to arrest accused; there were four shots fired altogether; deceased was behind his bench apparently at work; it was then I saw accused going toward his clothes; no words passed between them at this time; I was ten feet from them; saw three shots fired; saw deceased when he fell; gave my evidence before the coroner at Charity hospital; did not see what accused took from his clothing.

The court then continued the case until to-day at meridian, when other witnesses will be heard. The case excites considerable interest.

A BURGLAR WOUNDED.—During Saturday night a burglar was discovered in the dwelling of Mr. St. Ceran, corner 552 Royal (Casacalvo) street. Only Mrs. St. Ceran and her son Edgar, not more than sixteen years old, were at home. The youth became aware of the burglar's presence, and had a good view of him, and saw the rascal search under the pillow of a bed and take something. The fellow then departed, but Edgar followed him down into the yard, where the thief discovered that he was pursued, when he fired a pistol at the young man, but did not hit him. Edgar then sent a bullet, which caused the burglar to drop as if struck, but he immediately recovered and ran to the street, the boy following and sending another leaden messenger after him.

An examination of the banquette proved that the balls had performed good service, for blood was found along the way for a considerable distance, nearly three blocks, to St. Ferdinand street, where all trace was lost, and it is thought he must have found a hiding place in the neighborhood. All the plunder that the villain had taken he dropped in the yard when he fell, besides a single-barreled pistol that was not recognized by any one. The fellow had entered the premises from a rear alleyway, and once within the building obtained several keys, one belonging to an armoir which contained some valuable jewelry.

Edgar St. Ceran describes his antagonist as a man of middling height and size, black coat, pantaloons, and hat, dark, heavy beard, and rubicund complexion. Whoever the burglar was he will not soon forget his worse than futile attempt to steal. Let Edgar's example be imitated, and burglars will not ply their unlawful business with so much boldness as at present. The articles dropped in the yard by the rascal were two gold watches, gold cross, neck chains, silver sugar bowl, teapot, and goblet, worth several hundred dollars. There's many a slip between cup and lip.

A PRIZE FIGHT.—Arrangements had been made Sunday for a regular prize fight, to take place between Machoucou Decade and Edward Read, men of great physical power. The place selected for the mill was a point not far from the Metairie Race Course, time yesterday morning. The men were accompanied by a few friends, their two assistants being George Birch and Alphonse Durel. Arriving on the ground, the combatants were ready for battle in less than ten minutes. Eight rounds were fought, at the end of which Read was declared victor. Decade, before the rounds were finished, was attacked with a "colic," and the sponge was thrown up. A squad of policemen had been sent out by Chief Williamson to put a stop to the fight, but the officers did not reach the scene until the mill was over, yet they arrested the four named above, who were brought in to the main station and released on bond.

As to the merits of the fight we know nothing, or what were the results of the several rounds; but we learn that the stakes were only $25 a side, and that bets were heavy on Decade. Some talk was made because New Orleans policemen arrested the party in the parish of Jefferson. Officers of these parishes, by virtue of a State law, can make arrests anywhere within the limits, but the offenders must be arraigned before the magistrate of the parish in which the alleged offense was committed.

FIFTH JUSTICE'S COURT, ALGIERS.—One of General Buchanan's Registrars in Deep Water.—R. G. Curtis, one of the registrars appointed for the parish of Orleans, right bank, at the reopening of the registration list, has been examined before Jud Brownlee, of Algiers, on charges contained in three separate affidavits, made by W. F. Dunham, T. Lee, and George Herbert. Affiants charged that accused had been intrusted by them in April last with vouchers for the pay of the registrars on the right bank, said vouchers being the property of affiants, with instructions to have them countersigned by the proper authority, so that the paymaster would cash them, when they were to be returned to affiants. From time to time Curtis told the parties interested that the vouchers in question had not yet been signed, but at length they got information that the documents had been sold to brokers in New Orleans, whereupon criminal proceedings were instituted. T. W. Sherburne, Esq., acted for the prosecution, and Curtis defended his case in propria persona. The accused offered an exception to the jurisdiction of the court, alleging that if any crime existed said crime had been committed in another parish. Mr. Sherburne contended, however, that the offense alleged had been inaugurated in the parish of Orleans, right bank, which was sufficient to give jurisdiction in that parish, although said offense might have been consummated elsewhere. The court sustained the point taken by the counsel for the prosecution, whereupon the accused waived an examination, and requested that the case be sent at once before the first district court. Judge Brownlee accordingly committed the prisoner for trial before the criminal court, leaving the amount of bail to be fixed by that tribunal.

THE OATH.—This is a copy of the oath which General Buchanan requires every person elected to civil office to take:

I, ——, do solemnly swear that I have never voluntarily borne arms against the United States since I have been a citizen thereof; that I have voluntarily given no aid, countenance, counsel, or encouragement to persons engaged in armed hostility thereto; that I have neither sought, nor accepted, nor attempted to exercise the functions of any office whatever under any authority or pretended authority in hostility to the United States; that I have not yielded a voluntary support to any pretended government, authority, power, or constitution within the United States hostile or inimical thereto. And I do further swear that to the best of my knowledge and ability I will support and defend the Constitution of the United States against all enemies, foreign and domestic; that I will bear true faith and allegiance to the same; that I take this obligation freely, without any mental reservation or purpose of evasion, and that I will well and faithfully discharge the duties of the office on which I am about to enter. So help me God.

CERTIFICATES.—The certificates of indebtedness are not very beautiful specimens of engraving. They are numbered in red on the left hand corner, and read as follows:

"The city of New Orleans issues this certificate of indebtedness to bearer for —— in payment of warrant No. ——, with 8 per cent per annum interest from date." On the lower border of the notes these words appear: "By virtue of ordinace No. 915, N. S., approved May 14, 1868."

A vignette on the left hand lower corner extending above the centre of the note represents Minerva, with the bird at her feet, and the goddess armed cap a-pie. The vignette on the right hand corner is an allegorical representation of the goddess of liberty in a semi-nude state, crowned with laurels, and flying, evidently to a good breeze, a United States flag. This central figure is surrounded by little Cupids or cherubs, holding in their hands emblems of the arts, manufactures, agriculture, and trade.

APPOINTMENTS BY MR. CONWAY.—Mr. J. R. Conway, who was forcibly placed in possession of the mayor's office yesterday, appointed as his secretary Mr. J. W. Overall, who was secretary under the appointment of Mayor Monroe. He also commissioned Robert Diamond as chief of police, but Major Williamson, the present incumbent, not recognizing Mr. Conway's authority to remove him, they appointed this morning as the time to talk with General Buchanan about the matter.

SUIT FOR $35,000 DAMAGES.—The fifth district court has before it a case where Mr. Hastings, druggist at the corner of Felicity and Magazine streets, is sued for $35,000 for having put up a prescription not in accordance with written directions. It is asserted that the lady patient who took the prescription died from the effects of the wrong compound. She had been prostrated by yellow fever, and was at the time recovering.

It appears that the steamers Ontario and Erie, recently offered for sale at Boston, were bid in by their owners.

FURTHER EXTENSION OF TIME FOR COLLECTION OF THE CONVENTION TAX.

AT A REGULAR MEETING OF THE BOARD, held on TUESDAY, May 26, 1868, the following resolution was adopted:

Resolved, That the time for the final settlement of the Convention taxes by the Tax Collectors and Sheriffs throughout the State with the Auditor of Public Accounts be and is hereby extended to the first day of July, 1868.

By virtue of the foregoing resolution I hereby notify all Tax Collectors and Sheriffs throughout the State to continue to collect the Convention tax up to the first day of July, 1868.

The Tax Collectors and Sheriffs are further instructed that they will be held responsible for a rigid enforcement of the ordinance adopted by the Convention, January 4, 1868, (which is hereinafter published for the information of all concerned), exacting a penalty for non-payment of said tax.

The Convention remitted all penalties up to the twentieth day of March, 1868, and from that time the penalty will be exacted in all the parishes where the taxrolls were ready at that date, and thirty days after the taxrolls were completed in the other parishes, the penalty will be exacted.

S. B. PACKARD, Chairman.
R. C. RICHARDSON, Secretary.

ORDINANCE.

SECTION 1. Be it ordained by the Constitutional Convention of the State of Louisiana, That the Sheriffs and Tax Collectors of the State, except of the city of New Orleans, Orleans right bank, and the parish of Jefferson, shall give notice to the taxpayers of their respective parishes to pay the tax of one mill per cent levied by ordinance of the twenty-fourth December, 1867, by this Convention; and thirty days after service of said notice those who shall not have paid the tax due by them shall be considered in default, and the Sheriffs and Tax Collectors shall exact an additional tax upon such persons of twenty-five per cent upon the sum due by them for the first default, and an additional tax of ten per cent to be computed on the original tax for every subsequent thirty days said persons shall continue to be in default, up to the date of the final settlement.

SEC. 2. Be it further ordained, That the Sheriffs and Tax Collectors of the city of New Orleans, Orleans right bank, and parish of Jefferson, shall by public notice in one newspaper published in their parish, call upon all taxpayers to pay the tax levied by the ordinance of December twenty-four above mentioned and all persons who shall not have paid the amounts due by them on account of said tax ten days after the publication of the above required notice shall pay an additional tax of twenty-five per cent on the original tax, and an additional tax of two and a-half per cent on the original tax of one mill per cent for every subsequent ten days said persons shall be in default.

SEC. 3. Be it further ordained, etc., That immediately after the taxpayers shall have been put in default by the expiration of the thirty or ten days, as the case may be, given in the notice required by the first and second sections of this ordinance, the Sheriffs and Tax Collectors throughout the State shall proceed to seize and sell after ten days' notice property of the delinquent taxpayers, movable or immovable, sufficient to pay the original tax, all additional taxes herein levied, and costs.

Adopted in Convention at the city of New Orleans, this fourth day of January, Anno Domini eighteen hundred and sixty-eight.

(Signed) WILLIAM VIGERS, Secretary. my28 15t

THE GERMANIA LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY, established in 1860, and based upon the most approved principles of Life Insurance security, presents its claims for consideration, believing that its solid foundation already secured by the faithful and efficient management of its officers and Board of Directors will give it the preference above all other similar institutions.

It is purely Mutual, as the net profits are distributed among the parties insured, the interest of the capital stock being only five per cent according to its charter.

It assumed the system of cash payments at the commencement of its existence, and maintained it faithfully until now, and promises the same for the future, thereby securing to policy holders the full amount for which they are insured. The advantage of this system over the half cash and half note system is patent to every careful observer, but will be more fully illustrated by the following statement and table:

If a person of thirty years of age insures his life for the amount of $1000 in one of the credit companies, and pays a premium of $28 30 per year, with a note for half of the premium, then by means of this note and interests thereon the amount will become less and less in the following proportions:

| | |
|---|---|
| After 10 years the $1000 will amount to | $887 44 |
| After 15 years the $1000 will amount to | 795 28 |
| After 20 years the $1000 will amount to | 666 02 |
| After 25 years the $1000 will amount to | 484 73 |
| After 30 years the $1000 will amount to | 230 47 |
| After 33 years the $1000 will amount to | 32 53 |
| After 34 years the $1000 will amount to | Nothing. |

So that after a lapse of 34 years the whole amount will be eaten up, notwithstanding the parties insured paid their money in good faith.

The large dividend of 40 per cent declared last January is evidence of the care and success with which the Managers have conducted the enlarged and rapidly increasing interests of the Company, and vouches for its future brilliant and permanent prosperity.

Parties contemplating an assurance on their lives will do well to examine the status of this Company, every facility for which will be given by the

THE OLD HULK.

BY LU BILLINGS SPALDING.

Just out of the harbor the old hulk lay,
Fast on the sand bar, all battered and gray;
Naught but the gull and the yellow spray
Ever paused on the spot where the old hulk lay.

The barnacle reared its encampment unseen,
Down on the sodden and sunken beam;
And the sea stars flashed in the ruined wheel.

Capricious as woman the wild waves seemed—
They fondled or frowned on the helpless beam;
Like pitiless women, the thing in their power
Became but a pastime, and the toy of an hour.

But grim and defiant the old hulk sat—
Too costly a plaything, all worm-worn and black.
There seemed on its features an aspect of pain,
Ignored and forgotten, once proud in its reign.

Pointing in sunshine and pointing in storm;
Never forgetful, but true to the last,
Bravely supporting its battered old mast.

There was that in the aspect, so fast on the sand,
That told, e'en in ruin the soul could be grand;
For, pointing in sunshine or storm to the sky,
Translating its motto, "My trust is on high."

On high! oh! the language the old hulk told,
As it crouched on the sand-bar all going to mold;
But never ignored by the wet-winged gull,
That picked at the snail on its moldering hull;
And worthy the lesson, more precious than gold,
I learned by the wisdom the old hulk told.

Oh! life-wrecks! How many—how often we strand
In drifting abandon, or fast on the sand;
But seldom and few, with their battered mast,
Pointing so bravely until the last.

Oft, in the moments of trial and dread,
I think of the words that the old hulk said;
And if I should wreck on the sand-bar fast,
Oh! help me, kind Father, be true to the last.

THE DEAD BEE.

BY LU BILLINGS SPALDING.

The bed was a snow white daisy,
Where the little creature died;
Its sack half-filled with honey,
And its thin wing open wide.

Its tiny heart ceased beating
While toiling for its hive;
And it left a useful lesson
To many a human life.

The daisy drooped and faded,
But it had not bloomed in vain,
For a weary little worker
Had on its bosom lain.

And its feeble mite of honey
Had been given glad and free
To the worn and weary struggler,
The dying little bee.

And when with doubtful vision
I see no part for me,
I think upon the daisy,
And the little withered bee.

Sketch of Rev. W. M. Punshon's Sermon before the General Conference.

Mr. Punshon then came forward and gave out the 2d epistle of Timothy, 1st chapter, and 7th verse as his text. "For God hath not given us the spirit of fear, but of power, and of love, and of a sound mind."

It is said that the unfailing affection of the Savior for those whom he had chosen out of the world, and made partakers of his inner love, that having loved his own he loved them to the end, was an affection which was not interrupted either by their personal unworthiness, or sin or sorrow. And there was a like constancy of regard, in imitation of his living example, which seems to have been exhibited by the apostles, and the churches which they founded, toward men whom they designated as children in the faith. With an affection, fatherly in its solicitude, for their welfare, and undimmed by the lapse of years, Paul watched over the churches, and by his instruction fortified the young evangelist whom he had induced into his holy toil. Supremely anxious for the glory of Christ, he suffers neither sickness nor favors to hinder his usefulness and writes this epistle as an ambassador in bonds. Already had he been before the bar of Nero, and although forsaken by recreant men, brethren, the Lord stood by him and delivered him out of the mouth of the lion; but he is assured that all danger is not over, and distinctly honored him with the foreshadowing of martyrdom.

But this occasions no pang. It will be his introduction home. It will be the fiery chariot in which he will, with singing, cleave the sky.

How sublime his attitude as he stands. Paul the aged, the young blasphemer grown into the veteran saint, and gazing down the vista of the future the Apostolic hero stood in the gates of death, and listening we seem to hear him say: "I am now ready to be offered, and the time of my departure is at hand." Departure! for what is death but moving from one room into another, for "henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous Judge, shall give unto me." Words from such lips, at such a time as this, must have been especially valuable. There was nothing from the coloring of fancy that might tempt to an unripe judgment; the purpose has been formed from observation and reflection, his earlier Jewish prejudices have been corrected, the false lights have waned, the mind has clearer insight and a stronger vision, because the death hour projects the light of the invisible.

We are bound, therefore, to reverently ponder on the words which we have read as the text, because they are the expression of the apostle's mature judgment as to the value and sacred importance of Christianity, for none was so well qualified to give its interpretation. Its reasonable service had cured his intemperate zeal; through his trials he proved its transforming power, and now he had special revelations of its grandeur that had proved it to be lofty and divine. Through all circumstances of a long life he had not varied from his allegiance to it, and now it is his soul's strong refuge, when the blasts of trouble are beating like a storm against the wall. He gives us his impressions of the Christianity he had loved so well.

God has not given us the spirit of fear but of power. The great wants of the world are the same, and in the proportion as the Church has spiritual force, is she sufficient to win it to Christ. The same disposition must be expressed that Christ presents to us, not mere illusions nor morbid manifestations, but in the most lovely and comely forms to the sight of men.

I propose to prove, or rather to trace, "What is necessary in order to have the energetic expression of Christianity," and I think for ministry and people, and all together, its consideration will not be without its present profit. The expression of Christianity, as it is brought before us in the words of the text, is proof of its preciousness, its gentleness, and intelligence. Just take these three things and you shall find a whole gospel in them. The Apostle's negative form and his first affirmative one are really the same. For we have not the spirit of fear, but of power, and of love, and of a sound mind. The main design of my sermon is to give force to the exhortation with which the Apostle applies it: "Be not thou therefore ashamed of the testimony of the Lord, nor of me his prisoner, but be thou partaker of the afflictions of the gospel." The remembrance of his appearance before the tribunal of Nero, or before confessors, or rods of lictors, or ax of the executioner, these did not deter him, but with a calm reliance that draws from danger its own support, he went forward. The world's old idea of power, both in classical and pagan times, was indicated with physical death or brute force. Thus in the days of chivalry men were the slaves of their own vices and passions, and possessed of the courage which could be purchased for a shilling a day. There is a significant and humbling lesson of mournful feebleness in the fable of Hercules, in the narrative of Sampson on the lap of Delilah. I know that mighty things can be wielded by mighty minds; I know that the resolute will always find the object to crush beneath their mighty will. But I know that Christianity is abroad among the nations, molding them, and will continue to mold until the material energy and the material will find their place as the world grows older in the knowledge of God. Men will forget the flatteries of the high when they will turn in disgust from the cruel power of the oppressor, when pride shall be overthrown on its pedestal, and the libertine with his chants and songs will be prostrate, and with all their kindred wrongs will take their place in the dust. Then shall the declaration of Scripture be more fully realized, the righteous shall be had in everlasting remembrance. Worldly eminence is not, therefore, power. True power is not in physical strength, or mental strength apart from moral excellence. It is found only in connection with a heart that has virtuous courage as the first of its graces. The preacher who does not preach smooth things because the people desire it, who is undaunted by the threats, who makes a bold stand against the pride of the great; the struggling tradesman who scorns the adulterations and the little falsehoods, and who, at the risk of losing some of his best customers, closes his shop on the Lord's day; they have felt and do manifest the spirit of true power.

God does not give us the spirit of fear but of power, and by the grace of God there are gathered in this house to-day men enough who, if clothed with power from on high, as they might and should be, could turn the world upside down.

Where is our courage? O for the race of the old Hebrew prophets, strong men who feared God, and had no room for any other fear, those who are manifestly baptized from on high, and who give every power to the service of the Master!

But my ideal of apostolic character is not perfect yet. There is a word, which for want of a better word to express what should still be added to this character, I will use. It is unction, the spirit of power of him who is the source of all power, dwelling in each individual, making him such a power that he goes forth to conquer. What a mysterious power is this. It is not talent, for the untalented often possess it. It is not science, for they who are guiltless of all science, save the science of saving souls, often wield it. It belongs exclusively to no class or condition, but it is God's secret which he whispers to the ears of those he loves; it is the length and breadth of God's gift of love to man. It is the spirit of power which God gave to Christians in the early ages, for the promulgation of his truth against barbaric power, and against imperial power, and to overmatch the statuesque eloquence of Greece, and to overthrow the rights of paganism, and that against the power of evil in all its forms his truth might cleave its onward way.

This was the power that kindled the smouldering embers of truth in the middle ages, and broke forth in the flame of the Reformation. This power God confers yet, and he delights to confer it upon all who ask it. Error pales before it, and the feebiest of the Gospel heralds rises into the strength of a David, and David clothed with it stands like an angel in the light of the sun. God waits now to bestow it, for his power is everlasting, and giving doth not impoverish him. All our power comes from God. Everything good we do is by his strength, and clothed with this divine power we may do all things. Why not then seek it now? Is it not strange that we permit this treasure of power to lie idle in God's hands. What! is the spirit of power waiting in God's treasury for me, power to win souls to Christ, power to relax the death-grasp of the destroyer, power to enthrone the conscience of the world again, as the viceroy of the Lord? Is all this waiting for me, conditional upon my earnest prayer and faith? Shall we not then enter into an earnest beseeching, such as we have never known before? O for the descent of this power upon us, that we and the world may realize the fullness of the glory and love of God in Christ Jesus our Lord.

And of love. Power that is untempered with love will be repulsive. It may be strong, but it will be rough; there will be nothing winsome in it. Unless love takes hold of power and wields it, it will effect little for good and for God. The Psalmist says, "God hath spoken once, yea, twice have I heard this, that power belongeth unto God," and then, recognizing this truth, he climbs up to the conclusion, "Also unto thee, O Lord, belongeth mercy." So should it be with us, and so it may be; power should be tempered and swayed by love, for God hath given us the spirit of power, and of love, and of a sound mind.

So far as I know this spirit is the characteristic only of the Christian. All the hardy virtues grew on pagan soil. There were high styles of manhood among pagans. There were Aristotle and Socrates, and Cicero and Plato, and many others whose virtues might put to blush many a nominal Christian of the present day. But the spirit of love was not the ruling spirit in their heart, and their virtues and utterances did not make hearts throb. If they had lived in our times they would be the righteous men of whom the apostle speaks, upright but not ' wing, pure as an icicle, and as cold. It is under the dispensation of the Gospel only that truly good men spring up, such good men as those spoken of, for whom some will even dare to die. It is only the truly, heartily good man who can win from human hearts this homage, for there is a spirit of winsomeness about such which can not be found in the righteous man.

This doctrine of love as a necessity to the Christian was taught and illustrated by the life and instructions of Christ. His ministry was love in action. Every precept that he uttered had a glowing promise in its heart, and in all his life this principle is manifest, that the teaching of his people in all coming time which shall win victories over the heart is the teaching of love. Was this in the disciples? Not till it had been planted there by Christ. Look at the miracle of the loaves and fishes. What said the disciples with regard to the hungering multitude? "Send the multitude away." They were not fit to be apostles yet. On the next page you find that the Master said to the apostles, "Go over to the other side of the lake." He would send them away. They were to know by experience what it was to endure the absence of an absent Lord, to suffer the buffetings of the deep, to be in danger with no Savior present, and they would be the better men and the better apostles for the storms they were to meet. He would indicate by this that their training was to be the discipline of love.

So in every age the teaching that has been the most humane has been the most successful; that which has been moved by love has triumphed.

There are chords in the most degraded hearts which the hand of kindness can touch and make the sweetest melodies.

It was this principle in the heart of Mrs. Fry that touched prisoners' hearts which were harder than the walls of Newgate masonry. Browning chose the transport ship as his field of toil, and the spirit of love in him won these trophies of grace.

It was the spirit of love which made London thieves attentive while nobility doffed its coronet to whisper to them the blessed words of love, and they were won to the cross of Christ—won by the gentle angel of love.

What was your own experience, you who know the joys of grace? What was the way by which you came? You were led under the shadow of Sinai, and you heard its thunders, but like them of ancient times, as you passed out from under its shadow your heart became harder; but when you came to that other mountain, the mount were Jesus bled, you could not stand that. That broke down your heart, and you yielded to love what Sinai never could have conquered.

This sight of the blood which purchases our pardon can break the stony heart, and subdue it to the cross. We have here the old fable over again, in which, while the rain fell and the storm raged, the man drew the folds of his cloak more closely about him, but threw it off at the first burst of the sunshine.

It is this ministry of love that only can reach and save the masses. It must be all heart work. The heart must speak to the heart in love, and if we have preacking like this, and priests like this, how shall we triumph? True, there are no priests now in the sense of office, but we are all priests, a royal priesthood unto God, and our ministry must be one of love if it would be one of success. We must go to the people with words of love and with looks of love which no hypocrisy can hide from the eye of a child, and tell them that the Lord who bled for us, and by whose death we are saved, bled for them also, and it will be that when more of this spirit of love shall be poured down upon all the churches that the Gospel shall spread, and everywhere win its widening way. Then there will be calm smiles where now is the frown of anger, then the kiss of peace shall be returned where now the blow is given, then will brawny arms of labor be lifted up in appeal to God, and then shall be witnessed the scene of all striving together in love for the same ends and for the same heaven.

Of a sound mind. There must not only be bravery in testimony and gentleness of heart, but there must also be the ability to give to every man who asks a reason for the hope that is in us, in meekness and fear. The spirit of Christianity is not only brave and gentle, but it is intelligent. It must address itself to the work of understanding the dictates of the highest and sublimest wisdom. The spirit of Christianity is eminently reasonable. There are wonders in it, but no lying wonders. There are miracles in it, but no unreasonable miracles. Hence, everything which is not in accord with the spirit of true reason is no part of the Gospel of Jesus Christ. Hence, the cruel spirit of persecution, wherever you find it, is not of the Gospel of Jesus Christ. Hence, all that springs from the spirit of superstition, wherever found, is not of the Gospel of Jesus. Hence, the vain and foolish pretensions of modern spiritism are not of the Gospel of Christ, and hence, also, anything and everything which a sound mind condemns is not of the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ.

They only are of a sound mind who believe in the Lord Jesus and accept him as their Savior. I know it is not uncommon for men of the world to throw their jibes at Christians and accuse them of fanaticism and folly. But how easy it is for the Christian to repel that charge. Go examine the Christian. Feel his pulse, you find it steady. Look at his life, you find it deliberate and cool and upright. He is not mad, but he speaks forth the words of truth and soberness.

How easy were it not only to repel this charge, but to retort it. That man there knows that in the winter time which is coming his false friends will forsake him and he will be left to his own resources, and yet he wantons away the summer time and makes no provision for the approaching winter. That man, and you have met many such in the streets of this city, knows he will be summoned soon to take a journey, and yet he is made and is making no preparation for it. That man lives in a frame building, in an old and crazy house, and has been told again and again that it is falling, and yet he endeavors not to escape till it is in ruins about his ears. "O," but you say, "why do you insult us with such pictures as these? This is an asylum to which you are taking us, and all these are mad." Yes, they are mad, but their madness is yours if you are not to-day in Christ Jesus. Your summer of life is almost gone, but you are making no preparations for the future. Your hours are becoming fewer and fewer, and yet they pass unimproved. The influences which once touched and moved you have now no effect upon you, because your heart is hardening. The harvest is almost past and you are not yet saved. You must soon take the last journey, even to that country from whose bourne no traveler returns, and you may be summoned suddenly to enter upon it, and yet you are making no preparations. You are living a crazy house, the rafters and timbers of which time is wearing out, and yet you are making no provisions for that "house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens." Yes! these are fools and madmen, you have said it, but their folly and madness is yours, and if there is one such who has strayed into this house to-day I charge you to be foolish and mad no more. Religion takes away madness and bestows wisdom. Let her do so by you.

You may imagine you have all knowledge and wisdom, and may call us impotent and poor; but we rise above the scorn of the world, for God hath made us kings and priests, and ours is a royal heritage. Come, then, with us and be saved.

It would rejoice me more than all else to be able to know that this service had brought some sinner to Christ; had brought some feet from the ways of darkness and death into the paths of light and life; or that it had been the means of reclaiming some poor lost wanderer. For God's sake do not trifle with the work of your salvation, but come every one to Jesus. You may every one present to God an acceptable sacrifice, for the sacrifice of God is a broken and a contrite heart. I do not care how far away from God you may have gone; even though you may hear the wail of demon voices, and stand upon the very verge of the pit, yet never mind. One cry, one slightest whisper of faith, and Jesus will lift you up out of the horrible pit, and put your feet upon the rock; yes, will lift you up to heavenly places in Christ Jesus, and heaven shall resound with the song: "This my son was dead and is alive again; he was lost, and is found."

What the General Conference Did

The General Conference, which met in Chicago May 1, 1868, closed its session June 2, the twenty-seventh day of legislative work. The session was remarkable for the harmony and kindly feelings which prevailed, though questions of great importance, and on which the utmost diversity of opinion was felt, were discussed and acted upon.

Early in the session the question of the status of the new Conferences, organized in the Southern States by the Bishops in the interval since the General Conference in 1864, forced itself upon the attention of Conference. After considerable discussion, turning chiefly on the different views of members concerning the true construction of the acts of the last, and the constitutional powers of the present Conference, resolutions were adopted repealing all action of the General Conference of 1864, restricting, or purporting to restrict, the rights and privileges of these Conferences, and the Alabama, Delaware, Georgia, Holston, Mississippi, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas, Virginia, North Carolina, and Washington Conferences, which had theretofore been known as Mission Conferences, were declared to be Annual Conferences in the Methodist Episcopal Church, possessed of all the rights and powers common to Annual Conferences. Subsequently (on May 29), the Mission Conferences of Liberia, Germany, Switzerland, and India were placed on a similar footing, the administration of their missionary interests remaining unchanged. The bishops were requested to make arrangements for at least one Episcopal visitation to each of the European and Asiatic missions during the next four years.

A new constitution of the Missionary Society was adopted. The most noticeable change is in the designated object of the society, which is said to be "charitable and religious; designed to diffuse more generally the blessings of education and Christianity, and to promote and support missionary schools and Christian missions throughout the United States and territories, and also in foreign countries."

It was resolved that the present Church periodicals be maintained, the book agents being instructed to aid the Pacific Christian Advocate to the extent of $4000, and to order its publication suspended if such aid shall prove insufficient. The New Orleans ADVOCATE and the Charleston Advocate were adopted as official, and the sum of $2000 was directed to be paid for the support of each. The book agents at New York were authorized, by the first of January, 1869, to start a weekly paper in Knoxville, Atlanta, or Nashville. A German theological and literary magazine, a German Catechism, and a first-class children's illustrated magazine, are to be published by the book agents in Cincinnati, and authority is given the book agents to start a daily Church paper if they shall deem it best.

The publishing interests of the Church are placed under the supervision of one book committee, consisting of fifteen ministers, who are empowered to fix the salaries of book agents, editors, and the bishops, and also to estimate the amounts to be appropriated for correspondence by the periodicals of the Church.

The book agents of New York are clothed with discretionary power to establish depositories in Maryland, Syracuse, and in such other places as may be deemed necessary. The charter of the Cincinnati Book Concern being about to expire by limitation in 1869, it was resolved to obtain a new charter under the laws of Ohio, and articles of incorporation were agreed upon.

For the better security of donations, bequests, grants, etc., made for benevolent purposes to the Methodist Episcopal Church, a Board of Trustees of the Methodist Episcopal Church, previously authorized was formally created, who shall hold all funds so received in trust for the church, and administer the same in accordance with the terms of the donation or bequest. The place of business of such trustees is to be Cincinnati, and articles of incorporation were approved, in accordance with which a charter is to be obtained from the State of Ohio.

As Sunday, April 4, 1869, will be the fiftieth anniversary of the Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, it was resolved that the day be celebrated as a missionary jubilee, to be devoted to reminiscence and thanksgiving, and to offerings for the erection of a missionhouse in New York. And as the year 1869 will be the one hundredth anniversary of the arrival in this country of Richard Boardman and Joseph Pilmore, John Wesley's first regular missionaries, it was resolved that the hundredth anniversary of their arrival be celebrated in connection with the missionary semi-centennial jubilee.

The Central Educational Board of Trustees was created, to be called the Board of Education of the Methodist Episcopal Church, for the purpose of administering the Centenary Educational Fund and the Sunday school Children's Fund. It consists of six ministers and six laymen, and is to organize under a charter yet to be obtained, empowering the Board to receive, hold, and convey real and personal estate, and to receive and administer bequests and trusts of every kind within the limits of the act creating it, and subject to the control of the General Conference.

Bishop Jones, of the African Methodist Episcopal Zion church, visited our General Conference accredited as a fraternal delegate from the General Conference of his church, which was in session in Washington, and bringing proffers of union between the two bodies. Resolutions were adopted expressive of the favorable reception which the proposition had met, and a commission of fourteen was appointed to confer with a commission of the African Methodist Episcopal Zion church, and report to the next General Conference. Subsequently the commission was intrusted with power to treat with any other Methodist church which may desire a like union.

During the session of the conference (May 14) a convention of laymen in the interest of the lay representation was held in Chicago, and an address to the General Conference was adopted. Previous to this petitions favoring lay representation, and signed by 25,376 laymen, had been presented to the conference, as also petitions against lay representation, signed by 1244 laymen. Two reports were made by the conference committee on this subject, the one favoring and the other opposing a change in the character of the representation in the legislative bodies of the Church. Neither report was adopted, but a plan of lay representation was drawn up, which is to be submitted to the votes of the members (male and female) of the Church above twenty-one years of age in June, 1869, and to the votes of ministers at the next following sessions of their Annual Conferences; the results to be reported to the next General Conference.

In addition to the introduction of the mission conferences heretofore spoken of, the Arkansas and Missouri Conference has been divided, the East Baltimore Conference has given to the Baltimore Conference the Maryland portion of its former territory, and the Pennsylvania portion to the formation of the Central Pennsylvania Conference. The Wilmington Conference is formed from the Philadelphia Conference, and includes the eastern shore of Maryland and Virginia, and all of Delaware. The Central New York is made up chiefly from the former Oneida Conference, with some portion of the Black River Conference. Several other variations have been made in boundary lines, but none changing the conferences greatly. The number of Annual Conferences is now seventy-one.

A constitution of the Church Extension Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church was adopted, and a board of managers, consisting of thirty-five ministers and thirty laymen, chosen. A commission of ministers and laymen was appointed to consider the expediency of erecting a central publishing house in the city of New York.

Numerous directions were given with regard to administration, which we need not here quote. Among them, the most important is one making it the duty of the preachers in charge, after giving certificates to members removing from their pastorate, to give notice of the fact to the pastors of the charges within the bounds of which such persons will thereafter reside.

The Committee on Revisals reported a number of changes in the discipline. The most important of those which were adopted have been duly chronicled in our report of the General Conference proceedings.

Audience with Victoria.

About six levees are held a year. It takes a hundred men three weeks to prepare the rooms. Everything is measured by the inexorable law of etiquette. The dress is prescribed; the material, the length of the trains, the mode of dressing the hair, and the style of the garments.

The throne room is a right royal room. There is not a seat in it except the throne and the gilded chair at the foot. On a platform reached by three steps, on a crimson carpet, spattered with gold, stands a gilt Gothic chair surmounted by a crown. This is the throne. It is covered with a canopy of crimson velvet, trimmed with heavy gold lace. On the top of the canopy is a golden cushion, on which rests a larger gold crown. The throne room is very long, nearly two hundred feet. Running the whole length is a heavy iron fence, full five feet high, capped with crimson velvet.

The great throng below at a given signal, come up the stairway. They enter the great audience room that opens into the throne room. The audience room is very gorgeous with satin hangings, radiant with vermillion and gold. When the signal is given below the rush commences. Her Majesty is painfully prompt. At the exact moment she comes out of her royal closet, and takes her stand on the lower step of the throne. On the signal being given her Majesty's ministers, with the foreign ambassadors, enter from the private door, file singly before the Queen, bow, and take their station in the centre of the room, where they remain. The crowd is admitted one by one. The party passes up the narrow pathway to the place where the Queen stands, makes a low bow, and then backs down the whole length of the room. The lady can not turn her back on the Queen, nor take up her train. It is etiquette for the ministers and ambassadors, who occupy the centre of the room, to lift the train and pass it from one to another while the lady backs down to the door.

The presentation lasts about one minute. It costs months of labor and anxiety, and great expense. The finery will be worn on no other occasion. But the party has been "presented at court," and will tell it to her children's children. When the Queen holds court, it lasts just one hour. During the whole time she stands like a statue—as cold, as insensible. She neither bows nor speaks. The mass file before her as if she were hewn out of stone.

An Exquisite Retort.

It is related of Bunyan that in the height of his usefulness as a preacher in and about London, the bishop of the metropolis had a curiosity to see him. The coachman of the bishop was a frequent hearer of Bunyan, and the bishop had told him that whenever, in riding out of town, he should chance to meet Mr. Bunyan, he wished to see and speak with him. One day as John was driving his lordship in a portion of the suburbs sufficiently retired for the bishop to gratify his curiosity, Bunyan was seen plodding his way on foot, with a bundle under his arm, going out to preach somewhere in the outskirts. "Your Grace," said John, "here comes Mr. Bunyan."

"Ah," said the bishop, "hold up the horses when you overtake him, and let me speak to him."

They were soon at his side, the horses were checked, and the bishop bowed, saying: "Mr. Bunyan, I believe."

"Yes, your Grace," says Mr. Bunyan, courteously responding.

"Mr. Bunyan," said the Bishop, "I am told that you are very ingenious as an interpreter of the Scripture, and I have a difficult passage in mind, about which the critics are in dispute, and of which I would be glad to have your view. It is St. Paul's message to Timothy: 'The cloak that I left at Troas with Carpus, when thou comest bring with thee; and the books, especially the parchments.'"

"Well, your Grace," replied Bunyan, "it is allowed, I believe by all, that Timothy was a Bishop of the primitive church, and Paul, as all agree, was a traveling preacher. It occurs to me that this may have been designed in future days to teach that in primitive times the Bishops were accustomed to wait on the traveling preacher, whereas in our day the Bishops ride in their coaches, and the traveling preachers, like Paul, are 'minded to go on foot.'"

The kingdom of Christ advances by conquests, which instead of desolating fields, making widows and orphans, breeding crime and woe, causes the desert to rejoice and blossom as the rose, changes the wilderness to a fruitful field, and carries gladness and peace to every human heart.

Postage on the Advocate.

Inquiries come to us from subscribers wishing to know the regular rate of postage on a weekly paper. Some of these inform us what the postmasters are charging them, and we find it to be three or four times the lawful rate. We state for their information that the postage is only twenty cents a year, or five cents a quarter, payable in advance, and no postmaster has a right to charge more than this.

Information wanted by David Ross, Shreveport, Louisiana, about his mother, Kitty Ross, and his brother and sisters, William West, Ellen Adrey, Mary Jenkins, and Georgiana Ross, all of whom lived in Charles county, Maryland.

Rev. Dr. Newman, the editor of the ADVOCATE, who was one of the party of clergymen who made an excursion to the terminus of the great Pacific railroad, has returned to Chicago. From that city he will proceed to the East. His address for a few weeks will be Mechanicsville, Saratoga county, New York.

FROM NATCHITOCHES. — Rev. E. Hayward writes that he has formed a new circuit, and put Brother E. Turner, one of the local preachers, in charge of the same. On the thirty-first ultimo he visited one of the appointments, and after preaching to them, baptized twenty children and fourteen adults.

DENTISTRY.—We are reliably informed that Dr. R. F. Wright, who is a first-class dentist, will attend to work in his line for a few weeks at one-half his usual rates. This is a favorable opportunity of having dentistry done. His office is at 153 Customhouse street, between Dauphine and Burgundy.

ARTHUR'S HOME MAGAZINE.—Among the contents of this magazine for July is a new series of temperance stories by the author of "Ten Nights in a Barroom;" Sir Joshua Reynolds; Carrie's Coming Out; Toward the Sunshine; The Waters Out; Regret, by Mrs. M. E. Rockwell; When the Ship Came In; The Training of a Child; Acting Proverb; Poison of the Rattlesnake; Fredrica Bremer; The Hollands, by Virginia F. Townsend; besides fashion plates, music, etc.

Published by T. S. Arthur, 811 Chestnut street, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. A new volume commences with July. Now is the time to subscribe. Price $2 a year in advance.

THE UNITED STATES MUSICAL REVIEW.—A monthly magazine. This has been called "The Prince of Musical Monthlies." It is a large magazine, and filled with such matter as can not fail to please the musical world. Each number contains several pieces of choice music. The number for June has four pieces—two songs and two instrumental pieces, and yet the subscription price for a whole year is only two dollars. Surely subscribing for this is a good way of obtaining choice music at a cheap rate. Address J. L. Peters, music publisher, Postoffice box 5429, New York.

THE GALAXY, which is taking so high a place among the magazines of our country, has among its contents for July "Osborne's Revenge," "Our Great Diamonds," "A Few Words About the Nerves," by W. A. Hammond, M. D.; "The National Prospects and Resources," "Thought," "Buchdale," "My Field," etc. Published by Sheldon & Co., 500 Broadway, New York. Price $4 a year: July begins a new volume. ### United States Senators.

We have a few words on this important subject for the ears of the General Assembly.

Imprimis, the ADVOCATE is not the partisan of any particular man. It does, however, represent the sentiments of a large portion of the Republican party of Louisiana. It will report to these readers faithfully the actions of their representatives here, and warn them in time if ignorance, stupidity, ambition, or bribery should appear to be endangering the best interests, or defeating the real wishes of the people.

We now say to Republicans, there is danger, if rumor may be believed, that improper undue influences and may be attempted to be used upon your representatives here to bias their choice of United States Senators. Money is spoken of in such connection as to seriously affect the character of the party. We do not believe for a moment that any man can buy his way into the United States Senate. We have too high a regard for the gentlemen who represent the Republican party in the General Assembly. But the alarming fact is that such a thing should be said or even thought without exciting such intense indignation and odium against the parties charged with such efforts as to destroy forever all their hopes of success until the damaging accusations should be completely investigated and disproved.

We desire, as do all true Republicans, the selection of two gentlemen for these distinguished positions whose integrity is unquestioned, whose ability is commensurate with the high responsibilities of the office; and whose standing as Republicans has been tried by time and illustrated by distinguished services. Such men would add dignity to their position, carry weight with their counsels, and be an honor to the State and Congress.

Louisiana needs now all the force and ability which she can command in the national councils; all the forecast, wisdom, business skill, and statesmanship combined which she can procure to obtain the assistance which her languishing interests and struggling people need. We want no man for Senator who goes there to "make money." We want men whose character, position, and past record will elevate them far above such gross and groveling motives. There are such men. Let the people watch their representatives closely, and hold them to a strict accountability.

The La Crosse Democrat on Chase.

Our Democratic friends are not happy. Their chief difficulty is the choice of a candidate for President. For want of good material in their own ranks they have talked of Judge Chase.

The Democrat thus discourses on this matter:

Of course no Democrat can support Salmon P. Chase. An Abolitionist, who, for years before the election of Lincoln, was engaged in deceiving and misleading the people upon the slavery question, who was a member of Lincoln's cabinet at the inauguration of the series of arbitrary measures in violation of the Constitution which characterized his administration, who is the author of our immense debt, with its exemption of bondholders from taxation, who got the legal tender act passed, which compelled the soldiers and the people to take greenbacks, while the bondholders receive gold, who is the father of the national banking system, by which certain favored capitalists are allowed to deposit their bonds in the currency bureau at Washington, and receive, without expense, ninety per cent in amount of bank notes, still owning their bonds, and receiving gold interest on them from the government, and lending or using to shave paper or speculate with the bank notes thus obtained, and thereby making double or treble interest on their bonds, and who is to-day, for aught that appears to the contrary, in favor of the reconstruction measures of the Rump, and the consequent Africanization and destruction of our whole Southern land.

All these movements to find some man outside the Democratic party to run on the Democratic ticket are utterly futile. None but mere gamblers for spoils would engage in it. Set him down, who would give it the slightest countenance, as no more of a Democrat than the man whom he would thus favor as the Democratic nominee.

We notice in many quarters the Chase speculations, and the following from Albany attracts particular attention:

ALBANY, May 29.—The assembling of the Senate as a court of impeachment and the meeting of the Canal Board have called together a number of prominent Democrats. The movement for Judge Chase for President is the general topic of conversation, and Governor Seymour has expressed himself in favor of giving it respectful consideration, and his views were seconded by many influential Democrats. The New York delegation will be called together about the tenth of June for consultation.

The meteor darts athwart the heavens, and then its light goes out forever; while stars of apparently inferior magnitude still continue to gladden night by their steady rays. So false and base men in the Church, like the meteor, may attract attention for a time and then go down in exposed infamy; and yet there are fixed stars, jewels of the Master, whose steady rays shall gladden Zion, and direct the wayfarer to the New Jerusalem.

General Hancock with the Northern Democracy.

We copy again from the illustrious compeer and model of our neighbor the Times, the La Crosse Democrat, its views upon General Hancock as a Presidential candidate. Crescent and Times please copy:

HANCOCK MEETINGS. — We from time to time hear a great deal about Hancock meetings, and it is said that Generals Steedman, Gordon Granger, and other military men are now perambulating New Jersey, conferring with leading Democratic politicians, in the interest of General Hancock. They are fooling away their time and money. The Democratic people turn away from all such movements with disgust. They are not to be led by the nose by any of the shoulder-strap gentry. They are going to have a civilian and a positive Democrat, for their candidat, and such a candidate they can and will elect.

The Day Book, which is in New York, has the means of knowing all about these Hancock meetings and movements, and hits them off as follows:

The Monitor (Tenn.) says:

A large meeting of Democrats in New York city two nights since recommended Hancock for President and Groesbeck for Vice-President. Pendleton's prospects appear to be on the wane.

There are two items of news in this paragraph which are very new in this region. There has been no such "large meeting of Democrats" in this city to recommend Hancock for President. And Pendleton is so far from being on the wane, that almost the last act of the Assembly of New York was the passage of a resolution substantially indorsing his plan. The large meeting spoken of was in a bed room in a hotel, with, at most, seven persons present, chatting about Hancock over a whisky bottle. But this is the way presidential news is manufactured in these degenerate times.

A Letter from the Murdered Sinclair.

The following letter from Mr. Sinclair, who was recently murdered in cold blood in Northern Louisiana, was received a few days since by Rev. Mr. Diossy. He had not visited the town to which the letter was directed for several weeks, hence the delay in its reception.

The letter, which was written in a fine business hand, shows us something of the character of Mr. Sinclair and the work in which he was engaged.

But being more intelligent than some of his white friends, and being able to present arguments which they could not answer, his influence over the colored voters was greater than theirs, therefore he must be killed to get him out of the way:

MONROE, April 8, 1868.

Rev. R. K. Diossy:

DEAR SIR—The reception of your letter on the seventh instant was to me a most agreeable surprise as well as a source of great satisfaction and encouragement. It came just in the right time to sustain my despairing soul. My school now numbers ninety scholars, from whom I derive but a very scanty support. I have looked for some time for assistance from the government, but have received none as yet. I am told by the bureau agent here that the government no longer furnishes aid to the teachers of colored schools.

For a month (in January) I kept up the school in my house, but as the school began to increase in number I removed, by the consent of the board of trustees, to the Methodist Episcopal church. Here I am at present without any of the necessary articles of a school, except such as a bench-desk capable of allowing three scholars to write on and a table or two furnished me by the parents of the pupils sent to me. My school is seated on planks placed across blocks and pieces of wood that are suitable for raising them to a sufficient height above the floor. I have obtained a few spelling books from the Bureau, but they are of a kind whose merits are entirely superseded by Webster's. I have not introduced them to any great extent, preferring Webster's as the best for instruction. The advancement of the scholars has been considerable. When I began to teach last September there were not a dozen children in Monroe who could read intelligently; now there are several. I have classes in the following branches well advanced: reading, writing, spelling, geography, arithmetic, and a class in grammar just started. I have the following named reading classes: First, Second, Third, and Fourth Readers. I have advanced over forty pupils from their A, B, C's to the Second and Third Readers, and they are now studying arithmetic and writing since September last.

I have accepted the nomination of Representative from my district, and if elected will be obliged when the State Legislature shall set to leave my school.

I hope that a teacher more able than myself may be found to carry forward the good work. The religious and moral instruction which I am endeavoring to impart, and which you justly observed in your letter to be of the greatest importance, I am endeavoring to push forward with all the strength and energy God has given me. I have a sabbath school of from fifty to sixty scholars and a temperance society for the youth styled "The Vanguard of Freedom." But the work is too great for me. People of color stand and look at me with wonder and astonishment. Poor slavery crushed souls, the lights and blessings of freedom are above their comprehension. Well, I might write as much more, but when you come your eyes will convince you more than reports.

I am yours respectfully.

FRANKLIN SINCLAIR.

Reforming the world is like patching an old coat, which will soon need another patch; but if it were not for reformers the world would always be out at elbows.

Letter from Washington.

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 11, 1868.

EDITOR NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE:

We are here, as you are in New Orleans, in a city muss over the mayor's election — two Boards of Council claim authority to govern the city. How changed! A few years since Mayor Magruder requested "James the Last" to order up marines to obey his commands. They did so, and fired on and killed some persons about the election polls, not the Know-Nothings who were aimed at but the mayor's friends. How strange that this same Dr. Magruder, a popular man and a physician in his ward, should be defeated in the election last week by John F. Cook, a colored man. The glory or shame of this state of things belongs instrumentally to the people who worked up the rebellion to enlarge the borders of slavery.

Congress is working day and night on the tax bill. An immense job that, requiring more study, experience, and wisdom than that branch of legislation usually receives.

The Chinese embassy continues to attract interest, and deservedly so. It is impossible to comprehend the extent and grandeur of the results of this strange national movement. Christianity shall gather as rich fruits as commerce from the confluence of these two immense streams of ancient and modern civilization. What glory gilds the future of our Christian nation.

Some modification in the political tone of the National Republican of this city has taken place recently. It is in more aggressive sympathy with Congress. The Chronicle still labors hard as heretofore in that work.

The strawberry season is at its height. The berries are sold as low as five cents a quart. Strawberry festivals abundant.

In the Methodist churches there is an effort making to compact the denomination here for mutual prosperity in the different charges by holding a general lovefeast quarterly; also to deliver public addresses in connection with detailed accounts of the success of any movement premotive of the object. It is also proposed to hold a camp meeting midway between Washington and Baltimore on the railroad. A camp ground thus convenient to both cities has long been needed, and will no doubt command the interest of the Church in this section. The late arrangement, merging the East Baltimore into the Old Baltimore Conference will add much strength to the latter in ministers and territory.

The appointment of Rev. John Lanahan to the Book room at New York deprives Baltimore Conference of one of its strongest and most active and influential members. It is a serious loss to the conference.

I met Colonel Sturgiss yesterday. He is hard at work for the Galveston branch of the Pacific Railroad. Your city will have to stir whatever of life remains to parallel a work of such magnitude as that, and one which must compete with your mighty river for the vast commerce heretofore enjoyed.

MORDECAI.

[For the New Orleans Advocate.]

NEW ORLEANS, June 13, 1868.

MR. EDITOR:

"What will you take to drink?" united to a significant toss of the head and an unmistakable angular glance from the eye toward well-filled decanters is a question and an action of almost universal occurrence in every house in our beloved republic.

And then comes the step up to the side-board or table, the passing of the sugar-dish and water pitcher, the crash and the whirl of spoon in the tumbler, the decanting of the stimulant, the pause of anticipation as the glass is held momentarily in the hand, succeeded by the raising of the same to the lips, with the usual accompaniments of crooked elbow, thrown back head, open mouth, and "here's luck"—all ending by the final smack of satisfaction as the empty goblet is set down to make its moist round mark on the waiter.

The imbibing of alcoholic liquids is too general among us. They are considered a necessity of life, a certain panacea for all ills, a crowning sheaf to all blessings; good in sickness and in health; good in summer to dispel the heat and in winter to dispel the cold; good to help on work, and more than good to help on a frolic. So good are they considered that their attributed merits are fixed by pleasant names. The first dram of the morning is an "eye opener," duly followed by the "eleven o'clocker" and the "four o'clocker," while the very last is a "night cap;" after which as one lays himself in sheets he is supposed to drink no more that day, unless, indeed, he is unexpectedly called up at night, when of course he prudently fortifies himself against taking cold. Do not imagine that these are all the drinks of the day, by no means. The decanter and bottle stand ready at all times on the sideboard, or secreted in some nook; if a friend calls he is welcomed by the "social glass;" if one departs, a pleasant journey is tendered in a "flowing bumper;" if a bargain is made, it is rounded by a liquid "clincher;" if a wedding comes off "a long and prosperous life" is drank to the happy pair; if a funeral ensues, then alcoholic mixtures are a source of "consolation in affliction." Drinking all the way from the cradle to the grave seems to be the grand rule. Dinah, the black nurse, as she swaddles the new-born infant, takes her dram; and Uncle Julius, the aged sexton, with the weak and watery eyes, and bent, rheumatic body, soon as he has thrown the last spadeful of earth upon the little mound over the remains of a fellow mortal turns to the neighboring bush, on which hangs his tattered jacket, for a "swig" at the bottle; after which he gathers up his tools, and slowly and painfully totters homeward, to attend to his duties to the living. Every person, even Congressmen, drink; and what is queer no one can fix the precise date at which they will leave off, and attend more closely to the vital interests of the nation. The deacon drinks, and it is said the parson, that good old man, after finishing a round of social visits, not unfrequently returns to his own dwelling so "mellowed" by the soothing influences of the "cordial" welcomes of his parishioners as to really feel that this is not such a very bad world after all.

Before we proceed further we wish to present a few facts concerning alcohol.

Alcohol, as extracted from fermented liquor, was unknown to the world until about the year 1000. When this process was first accomplished in Arabia, no person knew what this product of distillation was; nor was there any language that had for it even a name. They, however, called it alcohol; and that is now the chemical name in every country. This word had previously been used in Arabia as the name of a fine powder which the ladies used to give a brilliance to their complexions. Alcohol was soon ascertained to be a poison, and no one then thought of using it as a drink. About the year 1230 it began to be used in the south of Europe as a medicine, and from thence its use gradually extended for that purpose over various parts of the civilized world. Judging from its immediate effects it was thought to increase life, and was denominated aqua vitæ, water of life. Theoricus, not long after, wrote a treatise upon its wonderful curative power, in which he says: "It sloweth age, it strengtheneth youth, it helpeth digestion, it cutteth flegme, it abandoneth melancholie, it relisheth the heart, it lightneth the mind, it quickeneth the spirits, it cureth the hydropsia, it healeth the strangarie, it pounceth the stone, it expelleth gravell, it puffeth away ventositie, it keepeth and preserveth the head from whirling, the eyes from dazzling, the tongue from lisping, the mouth from snaffling, the teeth from chattering, and the throat from rattling; it keepeth the weason from stifling, the stomach from wambling, and the throat from swelling; it keepeth the hands from shivering, the sinews from shrinking, the veins from crumbling, the bones from aching, and the marrow from soaking."

Such were supposed to be its wonderful virtues, and many began to think they could not live without it. Ulstadius, another writer, ascribes to it this most singular praise. He says: "It will burn being kindled." And this he considers as demonstrative of its peculiar excellence. It was not, therefore, strange with such views of its power as a medicine, that men should begin to conclude that it must also do good in health, especially when they were peculiarly exposed and under severe labor, nor that they should introduce the use of it for the purpose of preventing as well as curing diseases. This was the case, particularly in the mines in Hungary; and afterward, in 1581, it was introduced by the English as a kind of cordial for their soldiers, while engaged in war in the Netherlands, and finally spread as a common beverage among all nations.

No nation ever adopted its use without its producing an untold amount of crime and woe, more fatal than the most malignant pestilence; yet until within a brief period, men were blind to the evil, and, consequently, everywhere increased its use, under the idea that they were promoting their own benefit. Some of the reasons for this delusion, and the causes why the quantity used was constantly increasing, are given by an intelligent writer. "Such is the nature of alcohol, that its first effect on the human system is a quickening of action, animation, excitement. This, by a fundamental law of our nature, is a source of pleasure. This present pleasure men mistake for real good. It also arouses for a moment the reserved and dormant energies of the system which are not needed, and were not designed for ordinary healthful action, but were intended for special emergencies; and which can not be drawn out and used on ordinary occasions without necessarily shortening human life. This awakening of dormant energy men mistake for an increase of real, permanent strength.

"The system, by this poison, having been over excited becomes deranged, and having been over worked without any new strength communicated it is of course weakened, and therefore soon flags, becomes tired, and is exhausted. Now, according to another fundamental law, there is pain, languor, and inexpressible uneasiness spread through the system, as suffering nature under the awful abuse which has been practiced upon her cries out for help. A man can not thus chafe, irritate, and exhaust his system, and not afterward feel uneasiness any more than he can put his hand into the fire and not feel pain. He violates a natural law and must find the way of the transgressors to be hard. Hence arise two motives to drink again. One is to obtain the past pleasure, and the other is to remove the present pain. But as the system is unstrung and partly worn out, and is also lower down than it was before, the same quantity will not the next time raise it up so high, or cause the wearied organs to move so briskly. Of course it will not fully answer the purpose; will not give so much present pleasure, or produce so much effect as before. Hence the motive to increase the quantity, and for the same reason in future to increase it more, and still more. As every repetition increases the difficulty, and also throws new obstacles in the way of its removal, the temptation to increase the quantity grows stronger and stronger. The natural life of the system constantly diminishes, and of course in order to seem to live, what there is must be more and more highly roused, till in one-half, one quarter, or one-eighth of the proper time the whole is exhausted, and the man sinks prematurely to the grave.

"There is another principle which tends also strongly to the same result. The more any man partakes of this unnatural pleasure which alcohol occasions, the less susceptible he becomes of the natural and innocent pleasures occasioned by the use of nourishing food and drink, by the view and contemplation of the works of creation and Providence, by the exercise of the social affections, and the discharge of the various duties of life."

From the above quotation it is evident that the deranged and exhausted state of the system from which the uneasiness when not under the excitement of alcohol springs, and which causes the hankering or thirst after the poison, is not a natural state, nor is that appetite a natural appetite.

Such are some of the reasons why men who begin to drink alcohol, and receive from it nothing but injury, nevertheless not only continue to drink it, but to drink it in greater and greater quantity.

Let us now consider how it causes death. Alcohol is a substance which is, in its nature, unfit for the purpose of nutrition. It is not in the power of the animal economy to decompose it, and change it into blood or flesh or bones or anything by which the human body is or can be nourished, strengthened, and supported. When taken into the stomach it is sucked up by absorbent vessels and carried into the blood, and with that is circulated through the whole system, and, to a certain extent, is then thrown off again. But it is alcohol when taken, it is alcohol in the stomach, it is alcohol in the arteries and veins and heart and lungs and brain and among all the nerves and tissues and fibres of the whole body, and it is alcohol when, after having pervaded and passed through the whole system it is thrown off again. Give it even to a dog, and take the blood from his foot and distil it, and you have alcohol, the same which the dog drank. Take the blood from the arm, the foot, or the head of the man who drinks alcohol and distil that blood and you have alcohol. You may take it from the brain, strong enough on the application of fire in an instant to blaze. Not a blood vessel however minute, not a thread of the smallest nerve in the whole animal machinery escapes its influence. It enters the organs of the nursing mother, which prepare the delicate food for the sustenance and growth of her child, having through its whole course produced, not only on the mother but also on the child, the appropriate effects of the drunkard's poison. This is a reason why, after the mother has taken alcoholic beverages, the babe, although before restless, sleeps all night like a drunkard, and a reason also why such children, if they live, often have an appetite for spirit, and are so much more likely than other children to become drunkards. This is a reason also why, when the parents have been in the habit of freely taking alcoholic beverages, their children are so much smaller and less healthy than other children; have less keenness and strength of eyesight, firmness of nerve, or ability of body and mind to withstand the attacks of disease and the vicissitudes of climates and seasons; and also a reason why they have less inclination and less talent for great bodily and mental aehievements. By the operation of laws which no man can repeal or withstand, the iniquities of the fathers are thus naturally visited upon the children from generation to generation.

Were the human body transparent, and the operations of its organs in sustaining life visible, every one might see that nature itself teaches that the drinking of alcoholic beverages can not be continued by any person without hastening his or her death.

The receptacle for food is the stomach and intestines. From these, after being changed first into chyme, and then into chyle, it is taken up by absorbent vessels and carried into the blood, and conveyed to the right side of the heart. From that it is sent to the lungs, and by coming into contact with the air, and taking out of it what it needs, in order with what it has to nourish the body, it is sent back again to the left side of the heart. From that it is sent in arteries or tubes, prepared for that purpose, to all parts of the body, for the purpose of carrying the nourishment which it contains and which each part needs to its proper place. Along on the lines of these tubes or canals, through which the blood with its treasure flows, is a vast multitude of little organs or waiters, whose office is each one to take out of the blood as it comes along that kind and quantity of nourishment which it needs for its support, and also for the support of that part of the body which is committed to its care. And although exceedingly minute and delicate, they are endowed by their Creator with the wonderful power of doing this, and also of obtaining from or expelling and throwing back into the common mass what is unsuitable or what they do not want, to be carried to some other place where it may be needed; or if it is not needed anywhere and is good for nothing, to be thrown out of the body as a nuisance.

For instance, the organs placed at the end of the fingers when the blood comes there take out of it what they need for their support, and also what is needed to make finger-nails; while they will cautiously abstain from or repel that which will only make hair, and let it go on to the head. And the organs on the head carefully take out that which they need for their support, and also that which will make hair, or in common language, cause it to grow; while they will cautiously abstain from that which is good for nothing, except to make eyeballs, and let it go to the eyes, and even help it on. And the organs about the eye will take that and work it up into eyes, or cause them to grow. And so throughout the whole. And there is among all the millions and millions of these workers day and night, all diligent in business, the most entire and everlasting harmony. And there is also the most delicate and wonderful sympathy. If one member suffer all the members instinctively suffer with it, and if one member rejoice all the members rejoice with it.

And when the blood has gotten out to the extremities, and been to all parts of the system, and left its treasures along on the way as they were needed, for freely it has received and freely it gives, then there is another set of tubes or channels prepared to take the blood, and with it what was not needed, or good for nothing, or had been used till it was worn out, back to the right side of the heart. From this it is sent again with its load to the lungs, for the purpose by expiration of throwing off what is not needed, and what, if retained, would only be a burden and do mischief; and also by inspiration of taking in a new store and setting out again on its journey around the system. And to give it good speed, the heart, like a steam engine, worked, not by fires which men can kindle, but by the breath of the Almighty, keeps constantly moving day and night, summer and winter, through storms and sunshine, sickness and health, as long as life doth last.

All the organs of the human body have as much to do as is consistent with permanently healthful action and with the longest continuance of human life, when men take nothing but suitable food and drink. And if, in addition to this, you take alcoholic beverages and thus throw upon them the additional labor of rejecting and throwing off the poison, and at the same time as by the taking of it you certainly will weaken and exhaust their energies, and you necessarily shorten their duration, and commit suicide as really as if you did it with arsenic, a pistol, or a halter. It also greatly increases the violence of diseases which arise from other causes, and often produces death in cases in which had not alcohol been used a cure might have been easily and speedily effected. Nor is this all. There is another set of organs, the nerves, whose office is to furnish sensibility to the human system.* For this purpose they are spread over the surface of the whole body, and in such vast numbers and variety that you can not stick into the skin the point of even the finest needle and not strike some of them, and thus occasion pain. They seem to form the link between the body and the mind, and to be the medium through which each reciprocally and instantly acts upon the other. Of course whatever affects them affects not only the body but also the soul, and the influence which one has upon the other.

Their seat is the brain. From this they derive excitement, and power to communicate it to all parts of the system. And in order to furnish this excitement the brain itself must be excited. And what it needs for this purpose is that, and that only, which is furnished by arterial blood when men take nothing but suitable food and drink, exercise, rest, and sleep. For this excitement it eagerly waits, and this it joyfully receives, and cheerfully, with the rapidity almost of lightning, communicates to every part spreading a glow of animation, and making even existence a source of constant and exquisite delight. But as it stands waiting to receive, and instantly and joyfully to communicate the bread and milk of Heaven, you throw in alcoholic beverages, and thus instead of bread, give it serpents; instead of milk, scorpions; and they go hissing and darting their serpent, scorpion-like influence through the whole man, body and soul, turning husbands into demons, and fathers into fiends.

Alcoholic beverage so affects the understanding that moral considerations are less clearly perceived; and it so affects the heart that moral obligation is less powerfully felt, It causes the conscience to lie more dormant, and the imagination to be more extensively and deeply polluted and polluting. It corrupts the very source and springs of moral action, and brings a man peculiarly in all respects under the power of the Devil. Mental iniquity, from which the mind, when not poisoned, instinctively recoils, becomes when it is, the element of its delicious revel; and crimes, from the thought of which it before started back with abhorrence, it now commits with greediness.

Being determined to battle for the suppression of this monster evil I feel inclined to write farther, but I shall reserve the remainder of my ammunition for next week, remaining,

Respectfully,

FREDERICK K. HYDE.

Not Reconstructed Yet.

The Times indulges as follows in the old strain. We commend it to the perusal of those in the North who imagine that the rebels here have accepted the situation:

The New York World greatly mistakes the temper of the South if it imagines that any consideration for partisan policy whatever will influence it to look leniently upon negro equality. The idea of such a sacrifice of manhood and social liberty will not be tolerated for a moment. We may groan and struggle in our chains, but it is out of human power to make us embrace them.

Andrew Johnson.

We have handled Johnson candidly, as we endeavor to handle everything we have to do with.

We have looked upon him as a demagogue, and every observing person who will take the trouble to review his career will acknowledge him such.

A person who has been so changeable and vacillating in his course as has Andrew Johnson during the past few years, does not deserve nor should he receive the confidence and commendation of the Democracy.

Since the time he accepted the appointment from Lincoln of military governor, and virtual dictator of Tennessee, he has not accomplished a single thing that should endear him to the Democracy.—La Crosse Democrat.

When Will They Put You in the Stocks, Father?

In one of our lovely villages, where trees, birds, and flowers united in proclaiming the beauties of the country, the beershop at the "corner" was constantly producing its usual fruit of sorrow and sadness in the homes of the cottagers. The efforts of the clergyman, the schoolmaster, and the sunday school teachers were constantly being marred by the bad influence of the beershop.

One poor drunkard—once a bright-eyed little fellow in the village school, who but for the evil example of an intemperate father might have become a clever and useful man—who had so often been fined by the magistrate for being drunk, was at length put to the village stocks, close by the gate of the fine old church.

It was a very sad sight. The villagers gathered round, looking on, some in pity, some in derision, and others in disgust. The beadle, full of his office, was a prominent figure in the group.

One little girl, who had hold of her father's hand, inquired, "Father, why have they put him in the stocks?"

"Because he gets drunk," replied the father.

"When will they put you in the stocks, father, for you get drunk, you know?" innocently asked the child.

How many thousands of poor children are there who would rejoice if the "drink" were banished from the land!—Band of Hope Review.

Lightning Strokes.

Some time ago a gentleman of our acquaintance happened to stand in the presence of a numerous audience with a battery of fifteen large Leyden jars charged beside him. Through some awkwardness on his part he touched a wire which he had no right to touch, and the discharge of the battery went through his body. Here life was absolutely blotted out for a very sensible interval without a trace of pain. In a second or two consciousness returned; the recipient saw himself in the presence of his audience and apparatus, and by the help of these external facts immediately concluded that he had received the battery discharge. His intellectual consciousness of his position was restored with exceeding rapidity, but not so his optical consciousness. The appearance which his body presented to him was that of a number of separate pieces. The arms, for example, ware detached from the trunk, and seemed suspended in the air. In fact, memory and the power of reasoning appeared to be complete long before the optic nerve was restored to healthy action. But what we wish chiefly to dwell upon here is the absolute painlessness of the shock; and there can not be a doubt that to a person struck dead by lightning the passage from life to death occurs without consciousness being in the least degree implicated. It is an abrupt stoppage of sensation, unaccompanied by a pang.—Harper's.

Caste the Other Side Up.—Bishop Thomson in his address before the General Conference on India gave this good illustration of the absurdity of American caste:

In India one feels the meanness of caste. In one of our journeys, while cooking breakfast by the roadside one morning, I was moving toward some little children, whose mother was cooking probably for some coolies at work on the road, with some presents from our table in my hand, when Dr. Butler suddenly arrested me, saying that my touch was pollution, that nothing would be eaten that I bore; that my foot set within the circle where the woman was cooking would defile everything within it. Here I was with an Anglo-Saxon skin on my face, a human soul in my breast, an American passport in my portfolio, "brought up standing" before a poor, ignorant, black, half-mendicant Hindoo.

An Analysis of Food.—It is stated that a hungry man who sits down before a pound of beefsteak, tender, juicy, and an inch thick, and eats it, will find upon analysis that sixty-five per cent of his steak was water; that eighteen per cent will go to give him an aldermanic fleshiness, and that fourteen per cent is assigned to warm him, and make him feel comfortable on a cold day. Of the flesh-forming ingredients, according to Dr. Playfair, every one, on an average, requires ninety-two pounds annually to keep up a proper bodily condition. Cheese is a great flesh-former—thirty per cent. Two ounces of flesh-formers per diem will keep a man alive if he is not forced to labor, but hard labor requires six, or the body will run short of starch and sugar, and go behind hand in health and strength. In one hundred parts of wheat there are ten pounds of flesh, but there is nearly double the amount in the same quantity of oatmeal.

There is a difference between happiness and wisdom—he that thinks himself the happiest man really is so; but he that thinks himself the wisest man is most generally found to be the biggest fool.

Fearless Preaching—Give me one hundred preachers who fear nothing but sin, and desire nothing but God, and I care not a straw whether they be clergymen or laymen; such alone will shake the gates of hell, and set up the kingdom of heaven upon earth.—Wesley.

Grand Ratification Meeting

REPUBLICAN MASSES IN LAFAYETTE SQUARE.

THE SOUTHERN HEART FIRED.

POPULARITY OF GRANT AND COLFAX.

Republican People Aroused

Eloquent Speeches and Patriotic Resolutions.

MUSIC, BANNERS, AND DECORATIONS.

The grand ratification meeting of Republicans Wednesday in Lafayette Square was one of the most gratifying assemblages of the loyal masses ever convened in this city. Bands were playing, banners streaming, fireworks illuminating, and when the hour arrived for the announcement of the officers to preside, Hon. Oscar J. Dunn, the Lieutenant Governor elect, as Chairman of the Executive Committee, proposed the name of Governor H. C. Warmoth for President, which was welcomed with deafening applause. He also announced a list of Vice-Presidents and Secretaries, which was adopted as the organization of the meeting.

For President.

H. C. WARMOTH.

Governor Warmoth made a brief speech, and introduced Judge W. W. Howe, who spoke as follows:

Speech of Judge Howe.

Fellow Citizens: The place in which we meet to-night is peculiarly appropriate and the occasion is one of the deepest interest. We have met in Lafayette Square, named after a gallant young soldier of our first war, to ratify the nomination for President of the hero of our last war. Lafayette freely offered his fortune and his life in support of the declaration of independence of 1776, while General Grant stands to-day the chosen standard-bearer of the party who strive to carry that declaration of independence into full practical effect in 1868. Lafayette drew his sword for the doctrine of equality of all men before the law, and today General Grant is our leader in the great struggle to make that doctrine a living and dominant truth in the whole land. It is fit and proper that for such an occasion we should meet in such a place.

I need not weary you with dry discussion of dogmas to-night. We all know that the late war left the rebellious States without any legal governments. We know it because Andrew Johnson told us so in his proclamations of 1865. We all know that the Constitution of the United States requires the United States to guarantee a republican and of course a legal form of government to every State. We also are sure of this because Mr. Johnson told us so in his proclamations of 1865. We know that Mr. Johnson, instead of taking the true course, which was to allow the "United States" to act in the matter; that is, let Congress pass the necessary laws, the President execute them, and the supreme court interpret them in such cases as might properly come before it—we know that Mr. Johnson started on the wrong track, and undertook to be the "United States" all by himself, and to set up in those States such governments as suited his own ideas. We know that Congress (and we think wisely) took issue with him, declined to recognize his governments, and at last passed the reconstruction laws, under which at last we have a constitution of equal rights before the law.

By these events the lines have at last been sharply drawn, and so far as we of Louisiana are concerned the contest comes down to one point. On the one side we have the Republican party of the nation, with Grant at its head, pledged to protect us all in the enjoyment of equal rights to liberty, to franchise, to education, and to religion under our new constitution. On the other side we have the Democratic party, with nobody at its head at present, pledged by every fact of its history and every declaration of its principles to take away those rights. There could not be simpler issue. If you are for equality before the law for all men who have minds to be educated and souls to be saved you vote for Grant; if you are against such equal justice you vote against him.

Who is General Grant? I claim the privilege of answering this question, for I served under his command in the campaigns of Corinth and Vicksburg; and though my modest rank did not bring me probably to his notice, yet it gave me a chance to observe him. I observed his habits and his methods of action, and since the war has been over I have watched narrowly his course at Washington, and I say in all earnestness and honesty that I believe him to be the best candidate for the Presidency ever offered to the suffrages of the American people since the days of Washington.

And yet we are gravely told by the editors of the Democratic press (and you know they always speak the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth,) that Grant will not make a good President because he can not make a long and pretty speech. Well, if the only duty of the President of the United States is to talk there would be some force in the objection. But alas for our Democratic friends, we do not want a President to do our talking for us. We have plenty of young lawyers and politicians to do that. What we want in the White House is a man of action, not a man of words; a man who can seek and see the will of the people, especially as embodied in the laws of Congress, and then execute that will. Why the fact is that professional oratory sought for its own sake is about the cheapest and poorest thing in the world. The lesson of history is that oratory, as a trade, begins just where heroism leaves off. When I hear a man making a speech just for its own sake I always think of the story of the young man at a country party, who, on being introduced to a young lady, and not knowing exactly how to begin a conversation, started off in this way:

"Do you known anybody that would like to buy a shirt?"

"Why no," said she, "have you got one to sell?"

"No, oh no. I only said it for talk."

And one great curse of our country in its politics is that orators are always saying things "for talk." So far then as this objection to General Grant is concerned, I think it greatly in his favor. When he shall be elected (and he certainly will be) we shall have a President who will not talk much, but who will act a good deal.

There is another remarkable objection to General Grant which our virtuous and truthful friends, the Democratic editors, have raised. They say that he is not a great soldier. And they not only say this, but they ask us to believe it. Was there ever a more remarkable proposition presented to human credulity? General Grant was in active service four years in the last war alone. He was pitted in succession against the chosen generals of the Southern armies. The accomplished Sidney Johnston, the scientific Beauregard, the cautious Joe Johnston, the tenacious Bragg, the skillful and educated Lee, all contended against him with all that subtlety and learning and valor could accomplish, and were defeated and captured. Donelson, Vicksburg, Mission Ridge, the march to the sea, which it is now known that Grant planned, and the closing scenes at Richmond, these, we are asked to believe, were all matters of good luck and not of skill, science, and vigor. In other words, that for four years the destinies of this tremendous conflict were ruled by chance and not by the laws of God. It was nothing but a great game of roulette, and that Grant was successful because he was lucky. It is by such puerile conceits that our opponents hope to mislead the people.

You have all perhaps heard the old story of the man in Noah's time, who would not believe there was going to be a deluge, and made light of the labors of the patriarch. But when the deluge came, and the black floods began to roll up around him he hastened in the rain to apply for admission to the ark. But Noah said, "No, you have despised and derided my ark, and I can not let you in." "Very well," said the old infidel, already up to his waist in water, and half choked in the falling torrents; "you can go 'long with your old ark. I do not believe its going to be very much of a shower." Now, three years ago these same Democrats were perfectly delighted with the military career of General Grant. He was according to their own statements the greatest of modern soldiers. And why did they then acknowledge his merits? Because they hoped to get him in some way committed to their ideas and plans, and then use him as their own candidate. But they failed in this neat little plan. They did not have any more success in capturing Grant than Mr. "Bob Lee" did. And so their plan is now to abuse him, and especially to underrate his military achievements. Like the obstinate and disappointed old man in the story, they say, "It isn't very much of a shower." "General Grant" they say, "isn't very much of a soldier." If we may believe the papers, though I hope the story is not true, General Buckner, lately of New Orleans, and now editor of the Louisville Courier, says that Grant is not much of a soldier. But the people will recollect that in February, 1862, General Buckner was in Fort Donelson, with 17,000 men; that General Grant by skillful movements invested the place (and a very good "investment" it was); that in a short time General Buckner found it convenient to send a flag of truce and offer to surrender on certain conditions; that General Grant replied "I demand an unconditional surrender, and propose to move immediately on your works." And so General Buckner and all his host did unconditionally surrender. The people will remember that this was only one of General Grant's many victories achieved by genius, by patience, by courage; and now that General Buckner has turned Democratic editor and a leader in the Democratic party, we of the great Republican party are going under the leadership of General Grant to try the Donelson tactics again, and give notice to General Buckner and his Democratic batteries that we propose to move immediately on his works. (Great cheers.)

We have another objection to General Grant upon the part of these able editorial Democrats. They say he has "no policy," and they are so unhappy, apparently, on this subject that they can't sleep o'nights. Now I beg to suggest that if General Grant's views on this point are considered with any fairness at all, they ought to furnish great cause for thankfulness. We have had enough of presidents who talk about "my policy." The country has been kept in confusion for three years by a President who had a pet "policy." The whole theory of our government has been strained and twisted in the attempts of Mr. Johnson to force his policy on the United States. Now in the reasonable and natural construction of General Grant's language on this subject we ought to see matter of great hope and comfort. He says, and no candid man could wish him to say anything else: "I have no policy in opposition to the will of the people." "If I am elected President it will be my duty and my delight to execute the will of the people." If our opponents say that because General Grant declares he has no policy as against the will of the people he has therefore no principles, they say what is absurd, and what they know to be untrue. He announces as his principles the doctrines of the Chicago platform; he is especially in favor of union, of liberty, and of impartial suffrage. He believes in the right of the people of the United States to govern the United States. He believes that the people speak through their Representatives in Congress, and that when they so speak it is the duty of the President to execute their will. That is the true theory of the American government, and I repeat, therefore, that every good citizen will applaud General Grant for the simple and forcible manner in which he has expressed it.

There is one more matter to which I wish to allude as briefly as possible, and I allude to it because I am sorry and ashamed that our enemies should have so far forgotten their self-respect as to indulge in malignant slander of our candidate. I refer to the ridiculous and contemptible story set afloat by the Democratic press that General Grant is a drunkard. There is no more reason for the rumor than there would be for the assertion that General Washington was a drunkard. But the story has been devised by party malignity, and it is being circulated by Democratic papers.

Now if the matter is to be treated jocosely we might adopt the idea of the lamented Lincoln, who when during the war he was told that Grant was too fond of whisky, said with his singular mixture of wit and wisdom, "I wish somebody would give me a barrel of Grant's whisky. I would like to send it to some of my other generals." I think we might express the same wish. If General Grant be a drunkard, we wish such inebriety might attack some other people. I would like to get hold of a barrel of his whisky, and have it bottled for distribution. I would like to send a bottle or two to some other headquarters, and see if under its benign stimulus a little love of republican doctrines might not possibly be excited. I would like to send a dozen to the editors of Camp street, and see whether it might not inspire them with a little patriotism and a little grammar. In short, if whisky is likely in all cases to prompt the exhibition of so much genius, patriotism, courage, and prudence as it seems to have done in the case of Grant, we would do well to have the tax removed, and encourage its habitual use, especially in this latitude.

But jesting apart, what is the origin of this extraordinary charge against General Grant? I can not tell, for so often as I have seen him I never saw a more temperate looking man, a man with a clearer eye or a healthier cheek or more steady nerves. I can only account for the charge on one theory, and I think the theory a philosophical one. We are apt to measure the desires of other people by our own. We are apt to imagine in other people the same cravings that we feel in ourselves. Now if there be anything that a Democratic editor is fond of it is whisky. To "vote the regular ticket and take his liquor straight" is his idea of duty; and it does not enter into his imagination to conceive that a man can occupy a position where he gets a regular salary without spending three-fourths of that salary in drink. I remember a year ago being at General Sheridan's house one evening and he showed me a copy he had just received of a very filthy paper called the Memphis Avalanche, in which there was a long article accusing General Sheridan of being a drunkard—and I am sure Sheridan was never drunk in his life. And I said to him at the time: "The man that wrote that is probably a drunkard himself, and to his diseased fancy it seems impossible that you should have a salary of four hundred dollars a month and keep sober. (Great laughter.)

And I tell you these miserable penny-a-liners who malign General Grant in this way are people of the same style. They can not imagine a man having fifty dollars at a time without going on a spree. They can not conceive of a man with such a salary as General Grant's remaining sober. I can fancy one of these seedy writers discoursing on the intemperance of General Grant. I can see the scribe bending over his editorial table, his eyes red with frequent intoxication; his nose—

"Jolly nose, the rich jewels that garnish thy tip
Were dug from the mines in the county of Bourbon!"

His hands trembling with continued dissipation; one of these men who live on free lunches, and will write a half-column in praise of a grogshop that will furnish them with free drinks. Of this sort are the editors who inform us that General Grant's habits are not good. And, as I said before, the secret of their theory is that they can not conceive of a man having a considerable income without spending the bulk of it in liquor. They are like the little boy who said to his sister, "Sissy, when I get to be President I am going to swing on a gate all day!" That was his idea of life; and the ideas of these revilers of General Grant are just about as broad.

I said I was sorry and ashamed that our opponents should manufacture such slanders. I am sorry and ashamed for the American people, among whom such political tactics are allowed. But no one need be surprised. When General Andrew Jackson was nominated for the Presidency the same style of calumniation was adopted. The opposition press rang with charges against his private life. He was a murderer, they said, a drunkard, and a rake. A pamphlet was published in his own State of Tennessee, charging him with thirty two distinct crimes, including pretty nearly all the offenses in the calendar. Yet Jackson was elected and re-elected, his death was mourned as a loss to the country of a hero, a patriot, and a statesman of singular purity of private life, and to-day in Jackson Square in our city you see his equestrian statue—a statue of one of those men whom New Orleans especially delights to honor. The same persecution followed Henry Clay almost to his grave. He was freely denounced by his political enemies as a corrupt man, a gambler, a drunkard, and a rake. The public press of the country disseminated these slanders broadcast, and I doubt not there were people who believed them. But who believes them now? Henry Clay died. A nation wept for him as for one of her dearest sons, and to-day at the corner of Canal and Royal streets in our city you see his colossal statue—the statue of another man whom New Orleans especially delights to honor, and I dare say that some of the very men who tried to break his heart while he was alive helped to build his monument after he was dead. No, fellow citizens, the idea that General Grant is a man of intemperate habits is nothing but a cheap slander.

We have then a noble leader in Ulysses S. Grant. He is a soldier who was never defeated. He is a statesman who has never gone backward. He is a politician who has struck the true key note of American politics when he declared that if elected it would be his highest care to execute the will of the people. He is a man of liberal education and large experience. He was graduated at the best school in America. He has since that time had a wide experience of affairs. Above all, he is a man of honest purpose, of perfect personal integrity, of clear perceptions and determined purpose. He must be elected. He will be elected. (Loud applause.)

Fellow-citizens, some of us were in the army of General Grant during the war, and some were not. Some of us were called to serve our country in the field, and some just as good were called to serve her in other ways. The war is over, but the great political campaign which is to secure us, we hope, the legitimate fruits of the victory of the Union arms has just begun. In the peaceful struggle for the supremacy of our principles we are all soldiers, and Grant—not as a soldier, but as a citizen—is our leader. We will move on like a true army. The true soldier is an unselfish man. He fights not for himself, but for his flag; so will we contend. The true soldier is a brave man. He cheerfully risks health, comfort, and life for the good of the cause; so will we contend. The true soldier is a man of discipline. He obeys orders and observes rules; he fights with the army; so will we contend. Shoulder to shoulder we will move on, elbow touching elbow, and each foot keeping time to the music of freedom and the Union. (Great applause.)

You cry "Hurrah"—it is a word which is used more often in political campaigns than any other, and a very notable word it is. I mean this word "Hurrah." I like to study the origin of such words, and I find by looking in the dictionary that it is of Oriental origin, that it was the battle-cry of the Arabians, and it meant "To Paradise," "To Heaven," "To Glory." We use this explosive word with the same idea. We strive for a political heaven in our country; for the millennial reign of liberty, of justice, of equal rights before the law, of universal education, and a recognition of the indefeasible rights of manhood. When we say hurrah for Grant we mean that we are on the way to this happy state; we mean that we are on our way to this glorious consummation, and I tell you, fellow citizens, when these noble truths we advocate shall have free course and full triumph in the United States, it will be as nearly a political heaven as is possible to weak humanity. Toward this we move with Grant as our leader. Shall we, with this idea in our minds, say, "Hurrah for Grant?" (Great cries of "Yes.") Well, then, three cheers for Grant!

Three tremendous cheers were given, and the Judge retired.

In presenting Mr. Durant to the assembled masses Governor Warmoth said there was no need of formally introducing him, as his name was a household word; and he had so long identified himself with the Republican party of Louisiana that he was known to almost every individual composing it.

Speech of Hon. Thomas J. Durant.

Mr. President and Fellow Citizens: I was glad to hear the remark of Judge Howe that as a rule there was not much in a professional speechmaker. I scarcely feel on this occasion able to make a speech at all.

I think, fellow citizens, that the moral and political contest in which all are now engaged is not inferior in importance to any in which the American people have been involved since the beginning of this government. True, it is not destined to swell as the contest for and against secession did, into the roar of artillery and the clangor of arms, but it does involve as deeply and as truly the fundamental principles upon which American government is founded. It involves the very doctrine of popular government. It will decide the question whether in this country the people and their representatives in Congress are to be the supreme power which is to dictate the law of the land, or whether there shall be substituted the will of one man who at the time may chance to be President—whether, in short, monarchy is to be substituted for republicanism—imperialism for popular rights. For as you all understand, familiar as you are with the history of the past two or three years, the claim of the present executive falls nothing short of this; that such laws of Congress as are consistent with his good will and pleasure he will obey, and such as do not meet his approval he will refuse to execute, or what is still worse, he will endeavor to thwart in their proper execution. And if the American people, calmly considering such a claim, knowing its full extent, aware of the consequences to which it must inevitably lead us, are willing to acquiesce in his dictates and support the principles of his party, then they are willing to give up the privilege of popular government, and are willing to submit, as people of less happy countries do, to the imperial sway of a despot. Mr. Johnson has declared that those laws of Congress which he approves he will execute, and those which he does not approve he will not put in force. It was for this he was tried before the representatives of the people. It was not so important that the President should be convicted of the crimes with which he was charged, but it was important that he should be tried. It was important that in the face of the whole world, while Europe, with its monarchical institutions, was looking on, it was important that in the presence of a free people the man who had defeated the laws and, though he was the chief magistrate, had placed himself above the necessity of executing them, that this man should be brought before the Constitutional tribunal and compelled to plead like any other criminal. This was a triumph, whatever the result; this was a triumph of the Republican principles. It displayed to him and to his party and the world that the American people had the power to try their chief magistrate or any other officer when he pursues a course contrary to the law, and to guide the counsel of the people, who "know their rights, and knowing dare maintain." There is no worthier chieftain than he whose name appears upon that banner; there is no worthier lieutenant than he whose name stands second upon the list, and I think that the men who were nominated at Chicago were the best men, not only now in this nation, to lead the destinies of the republic, but as my predecessor said, they are worthier in every respect than any other men who have been placed in power by the American people since the era of the illustrious founder of our republic. I think that the convention at Chicago presented the most sublime spectacle to the world that any convention of a similar kind ever presented to the eye of man. It was the first time in the annals of America that the whole American people was represented. No State, no portion, no race, no color was unrepresented there.

For the first time in the history of our country a nominating convention was assembled to which were admitted representatives of the African race in America. (Applause.) It was composed of men from every part of the country, some who had unfortunately adhered to the rebellion, but who had repented, but almost wholly of those who had always been true to their country—of men who themselves and their fathers had always been excluded from the councils of the nation. That convention chose for its chief the man who led the Republican armies to victory—that convention laid down in its platform that the great truths which Congress asserted in the reconstruction acts were made permanent, that under no circumstances was the Congress of the United States to desert the newly enfranchised citizens of the South; and accordingly we have seen that when on a late occasion, in our own city, an attempt was made to defeat the will of the people here, Congress told the Commanding General of the department he could not be permitted to fight it out all summer on that line, and, coming to our rescue, the Congress of the United States has settled the question of the admission of the State of Louisiana; and soon, more bright and beautiful than before, appearing like a goddess adorned with the jewels of freedom, Louisiana will take her seat as an equal State in the councils of the nation. (Applause.) Louisiana, not as she was, founded with her riches on the sufferings of half of the people—Louisiana—not as she was with the liberties of one race springing from the enslavement of the other, but Louisiana, great, glorious, and free. She will send her representatives to those councils elected, as they have already been, by voters without distinction of race or color, and by this compact she will seal the prosperity of all her people. Her great sources of production will be renewed, and her march of happiness and plenty and peace will be more proud and more distinguished than it ever was before. Now, in opposition to a Congress guaranteeing the rights of the people without distinction, in opposition to the lead of such a chieftain as we have nominated, who is to be put forward by the other party?

If you set the question of principles aside, what man in the country can match with General Grant? There are no two men in the United States who combine in themselves greater elements of personal popularity than Ulysses S. Grant and Schuyler Colfax. Therefore if the contest is to be decided without reference to principle the battle is already fought and the victory won. And can we compare our principles with those of our adversaries? Who are the Democratic party? Let those who can look back for the last twenty years give the answer. If you look over the lists of the old Whigs you will find the greater part of them enrolled in the Democratic party. I have read that on one occasion a missionary to the Sandwich Islands, who was zealous in the service in which he was sent, had baptized a great many heathen natives, and converted them to the true faith. On one occasion he came into the hut of one of these natives, and although he had instructed him never to eat any meat on Friday, he found him cooking a beefsteak. "What is this?" said the holy man, "are you violating the precepts which I have lately taught you?" "Not at all, your reverence," said the convert, "I have just baptized him, and I have called him fish." (Laughter.) Now the old Whigs who have gone over to lead the Democrats, and who in a late political meeting in this city, taking the type for the whole body, they have been baptised, and lost their name of Whigs and become Democrats; but though names may change, parties do not change, for the party consists in its principles. That is the Democratic party in reality which favors legislation for classes. And the people of Louisiana and the people of the United States are not a class, but they are all the inhabitants of the States without distinction. These are the people, and nothing else is to be called by that name. And the party which guarantees the rights of the people without distinction, and proclaimed before the law, and demands that justice shall be done to all men without regard to their origin, what country they came from, or under what sun their ancestors were born, that is the real Democratic party of this nation, by whatever name its adversaries may choose to style themselves. That party, fellow citizens, is the Republican party—the party of equality, of progress, of humanity; the party which has followed the great precepts on which is founded our republic; the party which has made America the hope of the world, and which will make her still more illustrious and do honor to itself by electing General Grant to the Presidency in November next. (Continued applause.)

Governor Warmoth, on introducing Captain George A. Sheridan, the next speaker, said:

Fellow Citizens—Many years ago old Ireland gave a son to Great Britain, whose eloquence and whose patriotism has made his name illustrions. A few years ago a descendant of Ireland gave America another Sheridan. The former made splendid speeches, but could not fight; the latter made splendid fights, but could not speak. I have now the pleasure of introducing to you a Sheridan who can not only fight, but who can make splendid speeches—Captain George A. Sheridan, of Carroll parish.

Captain Sheridan made a very lengthy, amusing, and telling speech, which we reserve for publication on a future occasion.

At the conclusion of his address Dr. M. A. Southworth, chairman of the committee, offered the following resolutions, which were unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That the Republican party of the State of Louisiana heartily indorses the platform of the National Union Republican Convention, adopted at Chicago on the twenty-first of May, 1868, and approves the nomination of Ulysses S. Grant for President and Schuyler Colfax for Vice-President of the United States, to whom we pledge our most enthusiastic support.

2. That in General Grant we recognize the unsurpassed captain of our armies and the tried and firm supporter of the rights of loyal citizens. His election will place in the Presidential chair a man of signal executive abilities, incorruptible integrity, and loyalty to the Union of the States.

3. That in Schuyler Colfax we recognize the unswerving champion of Union, freedom, and equal rights; one whose eloquent voice and powerful influence in the cause of our country and in behalf of our heroic army of the Union are well known, and whose name will reflect additional lustre upon the high office to which he has been nominated.

4. That the speedy restoration of the States lately in rebellion, according to the Congressional plan, will be a powerful auxiliary to the success of the cause of right and justice; and that it is the manifest duty of the friends of reconstruction in Congress and elsewhere to hasten that event that the government of this State and city may be permanently placed in the hands of men known to be loyal to the Constitution and flag of the Union and friendly to the equality of all men before the law.

Captain P. B. S. Pinchback, Hon. Charles Hughes, Colonel J. P. Boyd, and Hon. T. W. Conway then followed in eloquent speeches, which we are unable to report this morning.

A short time before midnight the meeting was brought to a close, everything passing off happily and auspiciously.

When the processions were returning from the meeting several of the clubs honored the Republican with serenades and patriotic cheers.

The Pioneer Grant Club turned out in large numbers, with banners and transparences and music. They made a most creditable appearance, judging from which they will perform their duty during the campaign and at the election. The Pioneers serenaded and cheered the Republican on their return route to their club room.

MISSISSIPPI AND SOUTH CAROLINA REBELS.

Attack on a Republican Meeting—Murder of a South Carolina Legislator and Two Colored Men.

On Saturday, the sixth instant, an immense Republican mass meeting was held at Holly Springs, Mississippi. Besides several hundred whites, there were probably over two thousand colored present, many of whom had traveled fifteen to twenty miles to attend the meeting. Colonel Jamison, the Republican candidate for Lieutenant Governor of the State, presided. Addresses were made by Colonel Flournoy, Hon. J. S. Morris, Republican candidate for Attorney General, Hon. P. P. Bailey, and Captain C. W. Clarke, Republican candidate for State Superintendent of Public Instruction. Everything so far had passed off very happily. We leave to the correspondent of the Mississippi Pilot, who was on the spot, to relate what followed:

Captain Gill, a resident of the place, who, with his family and a lady friend, has for more than three years maintained a large school in this place for colored children, was the next speaker, who seems to have been for a long time specially obnoxious to the rebel element of this vicinity. It had already become late in the day. The other speakers, except Captain Clarke, had left the stand, and were getting their dinners at the hotel near by. The wife of Captain Gill and a lady friend were on the stand. The colored people were standing on three sides. The white citizens were mostly on one of the four sides, and while Captain Gill was speaking, a rush was made for the stand from the white men. They mounted it, and struck with clubs, and some say with knives also, at Captain Gill, who manfully defended himself. Captain Clarke sprang forward to his aid, and was almost immediately struck by a brickbat thrown at him from the crowd, which broke the main bone of his left leg just below the knee, sending him headlong off of the stand to the ground. Captain Gill was cut on the neck and on one of his hands, but not seriously hurt.

The military which had all the while been within calling distance came promptly forward and dispersed the whole assembly, and the riot was checked. The colored people behaved well. They offered no violence to the offenders. A man by the name of Myers was arrested and taken before the mayor, charged with being the leader of the rioters. All the others escaped.

Captain Clarke bore the misfortune with manly courage, and while lying on a stretcher writhing under the severest pain he openly proclaimed that this misfortune to him would, he verily believed, aid the cause he held so dear to his heart more than all the speeches he could make from now to the end of the campaign; "For," said he, "the blood of martyrs is the seed of the church," and we add, may this disgraceful affair be indeed such to the Republican cause, bringing forth fruit a hundred fold, and putting to eternal shame (if such a thing were possible) that hostile and unrepentant rebel element now so rampant all over the South, and scarcely equaled in intensity by anything that characterized these people in the years immediately preceding the war.

This is a short sketch of a most disgraceful affair; disgraceful alike to the people of Holly Springs, from whom better things should have been expected; and disgraceful to the Southern people generally, who are justly held responsible for encouraging hostility to every man who does not agree with them in politics.

The Washington Chronicle learns from a private source that Mr. Dill, a Republican member elect to the Legislature of South Carolina, and two colored Union men, were basely murdered by a band of armed whites at the residence of the former, near Camden, South Carolina, on the night of the fifth instant. Mr. Dill was a gentleman of unimpeachable moral character, a native of the State, and was slain for no other reason than his earnest devotion to the cause of the Union.

We learn in addition that a colored man, together with Mr. Dill's wife, were desperately wounded by the fire of the assassins.

The Charleston News of the eighth in noticing the murder of Mr. Dill says "one of the elect comes to grief." A letter to General Canby attributes the death of Mr. Dill to the "Ku-Klux Klan."

The New York Sun says:

The present troubles in reference to the mayoralty of New Orleans illustrate very strikingly the imperative necessity of the restoration of the Southern States to the Union under almost any conditions, if we would have them enjoy even a moderate degree of peace and prosperity. How can business go on and industry thrive when citizens can not even tell who the legitimate officers of their local government are? We do not pretend to decide whether Mayor Heath or General Buchanan is in the right, or whether or not the Board of Registration have exceeded their powers, and rendered themselves liable to arrest; but it is very much to be desired that some degree of quiet should be restored, and it be settled which is the supreme authority to be obeyed.

PROCLAMATION

Of the Board of Registration.

Board of Registration,
State of Louisiana,
New Orleans, June 5, 1868.

Whereas, By the ordinance of the late Constitutional Convention creating this Board, passed February 13, 1868, this Board is empowered, and it is by said ordinance made the duty of this Board to take control of "all matters of execution or of detail not fully provided for in said reconstruction acts (of Congress) and Constitution (of Louisiana), and in case of the non-action of any officer of the State or District Commander, or any omission in carrying out said law, regulations, or ordinances, or details necessary to carry into effect the purposes of said act according to their letter and spirit;" and

Whereas, The District Commander of the Fifth Military District in his Special Order No. 121, promulgating the election of civil officers in Louisiana, dated June 2, 1868, has failed to recognize the requirements of said Constitution, which provides

First, That "all civil officers thus elected shall enter upon the discharge of their duties on the second Monday after the return of their election shall have been officially promulgated, or as soon as qualified according to law, and shall continue in office for the terms of their respective offices herein prescribed, said terms to date from the first Monday in November following the election. (See article 158 of Constitution.)

2. "The General Assembly elected under this Constitution shall hold its first session in the city of New Orleans on the third Monday after the official promulgation aforesaid, and proceed, immediately upon its organization, to vote upon the adoption of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States, proposed by Congress, and passed June 13, 1868," etc. (See article 159 of Constitution.)

He, the said District Commander, having refused to recognize the requirements of the Constitution, as above shown, in his said order, in the following language: "The General Assembly will not convene until the Commanding General shall have been officially notified of the acceptance by Congress of the new State Constitution. Immediately after receipt of this information a day will be appointed for the meeting of the General Assembly to take action upon the amendment to the Constitution of the United States, known as article fourteen, and to define by law the powers and duties pertaining to the offices newly created by this Constitution."

"Article 158 of the new Constitution of the State provides that the terms of all civil officers elected under it shall date (not begin) from the first Monday in November following the election. Therefore the officers whose election is herein announced will only enter upon and hold their offices from that date;" and

Whereas, The failure to inaugurate the State officers elected under the new Constitution at the time appointed by the Constitution would necessarily prevent the General Assembly's legal existence, as well as action upon the fourteenth proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States (the present acting Governor being constitutionally unable to approve any act of said General Assembly, and without the approval of the Governor it being impossible for any legislative enactment to become a law), and thus effectually prevent Reconstruction in accordance with the laws of Congress, which provide that "the Legislature elected under the Constitution shall have adopted the amendment to the Constitution of the United States proposed by the Thirty-ninth Congress, and known as article fourteen" (see section 5, law passed March 2, 1867,) prior to admission into the Union, the adoption of said Constitutional amendment by the Legislature of Louisiana being thus rendered utterly impossible; and

Whereas, The Commanding General is not above the laws of Congress, nor is he above the Convention that framed the Constitution under which these officers are to be inaugurated, both being the creatures of Congressional will, independent of each other, yet both subject to the paramount authority of the Congress of the United States; and

Whereas, The Reconstruction Laws fully empowered the Constitutional Convention to govern all matters of detail in regard to the inauguration of the new government authorized by Congress; and

Whereas, Said Constitutional Convention has delegated its full powers in the premises to this Board, which is the legal representative of said Convention; Now, therefore, I, S. B. Packard, Chairman of the Board of Registration aforesaid, in obedience to the duty imposed by said Constitutional Convention upon, and by virtue of the authority thus vested in this Board, do hereby notify all civil officers elected under said Constitution that said Constitution requires that they qualify and take possession of their respective offices on Monday, June 15, 1868, in accordance with Article 158 of Constitution.

I also notify the members of the General Assembly of Louisiana, elected under said Constitution, that by Art. 159 of said Constitution they are required to convene in the city of New Orleans on Monday, June 22, 1868, at 12 M.; and I further notify all civil officers now in office that by the new Constitution their terms of office will expire at 12 M. on Monday, June 15, 1868, at which time they will deliver up said offices, with all appurtenances thereto, to their successors declared duly elected by the Special Order No. 121 of the Military Commander of the Fifth Military District, issued June 2, 1868; Provided, That in all cases where the officers elect do not qualify according to the laws of Congress and of this State, present incumbents will hold over until such officer shall qualify, or a successor shall have been appointed, or an officer declared elected who is able to qualify.

S. B. PACKARD,
Chairman Board of Registration.

FURTHER EXTENSION OF TIME FOR COLLECTION OF THE CONVENTION TAX.

BOARD OF REGISTRATION,
State of Louisiana, New Orleans, May 26, 1868.

AT A REGULAR MEETING OF THE BOARD, held on TUESDAY, May 26, 1868, the following resolution was adopted:
Resolved, That the time for the final settlement of the Convention taxes by the Tax Collectors and Sheriffs throughout the State with the Auditor of Public Accounts be and is hereby extended to the first day of July, 1868.
By virtue of the foregoing resolution I hereby notify all Tax Collectors and Sheriffs throughout the State to continue to collect the Convention tax up to the first day of July, 1868.
The Tax Collectors and Sheriffs are further instructed that they will be held responsible for a rigid enforcement of the ordinance adopted by the Convention, January 4, 1868, (which is hereinafter published for the information of all concerned), exacting a penalty for non-payment of said tax.
The Convention remitted all penalties up to the twentieth day of March, 1868, and from that time the penalty will be exacted in all the parishes where the taxrolls were ready at that date, and thirty days after the taxrolls were completed in the other parishes, the penalty will be exacted.
S. B. PACKARD, Chairman.
R. C. RICHARDSON, Secretary.

ORDINANCE.

SECTION 1. Be it ordained by the Constitutional Convention of the State of Louisiana, That the Sheriffs and Tax Collectors of the State, except of the city of New Orleans, Orleans right bank, and the parish of Jefferson, shall give notice to the taxpayers of their respective parishes to pay the tax of one mill per cent levied by ordinance of the twenty-fourth December, 1867, by this Convention; and thirty days after service of said notice those who shall not have paid the tax due by them shall be considered in default, and the Sheriffs and Tax Collectors shall exact an additional tax upon such persons of twenty-five per cent upon the sum due by them for the first default, and an additional tax of ten per cent to be computed on the original tax for every subsequent thirty days said persons shall continue to be in default, up to the date of the final settlement.
SEC. 2. Be it further ordained, That the Sheriffs and Tax Collectors of the city of New Orleans, Orleans right bank, and parish of Jefferson, shall by public notice in one newspaper published in their parish, call upon all taxpayers to pay the tax levied by the ordinance of December twenty-four above mentioned, and all persons who shall not have paid the amounts due by them on account of said tax ten days after the publication of the above required notice shall pay an additional tax of twenty-five per cent on the original tax, and an additional tax of two and a-half per cent on the original tax of one mill per cent for every subsequent ten days said persons shall be in default.
SEC. 3. Be it further ordained, etc., That immediately after the taxpayers shall have been put in default by the expiration of the thirty or ten days, as the case may be, given in the notice required by the first and second sections of this ordinance, the Sheriffs and Tax Collectors throughout the State shall proceed to seize and sell after ten days' notice property of the delinquent taxpayers, movable or immovable, sufficient to pay the original tax, all additional taxes herein levied, and costs.
Adopted in Convention at the city of New Orleans, this fourth day of January, Anno Domini eighteen hundred and sixty-eight.

THE GERMANIA LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY, established in 1860, and based upon the most approved principles of Life Insurance security, presents its claims for consideration, believing that its solid foundation already secured by the faithful and efficient management of its officers and Board of Directors will give it the preference above all other similar institutions.

It is purely Mutual, as the net profits are distributed among the parties insured, the interest of the capital stock being only five per cent according to its charter.

It assumed the system of cash payments at the commencement of its existence, and maintained it faithfully until now, and promises the same for the future, thereby securing to policy holders the full amount for which they are insured. The advantage of this system over the half cash and half note system is patent to every careful observer, but will be more fully illustrated by the following statement and table:

If a person of thirty years of age insures his life for the amount of $1000 in one of the credit companies, and pays a premium of $28 30 per year, with a note for half of the premium, then by means of this note and interests thereon the amount will become less and less in the following proportions:

| | |
|---|---|
| After 10 years the $1000 will amount to | $887 44 |
| After 15 years the $1000 will amount to | 795 28 |
| After 20 years the $1000 will amount to | 666 02 |
| After 25 years the $1000 will amount to | 484 73 |
| After 30 years the $1000 will amount to | 230 47 |
| After 33 years the $1000 will amount to | 32 53 |
| After 34 years the $1000 will amount to | Nothing. |

So that after a lapse of 34 years the whole amount will be eaten up, notwithstanding the parties insured paid their money in good faith.

The large dividend of 40 per cent declared last January is evidence of the care and success with which the Managers have conducted the enlarged and rapidly increasing interests of the Company, and vouches for its future brilliant and permanent prosperity.

Parties contemplating an assurance on their lives will do well to examine the status of this Company, every facility for which will be given by the ## Poetry.

THE GHOST RING.

BY LU BILLINGS SPALDING.

He said our dream was over,
And he took his ring away—
But he could not rid my finger
Of the impress where it lay.

For circling still my finger,
Like a little band of snow,
A ghost ring clung about it
With a white and pleading glow.

I said the dream is over,
For I had to set him free—
For his heart warmed for another,
And he didn't care for me.

I knew the ties were severed,
And I tried hard to forget,
But the wan thing on my finger,
Kept pleading "O not yet!"

And the tears would struggle upward,
For the little penciled band
Clung with a faithful fondness
To my poor forgotten hand.

And my heart, too, bore the impress
Of the love it used to hold;
Though I knew him all unworthy,
And I strove so to seem cold.

And I hope he may be happy;
They say his bride is fair,
That her eyes are blue and winning,
With long and golden hair.

I never prayed for beauty
Till I found he thought me dim:
But I did not think he'd scorn me
When I was so true to him.

But his heart cried out for beauty,
And so I set him free;
And I pray God to forgive him
The great wrong done to me.

And in that purer region,
Where we take a spirit mould,
He may see with eyes unclouded
That there's BEAUTY OF THE SOUL.

MR. EDITOR:

In keeping with my promise made to you on the 13th instant, I resume my warfare against that monster of evil, Intemperance.

Look at the ravages of Intemperance. Fix your eye on its waste of property. At the lowest calculation it has annually despoiled us of two hundred millions of dollars—of sixty millions for an article that is worth nothing, and one hundred and forty millions more to compensate for the mischief that alcoholic beverages have done—money enough to accomplish all that the warmest patriot could wish for his country, and to fill in a short period the very remotest village with a schoolhouse and books of instruction for the elevation of the rising generation, and thereby prevent the evils of pauperism and commission of crime that are daily seen in our streets.

What planter would not be fired should a wild beast come once a year into his plantation and destroy the best milk cow he had? But six and a fourth cents a day for ardent spirits wastes twenty-two dollars eighty-one cents annually, and in forty years nearly one thousand dollars, which is a thousand times as much as scores of drunkards are worth at their burial.

See the pauperism it has produced. We have sung of our goodly heritage, and foreign nations have disgorged their exuberant population that they might freely subsist in this land of plenty. But in this granary of the world are everywhere to be seen houses without windows, fields untilled, barns unroofed, children unclothed, churches nearly empty, schools unattended, and penitentiaries and almshouses filled to overflowing; and a stranger might write: Beggars and criminals made here. We are groaning under our pauperism, and talking of taxes, hard times, no trade, reconstruction laws unconstitutional, we are being fleeced by carpet-baggers, and slandering honest persons; but intemperance is stalking through our land and devouring our substance and killing our friends and relatives and creating discontent in our nation.

It has entered the houses of our unsuspecting citizens as a friend, and taken the food from their tables, the clothing from their wardrobes, the bedding from their beds, the fuel from their fires, and turned their lands over to other hands, and drove them from their dwellings to subsist on beggary and crime, or drag out a miserable existence in the alms-houses and penitentiaries. Two-thirds of the wretched tenants of these abodes of poverty throughout this Union were reduced by intemperance. This they confess. It was rum, brandy, wine, champagne, and whisky that did the deed. The prison discipline report tells of sixty-five cases of imprisonment for debt annually in consequence of the use of alcoholic bevarages. Oh, its sweeps of poverty can never be known!

Look at the crime it has occasioned. It is said that there is a spring in the oriental empire which makes every person that drinks of it a villain. Eastern tales are generally founded on some plain matter of fact. This spring may be some distillery or dram shop, for this is the natural effect of alcohol. It breaks down the conscience, quickens the circulation, increases the courage, makes man scout at law and right, and hurries him to the perpetration of every abomination and crime. Excite a man by alcoholic beverages, and he is bad enough for anything. He can lie, steal, fight, swear, and plunge the dagger into the bosom of his wife or child. No vice is too filthy, no crime is too tragical for a drunkard. The records of our courts tell of acts committed under the influence of ardent spirits which curdle the blood in our veins. Husbands murder their wives, children butcher their parents, and mothers slaughter their offspring. Far the greater part of the atrocities committed in our country is induced by its maddening power. Years ago a judge declared in a public manner, and with a solemn regard to truth, in a charge to a grand jury, that he did not recollect an instance since his being concerned in the administration of justice of a single person being put on his trial for manslaughter which did not originate in drunkenness, and but few instances of trial for murder where the crime did not spring from the same unhappy cause. Of all the complaints presented to the police court in New York in one year more than half were under the statute against common drunkards. Of all the cases of criminal prosecution in the courts of Louisiana more than half of them proceed from intemperance. Thousands of complaints are made yearly in this city to the police of outrages committed by intoxicated persons, and a learned attorney told me that of twenty-one cases of murder which it had been his privilege to examine, every one of them had been committed in consequence of intemperate drinking. I remember having read an account of the warden of the Connecticut State prison, reporting that nine-tenths of all the prisoners under his care were decidedly intemperate men, and were brought to that condition, directly or indirectly, through intoxicating liquors. Many had confessed to him in tears that they never felt tempted to the commission of crime thus punishable, but when under the influence of strong alcoholic drinks.

Look at its destruction of intellect. It reduces man to a beast, to a fool, to a devil incarnate. The excessive drinker first becomes stupid, then idiotic, then a maniac. Men of the finest genuis, most acute minds, and profound learning have dwindled under the touch of this withering demon to the merest insignificance, and been hooted at by boys for their silly speeches and silly actions, or chained in a madhouse as unsafe in society. Of eighty-seven insane persons admitted into the New York hospital in one year the insanity of twenty-seven was produced by intemperance; and the physicians of the Pennsylvania hospitals report that one-third of the insane of that institution were ruined by ardent spirits.

What if one-sixth of our maniacs were deprived of their reason by the bite of the dogs, the friendly inmates of our habitations, or by some vegetable common to our tables; who would harbor the dangerous animal or taste the poisonous vegetable? But one-third of our maniacs are deranged by alcoholics beverages. Indeed, every drunkard is in a temporary delirium, and no man who takes even "a little" into his system posseses that sound judgment, or is capable of that patient investigation, or intellectual effort which would be his without it. Just in proportion as man comes under the influence of ardent liquers he approximates to idiotism or madness.

Look at its waste of health and life. The worm of the still never touches the brute creation, but, as if the most venomous of all beings, it seizes the noblest prey. It bites man, and where it once leaves its subtle poison farewell to health—farewell to long life. The door is open, and in rush dyspepsia, jaundice, dropsy, gout, obstructions of the liver, epilepsy—the deadliest plagues let loose on fallen man—all terminating in delirium tremens or mania a potu a prelude to the eternal buffetings of foul spirits in the world of despair. One out of every forty of our population has taken up his abode in the lazar-house of drunkenness, and thirty thousand die annually the death of the drunkard.

These sweeps of death mock all the ravages of the late war, famine, pestilence, and shipwreck. The yellow fever, felt to be one of the greatest curses of heaven, has destroyed but a few in proportion to those murdered by intemperance. In the late war of liberty the sword and powder devoured but a handful in comparison to what alcohol kills every year, and enslaves every day. Shipwreck destroys suddenly, and we groan and sorrow when forty or a hundred human beings are suddenly engulphed in a watery grave; but more than half of all the sudden deaths occur in fits of intoxication. It needed not a fable to award the prize of greatest ingenuity in malice and murder to the demon who invented alcoholic beverages over the demon who invented war.

And look at its waste of human happiness.

Yes, look, look, look, for yourselves. The woes of drunkenness mock all description. Some speak of the joy of drinking. Oh, if there is a wretched being on earth it is the drunkard. His property wasted, his character gone, his body loathsome, his passions wild, his appetite craving the poison that kills him, his hopes of immortality blasted forever, it is all to—

"Me miserable,
Which way I fly is hell, myself am hell."

And his family. I can never look at it but with feelings of the deepest anguish.

"Domestic happiness, thou only bliss

Thou art shipwrecked here. Sorrow, woe, wounds, poverty, babblings, and contention have entered in and dwell there.

Yet we have over three hundred thousand such families in our land; and if each family consists of four individuals, more than a million of persons are here made wretched by this curse of curses.

Many persons cling to the belief that the moderate use of ardent spirits is proper, that "it is a pleasant cordial," "a cheerful restorative;" the "first friend of the infant;" the "support of the enfeebled mother;" a "sweet luxury given by the parent to the child;" the "universal token of kindness, friendship, and hospitality." It goes with the laborer as his "most cheering companion:" it adorns the sideboards and tables of the rich, and "enlivens" the social circles of the poor; "accompanies" the mariner in his long and dreary voyage; "enlivens" the carpenter, the mason, the blacksmith, the joiner, as they ply their trade; follows the merchant to his counter, the physician to his infected rooms, the attorney to his office, and the divine to his study, "cheering" all and "comforting" all. It is the "life" of our trainings, and town meetings, and elections, bees, picnics, etc. It is the "best domestic medicine," "good for a cold and a cough;" "for pain in the stomach," and "weakness in the limbs," "loss of appetite and rheumatism," and it is a "great support in old age." It makes a "market for our rye and apples;" "sustains one hundred thousand families who are distilling and vending," and to cap the climax "pours annually millions of dollars into the national treasury."

Now, Mr. Editor, can we lawfully amass wealth by a course of trade which fills our land with beggars, widows, orphans, and crimes; which peoples the cemeteries and potter's field with premature mortality, and the world of woe with the victims of despair? Could all the forms of evil produced in the land by intemperance come upon us in one horrid array it would appal the nation and put an end to the traffic in ardent spirits. If in every house built by blood the stone from the wall should utter all the cries which the bloody traffic extorts, and the beam out of the timber should echo them back, who would build such a house? And who would dwell in it? What, if in every part of the house, from the foundation upward, through all the halls and chambers babblings and contentions and voices and groans and shrieks and wailings were heard day and night? What if the cold blood oozed out and stood in drops upon the walls, and by preternatural art all the ghastly skulls and bones of the victims destroyed by intemperance should stand upon the walls, in horrid sculpture, within and without the building—who would rear such a building? What if, at eventide and midnight, the airy forms of men destroyed by intemperance were dimly seen haunting the distilleries and stores where they received their bane—following the track of the ship engaged in the commerce, walking upon the waves, flitting athwart the deck, sitting upon the rigging, and sending up from the hold within and from the waves without groans and loud laments and wailings! Who would attend such stores? Who would labor in such distilleries? Who would navigate such ships?

Oh! were the sky over our heads one great whispering gallery, bringing down about us all the lamentation and woe which intemperance creates, and the firm earth one sonorous medium of sound, bringing up around us from beneath the wailings of the damned, whom the commerce in ardent spirits had sent thither; these tremendous realities, assailing our sense, would invigorate our conscience, and give decision to our purpose of reformation. But these evils are as real as if the stone did cry out of the wall, and the beam answered it: as real as if day and night wailings were heard in every part of the house, and blood and skeletons were seen upon every wall; as real as if the ghostly forms of departed victims flitted about the vessel as it passed over the billows, and showed themselves nightly about stores and distilleries, and with unearthly voices screamed in our ears their loud lament. They are as real as if the sky over our heads collected and brought down about us all the notes of sorrow in our land, and the firm earth should open a passage for the wailings of despair to come up from beneath.

This drinking has killed more men, women, and children than war, pestilence, and all other evils together. You can not bring upon man so awful a curse as alcohol. Is there a moderate drinker among your readers who says he can use "a little" or "much" and "quit" when he pleases? I tell him he can not do it. Well, he can if he will, but he won't will, that is the difficulty, and there is the fatal mistake. It is the moderate use, the little, the pretty drink, the genteel, fashionable that does the mischief. The moderate drinker is training to take the place of the drunkard.

Look at the drunkards' homes. The most of them are husbands and fathers. Many have large families. Their houses are generally known by the broken dooryard fence; the fallen gate; the windows stuffed with old hats and rags; the clapboards dangling in the air; the barns held up by props and stripped of their boards, which have been used for fuel last winter; a half-starved dog stands in the street, and several ragged children, who, without hats or shoes, spend their days in dragging brush wood from the forests, or in begging from door to door, to buy their mother a loaf of bread.

In the interior little is visible either of neatness or comfort. No bed but one of straw laid on the floor; here a show of a table, and there a broken chair. A broken plate, rusty knife and fork, an iron spoon; a mug for cider and a bottle for rum. Neither carpet nor plastering is there; in the winter the snow often lies upon the bed, and the mother and her children may be seen huddled together over a few embers as their only refuge. Night comes, but no sound of a father's voice with comfortable food to cheer and gladden. The children cry themselves to sleep. The mother sits and "watches the moon go down;" distant footsteps are heard, and horrid oaths vented at not finding the door causes the heart of the wife to quail, as a monster in human shape, but the father of her children bursts upon her, and seizing the rum bottle drives her out in the cold and dreary night, even in the pitiless storm, compelling her to leave her babes to his neglect or cruelties. Meet that mother and wife, and ask her to tell you her sufferings, and she will reply that they all proceeded from her husband, who was at one time a man of wealth, being "only a moderate drinker."

These homes are witnessed in almost every neighborhood in our land. The inhabitants are accustomed to the spectacle as a necessary appendage to their village, as the church, the schoolhouse the tavern, the dram-shop, or the comfortable home of the sober and the frugal; and it attracts no particular notice unless there goes forth at midnight hour a cry of murder; and then for a little season all think something must be done; the wife must swear the peace upon her husband, and he by authority be sent to jail. But this she will not do; he is her husband; he promises to reform, and things are left to pass on much as before, until she is murdered or he commits a robbery.

It is perfectly evident that unless a movement is made, and one which shall be equal in time and place with this monster evil—one which shall strike at the root and exterminate it—drunkenness will always continue. Let associated efforts be brought to bear upon the torrent of evil. Alcohol is in all fermented liquors, producing the same effects in kind in the system as when separated by the process of distillation. Nearly all the wines of commerce are brandied, and much of the foreign wine, and wines of home manufacture, are nothing but distilled spirits and drugs. Burton ale, according to Brande's table, has eight per cent alcohol, the intoxicating principle; cider ten; champagne wine eighteen; sherry nineteen; Maderia twenty-four; port twenty-three; Lissa twenty-six; one-half of what is found in whisky, gin, rum, and brandy, while beer, prepared as it is often by nux vomica, coculus indicus, and grains of paradise, is little behind the strongest drinks in its fatal tendency.

The liquor interest never sleeps. Millions upon millions are invested in it, that the owners may keep open the sluices and wax fat to the injury of a forgetful, forgiving, and preoccupied public. It is with society as with the individual, the forces of evil are ever in conflict with the forces of virtue.

What, then, is our duty? Sad experience has proven that alone we can do nothing. But together, shoulder to shoulder, hand to hand, and heart to heart, let the Rechebites, Sons and Daughters, Templars, Good Samaritans, Cadets of Temperance, journalists, legislators, divines, attorneys, judges, mechanics, and laborers, and every well-wisher of progress, combine to wage an unrelenting war against intemperance, to bring it into popular odium, and finally exterminate the monster from our land. Many a wife and many a daughter on bended knees and with streaming eyes beseeches you to snatch the fatal draught from the husband and the father. Will you deny them with the excuse that you can not do anything? Remember that in unity there is strength, and that a kind word spoken in time may lure a man from the embrace of the snaky, slimy coil of intemperance, and cause his heart to turn back to its long-forsaken home, to the abused wife and the wretched children.

Fearing that I have already encroached upon the limits of your journal, I close, promising to communicate further upon the subject next week.

Respectfully,

FREDERICK K. HYDE.

FRANKLIN QUARTERLY CONFERENCE—MANY CONVERTS — CENTREVILLE CHURCH—FAITHFUL PREACHERS.

The Quarterly Conference at Franklin, June 13 and 14, was one of the best ever held on the circuit. Very few members of the body were absent, and those with good reason. No case for discipline appeared; all was harmonious. Several promising young men were recognized as exhorters, and we hope to have some valuable preachers as the result of Brother Lea's labors here. The Church property is in good condition. An effort is to be made to build a schoolhouse on the church lot. Six appointments were reported, with 544 members and probationers, 177 baptisms, 92 conversions, 26 marriages, 2 deaths, 5 Sunday schools, with 371 scholars. We have churches at Franklin, Charenton, and Cypremort, and one building in Centreville which will soon be ready for use. The people have pushed forward the enterprise very zealously, and Brothers Lea and Watkins deserve great credit for their energy in the work. Brother Dale is doing an excellent work in the Cypremort section, teaching and preaching for old and young. Brother Frere is laboring faithfully at Baldwin and Jeanerettes. Father and Mother Baldwin have left us for a time to visit Berea, but will soon return to their Southern work.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL—GREAT MEETING—POVERTY.

Our Sunday school looked like old times. Mrs. Parks has just taken charge, and is getting things in good order. We may expect an excellent report by next quarterly meeting. At eleven o'clock Brother Dale preached an eloquent sermon. The church was all alive. The young converts and the old Christians were very happy. In the afternoon the elder preached and administered the Lord's supper. The altar was many times crowded. The church could not accommodate the multitude who desired to enjoy its precious sabbath privileges. At night the love feast was held, and a glorious day of Christian devotion closed appropriately with the happy experiences of God's dear children, who will, it is hoped, be more faithful in the future. Our people are very poor, as evidenced in the sabbath collection for their preacher—only six dollars and some cents being raised. The prospect for crops is good, and if they are fairly dealt with we may hope by the next meeting to find them in better circumstances, educating their children, and sustaining their minister.

ST. MARTINSVILLE — GOOD REPORT — NEW TEACHER—PERSECUTION.

The quarterly meeting at St. Martinsville was very interesting. Under great discouragements Brother Bryan is doing a great work—not a church building on his large circuit of two parishes, and no response to his appeals for help save from his own poor people. He reports four appointments—St. Martinsville, Lafayette, Couteau, Cote Gelee—with 200 members and probationers, forty-three baptisms, twenty-three conversions, two Sunday schools, with ninety-five scholars. An excellent teacher has been obtained for the day school, Mr. DeRochefort, who also superintends the Sunday school and assists in the religious services. The poverty of the people hinders us greatly. Few are able to send their children to day school, or aid in the support of the church. They have also been subjected to insult and violence on account of their political preferences and desires to elevate their race. Surely God will interpose for them speedily.

During this trip repeated showers were poured out upon the corn, cane, cotton, etc., and the planters were rejoicing in the prospect of abundant crops.

ITINERANT.

Reading the Bible.

An intelligent reading of the Bible is necessary for the highest development of its usefulness to the Christian, either as a manual of devotion or as a means of instruction. It is not enough for this purpose that a certain measured portion be read every day, or that the whole volume be read through in a given time. This is all very well, provided the reader does not get into the habit of daily reading as a matter of routine, and so go through his task mechanically, his eye on the page, and his mind on business. "Understandest thou what thou readest?" said Philip to the eunuch. It is better to read a single verse understandingly than a whole chapter for the mere purpose of getting through it in a certain time.

This division of chapter and verse, by the way, though a very great help in finding isolated passages, is often a very great hinderance to the sense. Robert Stephens, the learned printer, who is credited with having devised the present arrangement, in the sixteenth century, seems to have made it without any regard to the connection of different parts; and we are quite inclined to believe the story told of him by Horne, that he accomplished his task while riding on horseback. This may account in part for the disjointed paragraphs and broken sentences so often found. These artificial divisions are to be lost sight of in interpreting the Scriptures, a single thought sometimes running through several verses, and occasionally even overleaping the boundary which separates the chapters.

The intelligent reading of the Bible will be very much helped by the use of maps of Bible lands. New light will thus be often thrown on familiar passages, while some passages not understood will be made clear. We hardly know of a more intensely interesting employment for a lover of the Bible than to begin at Genesis, and read through, map in hand, finding every place mentioned (so far as Scripture localities can now be found) as the reading progresses. Some of the driest details of the historical books of the Old Testament will be found to have a richness of meaning not before anticipated; while the travels of our Lord and of the Apostles will be wonderfully intensified in interest. Names of places will not then seem to be mere arbitrary signs, like numbers or mystic symbols, but will be associated with localities and relative positions of places.

A knowledge of the relative chronology of the different parts of the Bible will add very much to the interest of the Bible reader. True, there are many vexed questions in Bible chronology; but leaving these for the doctors to discuss, we can find enough firm, undisputed ground on which to tread. How much more interesting the prophecies of the Old Testament become when we read them in connection with the historical books! We thus ascertain the cotemporary persons and incidents, and can more readily see the force of the predictions uttered by men inspired of God. So, also, in the New Testament, if we read the Epistles, especially those of Paul, in connection with the Acts of the Apostles, we have a better understanding of them than if we read each epistle as an independent work.

The manners and customs of Bible lands also afford very great help in reading the Bible. Fortunately for us the Orientals are so stereotyped in everything that pertains to outward life that we may easily learn the customs of Bible times by learning those of the East to-day. Vastly different as these are from those we see at home, it is no wonder if persons unacquainted with them are often puzzled to find out the meaning of some passages in the Bible. A knowledge of Oriental customs will often explain clearly what would otherwise be a dark and incomprehensible text. It must not be forgotten that these allusions, so mysterious to us, were perfectly clear to those who read or heard them. Books of Eastern travel are so common in our day that we may easily become acquainted with Eastern manners.

One very interesting and profitable way of reading the Bible will be found in the use of the marginal references. It will thus be seen that in many cases the Bible is its best interpreter. Many a dark passage is made clear by comparison with parallel texts. The comprehensiveness and unity of the Scriptures are also made evident by such comparison. There is seen to be a wonderful relation of the different parts to each other; and though these books were written by different hands in different ages of the world, there is here plentiful evidence that they were inspired by the same infinite mind.

We could give abundant illustration of each of the points here briefly touched were we writing an essay instead of a newspaper article. Our design is, by a few hints, to call attention to some of the modes by which Bible reading may be made more interesting and profitable than by a mere rapid routine reading. This is better than nothing, we admit, but not what we ought to aim at in these days of increasing intelligence. A diligent reading and understanding of the Bible will be found a great help in religious life.

A Remarkable Surgical Case.

On the 13th of September, 1848, Phineas P. Gage, foreman of a gang of men engaged in blasting a deep cut in the Rutland and Burlington road, had a tamping iron blown through his brains, and recovered within sixty days, living twelve years after.

The tamping iron was three and a half feet in length, one and a quarter inches thick, and pointed at one end, the taper being seven inches long, and the diameter of the point a quarter of an inch. It weighed thirteen pounds. The point was upward and the iron smooth.

The missile entered the cheek outside the teeth, and under the cheek bone, went inside an inch behind the eye, and out of the top of the head in the center, two inches back of the line where the forehead and hair meet.

Gage was a perfectly healthy, strong, and active young man, twenty-five years of age, of nervo-bilious temperament, five and a half feet in height, average weight one hundred and fifty pounds, possessing an iron will as well as an iron frame, muscular system remarkably well developed, having had scarcely a day's illness from childhood up.

One piece of the skull had been broken out in fragments; another was raised and thrown back like a door, the scalp serving as a hinge; and on the opposite side of the wound there was another fracture and an elevation. The globe of the left eye was partially protruded from its orbit; the left side of the face was more prominent than the right. The opening in the skull was two inches wide by three and a half long, and the brain was hanging in shreds on the hair. The pulsation of the brain could be distinctly seen, and the doctor passed his finger in its whole length without the patient saying he felt pain.

In fifty-nine days the patient was abroad. On the third day there was inflammation and some delirium; and during several weeks there was occasional delirium; for two weeks of the time the patient lay in a stupid condition, and his death was expected and his grave-clothes prepared. On the twenty-fifth of November he went in a close carriage thirty miles to his home in Lebanon.

The subsequent history of the case is interesting. Gage came back to Cavendish in April in fair health and strength, having his tamping iron with him, and he carried it with him till the day of his death, twelve years after. The effect of the injury appears to have been the destruction of the equilibrium between the intellectual faculties and the animal propensities. He was now capricious, fitful, irreverant, impatient of restraint, vacillating—a youth in intellectual capacity and manifestations, a man in physical system and passions. His physical recovery was complete, but those who once knew him as a shrewd, smart, energetic, persistent business man, recognized the change in his mental character. The balance of his mind was gone.

He went to various places, being engaged here and there; was a year and a half in charge of horses at a livery stable; was exhibited at Barnum's Museum in New York; and in August, 1852, four years after his injury, left New England forever, and went to Valparaiso with a man who was going to establish a line of coaches. Here he lived eight years, occasionally driving a six-horse coach, and enduring many hardships. In 1859 his health began to fail. In 1860 he had a long illness, the nature of which can not now be ascertained.

He now left Chile, and Dr. Harlow lost all trace of him for some years, but finally found out that the mother and sister were in San Francisco, wrote to them and ascertained that Gage had got there in 1860; worked with a farmer at Santa Clara, and in February, 1861, was taken with epileptic fits; afterward he worked in several places; and finally, in May, 1861, had a succession of fits which lasted a couple of days, and carried him off.

Religious Condition of the South.

A very large congregation was in attendance last evening at Union Hall to listen to the lecture of Rev. Dr. Newman, of New Orleans, on the "Religious Condition of the South." The discourse was replete with interest, and was an earnest presentation of the wants and needs of the South in regard to religious instruction. The speaker, by citation of facts and figures, made a complete representation of the lies and misrepresentations that are made in reference to the condition, proclivities, and habits of the freedmen, and from personal knowledge, represented them to be industrious, frugal, and economical, as well as zealous to learn. It was listened to with marked attention by the intelligent audience, and can not fail to have an excellent effect.

The Doctor is an earnest and excellent speaker, and a devoted friend of progress and liberty. Our citizens must not forget that he is to address the Grant Club on the issues of the day on Wednesday evening, at such place as shall be announced in a future edition. We shall look for a large attendance.—Kalamazoo Telegraph, June 16.

Postage on the Advocate.

Inquiries come to us from subscribers wishing to know the regular rate of postage on a weekly paper. Some of these inform us what the postmasters are charging them, and we find it to be three or four times the lawful rate. We state for their information that the postage is only twenty cents a year, or five cents a quarter, payable in advance, and no postmaster has a right to charge more than this.

EXCURSION TO THE ROCKY MOUNTAINS.—We would call the attention of our readers to the account of the excursion to the Rocky mountains by the editor, Dr. Newman, who is now sojourning in the North.

We notice that Rev. Arthur Edwards, the associate editor of the Northwestern Advocate, gives in that paper a very glowing and interesting account of the recent ministerial excursion to the terminus of the great Pacific railroad.

DENTISTRY.—We are reliably informed that Dr. R. F. Wright, who is a first class dentist, will attend to work in his line for a few weeks at one-half his usual rates. This is a favorable opportunity of having dentistry done. His office is at 153 Customhouse street, between Dauphine and Burgundy.

We have received a circular containing the programme of exercises at the twenty-fourth annual commencement of the University of Michigan, in which we notice that the editor of the ADVOCATE, Rev. Dr. Newman, was to preach the sermon before the Christian Association on the evening of the twenty-first instant.

The undersigned gratefully acknowledges the receipt of valuable grants of books, tracts, cards, picture papers, and other Sunday school material from the Sunday School Union and Tract Societies of the Methodist Episcopal Church; a valuable package of books and tracts from the American Tract Society at New York, and a fine lot of stationery consisting of writing paper, pens, holders, envelopes, memorandum books from our kind friends Francis and Loutrel, 45 Maiden Lane, New York city. For all of which helps to our missionary work in the Opelousas district, the churches and schools of Western Louisiana return grateful thanks.

General Cyrus Bussey and the Times.

The Times and other rebel papers have never tired for the last twelve months in denying that the rebel portion of the people of the South bear any ill will toward Northern men as such. It has affected to draw a marked distinction between men from the North who come here with their families, their capital, their skill, and their industry with the intention of locating permanently here and identifying themselves with the State and its fortunes, and such as it pleases to term "carpet-baggers," who, as it represents them, are a sort of political freebooters with a carpet-bag in one hand and a ticket with their names on for an office in the other.

That this class of men is purely a supposititious one and exists solely in the lively imagination of the writers who are so faithfully and with such eminent success engaged in the Herculanean work of reviving that highly antique and respectable style of literature termed Southern is true; that the peculiar savagery and ferocity of their attacks on this supposititious class of men is not sensibly lessened by its imaginary character is doubtless due more to the inexorable necessities of the style aforesaid, whose cardinal requirements appear to be a highly cultivable imagination, a supreme hatred of all humanity that is not subservient to old class interests, and a Chinese disdain of all outside barbarians, than to any willful love of lying.

The class of men whom they aim to calumniate by styling them carpet-baggers are the same class who have always been esteemed the most valuable accessions to the population of the new States of the West. They are the young men who push out from the older States with health, enterprise, and brains to make fortunes and carve careers for themselves in newer countries. The wealth, progress, and free institutions of these young and growing empires are monuments of the achievements of these men whom the Times terms carpet-baggers. In every portion of the Union they are welcomed with delight, except by one solitary class of people in the Southern States. These people were that worst class of rebels, those who staid at home. But with an inconsistency that would be singular in any journal except the Times and its confreres, and with a most courageous forgetfulness of all its honeyed words to Northern business men, it has in several recent numbers singled out one of that very class of men whom it has invited here, a gentleman from the North, who has brought his family and his capital here, and invested the latter in an extensive business in our city, and made it his permanent home; whose social, business, and political antecedents in his former home were of the most respectable, honorable, and distinguished character, and whose name heads this article, for an assault whose maliciousness and paltry meanness would be remarkable (if it were possible for such things to be remarkable in the Times) by the utter absence of any provocation. General Bussey has combined since he has become a citizen of Louisiana all the qualifications which the Times has demanded as necessary before a man can have its permission to aspire to the distinguished honor of living and paying taxes in the same State and city with itself. He is the head of a well-known and wealthy business firm, has brought to his adopted State capital, enterprise, business skill, and integrity, and by the success of his enterprises has benefited the community among whom he has cast his fortunes, and he crowns the list of its requirements by not being an occupant of or candidate for any political office, either national or State.

And yet because two of the oldest, most prominent, and influential journals of the Northwest—the Keokuk Gate City and the Burlington Hawkeye, either of whose subscription lists equals that of the Times, and with which in point of editorial ability, typographical execution, news, moral tone, and general influence the Times can not compare, have taken occasion from his temporary visit to a people who love and honor him to speak of him in complimentary terms and to allude in terms of respect to his honorable and distinguished career as a citizen and a soldier in his former State and to commend him to the confidence and esteem of the people of this State, the Times has its ire violently excited, suddenly sees a carpet-bag of most odious dimensions, reads him a lecture upon his impudence in being thought well of at his former home, and reads another to the Gate City and the Hawkeye on their obscurity and general nothingness. That he should be a distinguished man in that land of "mud-sills" was presumption enough in the eyes of this representative of Southern chivalry; that he should have won part of that distinction in the late "wicked war" in which he and other "mud-rills" took the liberty of supporting the flag of their country and handsomely flogging the chivalry was worse presumption; that he should then have the audacity to come and live in this city and profess the same principles for which he fought and for which he would have been lynched in the good old times of the "Union as it was" was the acme of presumption. This all, however, could be borne in silence by a brave but subjugated people who are inhumanly deprived by a diabolical Congress of their rights to wollop "niggers" and lynch abolitionists.

But that he should have the temerity of being highly spoken of by these "obscure" journals in connection with a rumor that he might possibly be named by his friends as a candidate for the United States Senate from Louisiana, and that these same "obscure" journals should have the impudence to assert as the result of a life-long acquaintance with the gentleman that the people of Iowa would venture to regard him as in every way, fitting and worthy man to fill that position, and to congratulate the people of Louisiana if they should make such a choice, causes every particular feather in the quill of the Times' writer to bristle with rage at this last most outrageous display of carpet-bag effrontery.

We have this to say to the Times. Should General Bussey be a candidate for United States Senator, and be elected, it will be from the unsought wishes, and by the unsolicited votes of the representatives of the people of Louisiana, and Louisiana will have a representative in that body who in integrity, devotion to his country, statesmanship, intellect, business skill, and stainless character will bear most favorable comparison with any one whom the rebels of Louisiana ever sent there before, or would send now if they could.

We would say further that while we believe the Times in such articles does reflect the true sentiments of a portion of the Southern people—that portion who follow the La Crosse Democrat and the Times—yet we do know that it does not represent the better portion of even the former rebels. From personal intercourse and observation we are well assured that a large class of the honorable, high-minded people of the South who did aid the rebellion do not share in the animosity of the Times against Union men, but gladly welcome all honest men to citizenship here, and all the rights accruing from it.

It is due to General Bussey to say that we do not presume to speak for him, or with his consent or knowledge. We have merely taken the Times' assault upon him as a commentary upon its own assertions, and a sample of the fairness of its dealings with Northern men who differ from it in their political opinions.

The Grant Ratification Meeting.

As near as we could estimate from twelve to fifteen thousand people were assembled in Lafayette Square at this meeting. We went to press too early last week to give an account of the proceedings. We this week publish the able speech of General Bussey. The meeting was enthusiastic in the extreme. Every allusion to the unconquerable hero who heads the nation's ticket was greeted with tremendous shouts. We noticed in particular a fact which we commend to our Democratic friends. Every allusion to the Republican party and the great deeds it has wrought, even in its youth, was completely drowned in the thundering shouts of the vast assemblage. The graceful and dignified manner of the presiding officer, Governor Warmoth, and particularly his felicitous introductions of the several speakers, contributed greatly to the unusual success of the meeting.

Captain Sheridan's Speech.

We regret not being able this week to lay this unsurpassable effort of wit, oratory, and humor before our readers. Captain Sheridan is a born orator, and "fit" likewise.

The vast crowd stretching from the stand to the gates stood crowded in one solid mass without stirring for more than one hour, chained to their places by the rare eloquence of the speaker, and so silent that you could hear his lowest tones through the whole assemblage. That silence was, however, almost momentarily broken by the roars of laughter or thundering cheers which the orator seemed to have the power to evoke at will.

When he closed we heard many persons echo the remark of a gentleman, himself no inexperienced speaker, who said, "That was the best speech I have heard for twenty years."

We need just such men as Captain Sheridan to stump the State and this city this fall. He will be worth twenty thousand voters.

General Bussey's Speech.

We ask the attention of our business men to this very able and interesting speech. Its appropriateness to the times commends it to all Louisianians of whatever shade of politics. A few comprehensive minds, trained business men like General Bussey, in our national councils would achieve more in five years for the material interests of the South than a hundred men of the old time buncombe and Turveydrop style.

A TRIP TO THE ROCKY MOUNTAINS.

The Excursion—Mine Host—The Party.

BY REV. DR. NEWMAN.

Through the politeness of George Washington Frost, Esq., we were invited to join in an excursion to the Rocky Mountains. Mr. Frost is the general disbursing agent for the Union Pacific railroad, and on behalf of the company issued invitations to the officers of the General Conference to accompany him so far as the road is now completed; and we are happy to say that he performed the part of "mine host" with no ordinary skill, taste, and urbanity. True to his "Down East" nature, at first sight a little cold in manner, and at times brusque in his replies to the many questions of the more inquisitive of the company; yet, on entering within we found his heart a little paradise, where the flowers of love were blooming; the perennial springs of a joyous nature sending up their laughing waters in the sunshine of good fellowship, and the birds of hope and promise caroling their mellow, rapturous notes of delighted friendship, and awakening responsive music in all hearts. Untiring in his efforts to make each happy, he was not less economical in his arrangements than painstaking in the performance of his task as the almoner of the company's hospitality. We congratulate the directors of the Union Pacific railroad on having secured the services of a gentleman whose intelligence, energy, and executive ability are only excelled by his probity, courtesy, and the very high esteem in which he is held by the bishops and clergy of the most powerful of American churches.

Rarely has it fallen to the lot of mortals to pass a week of pleasure so unalloyed. The guests numbered forty-four; from rollicksome youth to benignant old age; from blushing maidenhood to matronly dignity; from the youthful minister to the venerable bishop. And there were those of all Caucasian shades—from him who recalled African to him who constantly suggested the red man of the forest. There was also the grave thinker whose smile was the whisper of a laugh; the humorist whose quaint suggestions touched the deeper sensibilities of the soul; the poet whose flowing rhythm was like the falling of rain drops upon plates of silver, or whose Miltonic blank verse in praise of the primordial mountains reached the sublime; the wit whose scintillations were like the Borean lights, brilliant but cold, whose corruscations were like jeweled daggers, beautiful but piercing to the soul's quick, whose sparkles were like the rainbow bubbles on the cup of mirth, or whose laughter provoking punnings were ludicrous as the magic strokes of a harlequin, or the grotesque caricatures of a merry-Andrew; the singer whose rich, sweet voice now entranced us with heavenly visions as he sang—

"A thousand years my own Columbia."

No company ever crossed prairie and mountain whose own resources of high-toned social pleasure proved so exhaustless. The cup was brim-full at the hour of parting. It was the best example of a well rounded Christian character, and of the harmonious blending of the heavenly and the earthly, we have ever known. It was the natural manifestation of our God-given nature, refined by piety and restrained by religion. It was joyousness without levity, and familiarity which does not breed contempt. It was well that some were there who all their lifetime had mistaken melancholy for piety. Of all men the Christian should be the most joyful. He has the promise of the life that now is and of that which is to come. Laughter is no less acceptable to God than praise when both come from a pure heart. As in all companies of mortals, so in this, there were those who were receptive and those who were communicative, yet no Rocky Mountain party ever had fewer of the former and more of the latter than ours. Of the forty-four, each one brought some flower to the bouquet of our delights. True, some brought wild flowers, yet they were God's flowers. Of the famous forty-four, three may be singled out as the punsters and rhymesters of the company. Two are so near alike in the golden hue of hair and skin, in the rotundity of physique, in their azure-tinted eyes, in their pear-shaped lips, in the music of their voices, in their rollicksome, laughter-begetting laugh, in their quickness at repartee, that a stranger might judge them twins. But they are not; one is too short, and the other too long. Next to these two punsters was a lovely lady of most brilliant parts, of whom many might sing with Byron:

"Maid of Athens, ere we part,
Give, oh, give me back my heart!"

The pleasure of the excursion was peculiar for its variety. Now, the boundless prairie, adorned with blue and yellow flowers, filled us with delight; now, the broad and shallow Platte, studded with islands, and along whose banks we sped for hundreds of miles, awakened joyful wonder; now, the Black Hills and snowy range beyond elicited exclamations of admiration. As we entered the heart of the Platte Valley, six hundred miles long, some lynx-eyed excursionist would descry an antelope, an elk, a buffalo, and then would set the car all agog to see these wonders to Eastern eyes. When the scenery grew monotonous, the company organized a meeting, with Dr. Harris for Chairman and Dr. Woodruff for Secretary, the object of which was intellectual enjoyment. During a long delay on the plains of Laramie, speeches were made by Bishop Simpson and Drs. Foster and Newman. The subject considered was "Man," the masterpiece of creation, the objective centre of all God's providences, and for whose elevation all inventions and discoveries are ordained. At another time it was suggested to issue a daily paper to which all the guests were contributors. Within two hours the daily was ready and read by the writer.

A WORD TO EXCURSIONISTS.

It has been our good fortune to travel much, both in this country and also in the Old World; and in our journeyings we have stopped at the more celebrated watering places, and know somewhat of their advantages; we can, therefore the more intelligently state the superior advantages of a tour to the Rocky Mountains. From Chicago to the plains of Laramie the railroad accommodations are equal to those on Eastern roads. Starting from Chicago, the inland New York of America, the traveler sweeps over the fairest portion of Illinois, and within five hours thereafter sups at Clinton, on the banks of the Mississippi. For a distance of 354 miles he now rolls over the magnificent prairie lands of Iowa, delighted with the boundless prospect on either side, and charmed with the richness of the soil, the variety of the flowers and grasses, and the thrift of the people. He is now on the banks of the Missouri, whose turbid, rapid waters rush on to the gulf of Mexico. And here, like Great Basle and Little Basle on the Rhine, are two rival cities—Council Bluffs on the east and Omaha on the west. But to the excursionist Omaha is the greatest attraction, both as the initial point of the Union Pacific railroad, and as destined to be the greatest city between Chicago and San Francisco. Within thirteen years Omaha has grown from a casual settler to a permanent population of twenty thousand. On one of the main streets stands the first log house built within the present corporation limits, and it is wisely preserved, not only to indicate Omaha's growth but the wealth of its citizens in their substantial houses of merchandise and in their palatial residences. Located on the hills, which like terraces rise and recede from the Missouri, its situation is admirable, whether for the purity of its atmosphere or its delightful prospect. From the residence of mine host I could trace a steamer for forty miles up the winding river, and then looking eastward behold a panoramic view of hill and dale, plain and mountain, river and lake, of surpassing beauty. Fortunately there is room on the plains below and on the hills above for indefinite expansion; and half a million of people could comfortably live within the limits above described. Already the town is creeping up the hills, and the more affluent citizens have erected their elegant residences on the woodland summits which overlook the river, and which are seen from afar through the openings in the forest. We were informed that the merchants of Omaha are accumulating substantial fortunes in the pursuit of legitimate business, and as the adjacent farms are settled and cultivated business will increase. The chief entrepot for the produce of all Nebraska; the central city between New York and San Francisco, and the initial point of the Union Pacific railroad, Omaha must grow in size and increase in wealth.

The tourist from the East will find good hotel accommodations at Omaha, where he should rest a few days prior to his departure for the Rocky Mountains. A ride of thrilling interest is before him. Entering an elegant car, he gradually ascends from Omaha, which is 967 feet above tide water, to Sherman, the summit of the Black Hills, which is 8262 feet above the the level of the sea. From Omaha to Cheyenne, the base of the Black Hills, and a distance of 517 miles, the average ascent is ten feet to the mile, and to the summit of the Black hills, thirty-one and a half miles beyond, and the highest point on the line, it is a fraction more than seventy one feet to the mile, which is not so great as the grades on some of our Eastern roads. Leaving the initial city the traveler is soon in the great Platte valley, 600 miles east and west, and forty miles from the low, rolling hills on the north, to the opposite and almost similar range on the south. From its eternal fountains in the Rocky Mountains, and through its southern and northern branches, the Platte river, broad and shallow, flows through this noble valley into the broad Missouri. Its refreshing waters are in sight from Fremont to O'Fallons on its north branch, and to Julesburg on its southern branch, a distance of 330 miles. At North Platte Station the road crosses this noble river over a bridge three thousand feet long. At the first sight of this river our party burst forth into rapturous shouting, and for several minutes the air resounded with interjections of delight. The valley widens with the advance, the hills behind sink into the plain till earth and sky meet in the far distance, and those on either side grow fainter till their tufted summits seem like islands rising from an emerald sea, while far away, like giants slumbering on the horizon, appear the Black Hills, deep gullied and peaked, and rising above them in grandeur and glory, the Snowy Range, immense, magnificent, and from base to summit covered with snow, a cloudless sun revealing its perfect whiteness. It seemed vast and calm and inviting like the bosom of God. To the enjoyment of a landscape so grand is to be added the excitement of other scenes. Along the water courses may be seen the buffalo, or bounding over the plain the elk and antelope; an Indian sitting around his wigwam, or mounted on his fleet steed and flying across the prairie, clad in the rude accoutrements of his barbarous warfare, appears as a relic of the past. For enjoyable excitement we know of no tour in America preferable to one to the Rocky Mountains.

And on Sherman Summit some Leland or Cozzens should open a hotel for tourists, from which they can make detours to the Snowy Range, the American Alps.

THE GREAT RALROAD.

The Union Pacific railroad is the most stupendous enterprise of the kind in the history of modern times. As a mere railroad it has many things in common with the shortest of our Eastern roads; but its transcendent character is displayed in its length, the natural barriers to be overcome, the rapidity with which it is constructed, the excellency of the materials used, the broad and financial basis on which the credit of the company rests, the military, commercial, and moral necessities for the existence of such a road, and its incalculable influence upon the future of our common country. The conception of such an enterprise is of the same kith and kin with that of the submarine cable uniting the two continents, and the tunnel through the Alps, by which the traveler may pass in one day from the cantons of Switzerland to the vine-clad plains of Piedmont. Years ago a man of the future dreamed that he saw on the banks of the Mississippi a guide-board with the double inscription: "To the Atlantic," "To the Pacific." The dream of that enthusiast is destined to an early realization. What was once a conception is now an embodiment. The transcendent fact hastens to its consummation. While you read three-quarters the distance across our continent is traversed by railway—1300 miles west of Chicago, or ninety hours from New York to the heart of the Rocky Mountains. So rapidly is the road being laid that it is confidently believed that on the Fourth of July, 1869, one year from the coming anniversary, the traveler can breakfast in Boston on Monday and sup on Saturday night in San Francisco. These are the eloquent facts.

The triumph of human genius is a joy forever. The popular impression that the construction of the Pacific Railroad was physically impracticable, and financially impossible, has been dissipated by undeniable facts. The difficulties from high grades have been overcome, and the iron horse now proudly mounts the Sierra Nevada on the west and the Rocky Mountains on the east. And the rapidity with which the road is built is one of those marvels which challenge our admiration. On January 1, 1866, but forty miles of the line were laid; within the succeeding twelve months 385 miles more were completed: and since then the track has been pushed with such energy that a twelvemonth will suffice to complete this magnificent work.

On the plains of Laramie we timed the workmen, who laid down eight rails in a minute, and while we were dining in the boarding cars, the train was pushed to the extremity of the track, over a mile of new made road. As the road is being constructed by two companies, one working from Omaha, and the other from San Francisco, and will so continue until the two shall meet, a wholesome rivalry exists, which will culminate in joy and glory when the workmen shall shake hands with each other over the completion of the greatest achievement of this or of any other age. The point of junction of the two roads is assumed to be Salt Lake City, which will be monumental for all time to come, and it were worth a trip there to witness that meeting. Ordinarily, a work advanced so hastily can not have the qualities of thoroughness and permanence; but the rapid progress is the result of an intelligent system, which assigns to each man his task, whether to lay a rail or to drive a spike; and, from personal observation we hesitate not to compare this road both for firmness and smoothness to the very best roads in Europe.

Financially the Union Pacific road is a success. With a wisdom and liberality rarely displayed by governments the government of the United States stands pledged for the success of this magnificent enterprise. Organized under several acts of Congress passed in 1862 and 1864, the company is controlled by twenty directors, five of whom are appointed by the President of the United States to represent the government, and fifteen elected by the stockholders. The authorized capital is one hundred million of dollars, and the available resources of the company are as follows:

I. An absolute grant by government of twenty alternate sections (12,800 acres) per mile of the public lands through which the road runs, that is, through a distance of 1700 miles from Omaha to Sacramento, with the right to use the coal, iron, and lumber thereon.

II. Congress has authorized a special issue of the six per cent bonds of the United States to the amount of fifty million of dollars for the benefit of the road.

III. The government grants the company the right to issue its own first mortgage bonds on its railroad and telegraph lines to an amount equal to the bonds of the United States, as a lien prior to all claims of the government, or to any claims whatsoever. It is also provided that the company shall transport the government mails, messages, troops, supplies, etc., at its regular rates, half the compensation to be paid in cash and the balance applied to canceling the government advances. It is estimated that the land grants are now worth $1 50 per acre, and as these lands are now in market and in demand they will net the company an enormous revenue. And the present earnings of the yet unfinished road dispel the least doubt as to the financial success of the enterprise.

For the year 1867 the gross earnings of the road were $1,421,552 27; the operating expenses, $333,623 92; and the net earnings, $1,087,901 35. And this is but an earnest of the future. It is universally admitted that when the road is finished it will be one of the most productive properties in the country. It is estimated that the wagon freights across the mountains in a single year amounted to $13,000,000; that 230,000 tons are carried westward, and that not less than 154,000 persons pass and repass annually from the Atlantic to the Pacific; and at present prices for both passengers and tonnage, the transportation would amount to $31,000,000. No one can doubt the increase of business when the road shall have been completed, and it were a low figure to put the earnings of the road at $55,000,000 per annum. With these facts before us we can not but be proud that we live in this age of mechanical and commercial wonders—the triumph of American genius. And, having traversed the route to the base of the Rocky Mountains, we most heartily commend the line of the road to those of our citizens who are contemplating a permanent residence in the far West.

THE GREAT RESULT.

The imagination falters in the attempt to compass the magnificent results attending the completion of the Union Pacific railroad. Belting the continent; traversing five of the largest territorial sections of our national domain; linking together two of the mightiest oceans on the face of the globe; bridging three of the longest American rivers, and itself intersected by other roads from every considerable inland point, it is a political power, the importance of which, whether in peace or in war, can not be fully estimated by man. As a channel of commerce, it raises the United States to the position of a supreme commercial importance among the nations of the earth; it gives New York precedence to London; it opens up a new avenue for the products of the farther East; it renders unnecessary the tedious and perilous doubling of Cape Horn, and transfers to the land the power and wealth of two seas. China, Japan, and the East Indies are now our neighbors, and a trade with them, which is worth in the aggregate $135,000,000 per annum, and which has been shared only by Western European nations, is now laid at the feet of American enterprise.

But rising above these political and commercial considerations in beneficence and glory are those of a moral and religious character. Along this great highway of our nation shall spring up schools of learning, halls of justice, houses of mercy, and temples of piety. The forbidding vulgarity, sensuality, and coarseness of frontier life shall give place to refinement of manners, chastity, and the tranquillity of domestic enjoyment. The revengeful Sioux and Pawnee, with kindred tribes, shall learn more certainly the practice and benefits of the Christian religion. The disgusting crimes which now keep pace with our Western civilization shall seek the darkness of seclusion from the reproving light of a living Church. The teeming millions which now and which shall dwell upon those vast prairies beyond the Missouri, and build their homes on the slopes of the Sierra Nevada and Rocky Mountains shall the more certainly abide beneath the shadow of the Almighty. And then from beyond the sea shall come in untold millions the pagan in his blindness to behold the glory of the Son of God. Without extravagance of rhetoric or irreverence of expression, we unhesitatingly assert that the Union Pacific railroad is the grandest missionary enterprise of the nineteenth century.

Lord, What Wilt Thou Have Me to Do?

As God is the creator of man, as he has redeemed him, and as he has every day protected him and provided for him, who will say that man is not the Lord's to the greatest extent of which we can conceive of the idea of possession? And if this be so, who will deny that God has the right to every service which man can pay? Should not, then, every man seriously ask himself from day to day this question, "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?" If from our hearts we should ask it would it not be shown us what we should do as plainly as it was Paul, the great apostle to the Gentiles? And then, if we were as willing to obey, though it called for great efforts, and often for great humility, what would we not see accomplished for the Lord? We would have the members of every church working individually and as a company for the conversion of the world. There would be much crossbearing, no doubt, but there would be more enjoyment in religion. The reason there is no more religious joy and rejoicing among Christians is because there is too little working. The Lord is not going to pay you "good measure, pressed down, and running over," for a life of idleness. He would not thus encourage slothfulness. You must feel if you would find and retain the favor of God that you must do something. Paul felt this immediately when the Lord met him in the way, and brought conviction to his heart. He said, "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?" A man can not sit down on the stool of do-nothing and let the world go to ruin around him, and yet retain the favor of God.

Many feel that if they could accomplish great things and win a great name among men they would bestir themselves, but not seeing such a prospect they put forth no exertion. But there are many little things, things easily to be done in the work of extending the kingdom of Christ over the whole earth as well as great things. These are important, however, just as the chinking is necessary to permanency in building a stone wall. If God has not given you the capacity for handling large blocks of granite, then work with all your might in putting in the chinking. "Ah, but that isn't doing much." "That's not so honorable."

Not doing much! Is it not obeying God? And is not obeying God doing much? Not honorable? Is not all work for the Master honorable? It may be that your field is more obscure than another; the world may not know so much of it, and the praises of men may seldom fall upon your ear. But the work is not being done for man, but for God. He watches every step you take, counts every tear you shed in your anxiety for the success of his cause, and will reward you accordingly.

If a minister in answer to the inquiry of his heart, "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?" finds himself in the order of God's providence in an obscure field of labor, among a poor or ignorant people, is he to feel that his work is less honorable than that in the great city? Or that the souls there are less precious to the Redeemer? No! all of God's work is equally honorable. All souls are alike precious.

The searcher for diamonds may often find those that are rough and unsightly. He does not for this reason, however, throw them away, considering only the more polished ones valuable. They are diamonds, though not attractive to the eye. He therefore gathers them up, not presuming to fix a value thereon until they have passed through the hands of the polisher. The latter thereafter will be more competent to establish the value. So let the minister of God in the most obscure field of labor, among the most unassuming people, gather in souls to the Church, and to the service of God, and uncouth and ignorant though they be, they are soon to go into the hand of the great polisher—their creator; and he in fixing an estimate thereon, will decide every one, even the weakest and dullest, of priceless value.

But these feelings should not only possess the heart of the minister, but every member of the Church of God should also feel that he occupies his present position in the order of God's providence. And after seeking in earnest prayer to know what God would have him do, he should immediately and constantly obey the command. "Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might."

If there was but one sinner on the earth, heaven would be interested for him, and for his salvation should all the millions of earth labor and pray.

Card of Thanks.

The guardian (whose name is hereto subscribed) of the children of the late Augustus Winkelmann feels himself in duty bound to express, in their behalf, his sincerest thanks to the agents of the Germania Life Assurance Company, Messrs. H. Worch and Phil D. Mayer, for the prompt payment of the amount of insurance of two thousand dollars. At the same time, the subscriber calls attention to the fact that the heirs are, independent of the said amount of insurance, entitled to dividends, although the father of the children has been a member of the company not quite two years.

In my capacity as the head of a family, I consider it a duty to call the attention of the public to the advantages of life assurance companies generally, and particularly to the conscientious and excellent management of the Germania Life Assurance Company. JOHN H. BRUNS.

NEW ORLEANS, June 10, 1868.

Speech of Hon. Thomas J. Durant.

We will publish next week the great speech of this distinguished Louisianian at Mechanics' Institute. Mr. Durant is a rare master of the King's English. We think we never listened to his superior in this regard. His speech was a most masterly presentation of the great issues of the day and vindication of Republican principles. Louisiana may well be proud of her gifted and distinguished son.

Now and Then.

Times, 1865.

It is with pleasure that I can turn from these stories of fraud upon every side to the stainless character of the officer who is leaving here for his home after some six months of earnest work in restoring law and order, quiet and security to this community, where it has been so long unknown. I gladly use your columns—always the foremost to expose corruption and reward integrity—to testify from personal acquaintance and observation, verified by the voice of the people of all this district, of the absolute incorruptibility, the morality, patriotism, and talent of Brigadier General Cyrus Bussey, of Iowa. As he will be enjoying the welcomes of his neighbors and the otium cum dignitate of civil life before this article can by any possibility meet his eye—his name being in the list of generals just mustered out of the service—and as the writer has no expectation of ever again meeting him, I trust that this feeble tribute to his worth will at least bear with it the merit of unbiased judgment.—Times Correspondent.

Times, 1868.

Another Richmond is "in the field," or, more plainly, another Radical candidate for Senatorial honors has entered the lists. Parson Newman informs the score or two of "trooly loils" who read his ADVOCATE that one General Cyrus Bussey, once a "poor and friendless lad," but now "a distinguished fellow citizen," has been nominated for the high position mentioned—and by whom does the reader suppose? Why, two obscure country sheets in Iowa yclept respectively the Keokuk Gate City and the Burlington Hawk Eye.

If the Iowans, and numerous others we wot of, would turn their hawkeyes to a close inspection of their personal concerns, and permit Louisiana and her people to work out their own redemption, it would be far better for the peace and general interests of the whole country. This is our opinion, without especial regard to Mr. Bussey or his claims to represent Louisiana in the Senate of the United States.

The following letter from Chief Justice Chase has been published:

MY DEAR SIR: You are right in believing that I "shall never abandon the great principles for the success of which I have given my entire life." I adhere to my "old creed of equal rights," without one jot or tittle of abatement. I shall be glad if the new professors of that creed adhere to it as faithfully. I am amazed by the torrent of invectives by which I am drenched. Almost everything alleged as fact is falsehood out of the whole cloth. Where an allegation has a little fact in it the fact is so perverted and travestied that it becomes falsehood. I know no motive for all this except disappointment that impeachment has not thus far proved a success, coupled with a belief that I have done something to prevent its being a success. I have not been a partisan of impeachment certainly; but I have not been a partisan on the other side. As presiding officer over the trial, my conscience testifies that I have been strictly impartial; and I am sure that any one who reads the report will say so. Individually I have my convictions and opinions, but I have very seldom given utterance to them. Indeed, I do not think that the case, in any of its aspects, has been the subject of conversation between myself and more than four or five Senators, and then only casually and briefly. No Senator will say that I have sought to influence him. The real ground of denunciation is that I have not been a partisan of conviction; and this denunciation I am willing to bear. They may denounce and abuse me, and read me out of the party if they choose. I follow my old lights, not the new. What the developments of the future may be I know not. I neither expect nor desire to be a candidate for office again. It would, however, gratify me exceedingly if the Democratic party would take ground which would assure the party against all attempts to subvert the principle of universal suffrage established in eight, and to be established in all of the Southern constitutions. Then, I think, the future of the great cause—for which I have labored so long—would be secure, and I should not regret my absence from political labors.

SALMON P. CHASE.

THE ANGELS THERE WILL TEACH US.

To the heavenly land; to the heavenly land,
Where the saints and the seraphs stand;
We are on our way; we are on our way,
A united and happy band.
CHORUS.
For the angels there will teach us
How to sing a sweeter song!
And no sorrow'll ever reach us,
In that happy, happy throng,
In the heavenly land, in the heavenly land,
Where the saints and the seraphs stand.

Tho' we often tire; tho' we often tire,
Where the pathway is steep and straight,
We will still press on; we will still press on,
Till we pass through the golden gate,
Cho. For the angels there will teach us, etc.

But we need not fear; but we need not fear,
For we've Jesus to be our guide;
And with him so near; aye with him so near Naught of evil can e'er betide.
Cho. For the angels there shall teach us, etc.

Will you go with us? will you go with us!
Come and share this bright home above,
Where the endless day, where the endless day,
Is illumed by our Father's love,
Cho. For the angels there shall teach us, etc

DIED:

THOMAS—Died at New Orleans, on Sunday morning, June 7, of consumption, after a painful sickness of three months, WESLEY THOMAS, aged seventy years.

Brother Thomas was born on the Eastern Shore of Maryland, in Queen Anne county, and came to this city at the age of twelve years. He has been a faithful member of the First Street Methodist Episcopal church over twenty years, filling the various offices of trustee, Sunday school teacher, steward, and class leader up to the time of his death. When visited by the brethren of the church and asked as to his future prospects, he replied: "Do you think I have lived all this time and not made preparation for death?" His last words were: "I'll be ready in the morning! All is well!"

PROBABLY THE OLDEST LIVING MINISTER.—The venerable Henry Boehm, of the Newark Conference, the well-known traveling companion of Bishop Asbury, a few days since entered his ninety-fourth year. As a matter of grateful interest to his many friends, we give the following letter, sent by Rev. S. W. Hilliard, of the Elizabeth District. The letter is dated at Bloomfield, New Jersey, June 9: "As an item of much interest to the many friends of the venerable Father Boehm, I would say that he spent his ninety-third birthday in our beautiful suburban town, where he has been the guest of J. W. Snedeker, Esq., and the writer, for several days. He preached on Sabbath morning a brief, lucid, and eloquent sermon from Hebrews iv, 16. In the evening he made some interesting remarks after the sermon of the pastor. On Tuesday evening he attended the pastor's class, and gave a most edifying testimony to the excellence of religion and the priceless value of the class meeting and the love-feast. His health is most wonderful. His nerves are so steady that he shaves himself, and his memory is prodigious. He is a fine specimen of the Christian gentleman and minister, and a most worthy model for younger ministers to imitate."—New York Christian Advocate.

[Father Boehm is the grandfather of Mr. Fletcher Emley, of the firm of Emley, Van Norden & Co., of this city.—ED.]

He Thought He Never Prayed.

The Rev. Mr. Kilpin passed a very profane man, and having omitted to rebuke him, he awaited him in the morning at the same place.

When he approached Mr. Kilpin said:

"Good morning, my friend; you are the person I have been waiting for."

"O, sir," said the man, "you are mistaken, I think."

"I do not know you, but I saw you last night when you were going home from work, and I have been waiting some time to see you."

"Sir, you are mistaken, it could not have been me. I never saw you in my life before, that I knew of."

"Well, my friend," said Mr. Kilpin, "I heard you pray last night."

"Now, I assure you that you are mistaken; I never prayed in all my life."

"O," said Mr. Kilpin," "if God had answered your prayer last night you had not been here this morning. I heard you pray that God would destoy your eyes and ruin your soul."

The man turned pale, and, trembling, said:

"Do you call that prayer? I did; I did."

"Well, then, my errand this morning is to request you from this day to pray as fervently for your salvation as you have done for damnation; and may God in his mercy hear your prayer!"

The man from that time became an attendant on Mr. Kilpin's ministry, and it ended in his conversion to God. The Christian.

Unconscious Influence.

Our doctrine of unconscious and undesigning influence shows how it is that the preaching of Christ is often so unfruitful, and especially in times of spiritual coldness. It is not because truth ceases to be truth, nor of necessity, because it is preached in a less vivid manner, but because there are so many influences preaching against the preacher. He is one; the people are many. His attempt to convince and persuade is a voluntary influence; their lives, on the other hand, and especially the lives of those who profess what is better, are so many unconscious influences ever streaming forth upon the people, and back and forth between each other.

He preaches the truth, and they, with one consent, are preaching the truth down; and how can he prevail against so many, and by a kind of influence so unequal?

When the people of God are glowing with spiritual devotion to him and love to men, the case is different; then they are all preaching with the preacher, and making an atmosphere of warmth for his words to fall in. Great as is the company of them that publish the truth, proportionably great is its power. Shall I say more? Have you not already felt, my brethren, the application to which I would bring you? We do not exonerate ourselves; we do not claim to be nearer to God or holier than you, but ah! you do not know how easy it is to make a winter about us, or how cold it feels!—Dr. Bushnell.

CAMPAIGN SPEECHES.

Lieutenant Governor Dunn on calling the grand ratification meeting to order said:

FELLOW CITIZENS—I have the honor to call this meeting to order by nominating as its President his excellency H. C. Warmoth, Governor of Louisiana.

Remarks of the Hon. H. C. Warmoth.

FELLOW CITIZENS—I thank you sincerely for the high honor you have conferred upon me in selecting me to preside over this very large and intelligent assembly. We have met to-night for the purpose of ratifying the nominations of the Republican party for the offices of President and Vice-President of the United States. This will be the first occasion on which Louisiana has had to vote for the first offices within the gift of the people of this country for the last eight years. During that time wonderful changes have been brought about in this Southern country. The black thousands I see before me to-night have never before had the privilege of expressing their preferences as to the chief rulers of this great republic. But to night we take the initiative—we stand here together, and under the blackness of night we see no color whatever in each others' faces, we recognize no distinction whatever on account of color; but standing together as American freemen, having but one country and one flag, we unite our voices together and declare which one of these parties we will stand by in this contest. (Applause.) We are to say to-night whether that party which has ruled this country for the last eight years amid trials and difficulties never before known to our history shall rule it for the next four years to come. We are here to say whether the loyal men of this State will agree that that party which made four millions of our people freemen and enfranchised citizens shall still have the confidence of the American people. I believe that the heart of every loyal man in this State responds to the sentiment. I believe that no men could have been selected as the representatives of the principles we have advocated who would give greater satisfaction to the people than those we have nominated. We have said to the American people, both friends and foes, politically, all we ask is peace. We ask not the blood of any man. We have prosecuted this war that we might save the nation. We have expatriated none of those who were against the country; we have executed none of those who fought against the republic, however criminal they were; we have confiscated none of their property; we have proscribed only such of them as was necessary to secure the peace of the country.

We come before you to-day in this canvass on the same platform—no discrimination—no confiscation—no executions—but with a demand for peace and the hope of prosperity. This and this only is our platform. When General Grant said in the concluding words of his letter of acceptance "All we want is peace" he sounded the key note of the Republican party. Give us peace in this broad land and we will ask nothing more; we will submit these questions of politics to the judgment and discretion of the people. In a calm discussion of them and a final decision we will all abide. This is all we ask, but in asking it we feel that we have the power to secure it and the power to enforce it. (Cheers.)

Fellow citizens, you are here to-night not to hear me make a speech, but to hear other and more able and distinguished gentlemen. You are here to listen to your favorite orators—men, both white and black, whose patriotism and fidelity to the country is known and appreciated all over the land. I have the honor and pleasure of introducing to you on this occasion a gentleman whose duty he appreciates, and whose courage has led him to execute that duty amid all the social and political proscriptions that have been enforced against him—Judge Howe, of our Criminal Court.

Governor Warmoth in introducing General Bussey said:

When the first sound of hostility was heard at Fort Sumter, when the loyal people of the North arose as one man, with musket in hand, to vindicate the integrity of the government, the glorious State of Iowa was not behind her sister States. Among many thousands of gallant soldiers who buckled on their armor and marched triumphantly to the gulf was Major General Cyrus Bussey.

After helping to reconstruct Missouri and Arkansas he finally came to Louisiana, and has assisted in reconstructing our State. He is here to-night, and I have the pleasure of introducing him to you, that he may join his voice and his heart in the great triumph we have achieved.

Speech of General Bussey.

FELLOW CITIZENS: My name was on the list in advance of Captain Sheridan, and had I supposed that that young gentleman intended to make so good a speech, I certainly should have claimed the privilege of speaking in the order of the list. I find the position much harder to take now.

As Governor Warmoth has remarked, when the war first began I was opposed to a dissolution of the Union, and was one of the first to lend my feeble power toward sustaining the glorious cause in which I believe we were engaged. I had the honor of serving under General U. S. Grant during the long and bloody siege of Vicksburg, and for many months before, and it is with the utmost pleasure that I appear before you to-night to bear testimony in behalf of his fitness for the high position to which the American people have called him. I can reiterate the sentiment expressed by Judge Howe, that in my humble opinion there is not a man in the United States so well qualified to fill that high and noble position as General Grant. A man is not a great general who is simply a field marshal. General Grant possesses as much executive ability as any man who ever filled the Presidential chair, and one of the reasons why Andrew Jackson was so good a President was because he was a good general, and possessed of executive ability that would have enabled him to command a million of men had they been placed at his disposal. General Grant has this qualification, and yet there is a class of men who say that if he is elected President some other—a politician—will assume that function for him. It will be remembered that when the seize of Vicksburg had proved a failure he called a council of war and proposed running the batteries of Vicksburg with his boats and moving down upon Jackson, taking Vicksburg in the rear.

This his tried and trusted generals, Sherman, McPherson, and others, unanimously voted against, believing it was hazardous for the army to be placed in that position. After hearing their objections, when they declared in favor of moving back, and going down by way of Grenada, he remarked: "Your plan will take Vicksburg, but that is going backward. My plan will take Vicksburg by going forward. You will prepare your plans and move forward." Such is the man the Republican party has called upon to fill the office of President of the United States. He commanded the greatest army the world has ever seen. If you consult the files of the Democratic papers published during the war, and indeed up to a few months since, you will find the most glowing eulogies of General Grant. You will find him classed only second to Napoleon, and by many placed upon a par with him.

I am in favor of the principles of the Republican party because they mean something: because that party would leave behind the dead issues of the past and march on to things that are new and substantial.

I have always believed that it was not right for any nation or people to succeed to wealth and power and influence at the expense of the rights or liberties of any other nation or people; nor do I believe that the kind hearts which God has implanted in the human family will ever permit a nation to succeed at the expense of the life blood of those who have a right to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. The Democratic party, on the other hand, I find a negative party. To find out what their principles are you must first find out what are the principles of the Republican party, and then they are opposed to them. I am not in favor of any such party; I am in favor of a party which marches to the music of the Union. The Democratic party for the last seven years opposed every effort put forth to save the country. Their last declaration of "principles" was made in 1864, when they declared the war a failure, and that they were in favor of a cessation of hostilities with a view to recognizing the independence of the Southern Confederacy, which would have fastened the chains more firmly upon every slave. And they ask those who fought with General Grant to unite under a Democratic banner to go, to work to undo all that the gallantry of our brave soldiers accomplished by the sacrifice of the men who filled two hundred thousand graves. Is there one soldier who will do it? There may be a few who were disappointed in their aspirations during the war, but it is only these who will oppose their old commander.

If you read the Democratic papers to-day you will find they talk about electing George H. Pendleton, who was always opposed to the war. A few of their influential journals hold up the name of Hancock as their first choice, but they are willing for the sake of expediency to nominate Pendleton. Others denounce General Hancock as the hangman of Mrs. Surratt; and we find this same party talking about the nomination of that consistent Abolitionist, Chief Justice Chase, a man who was an Abolitionist when there was really no need to be an Abolitionist—so long ahead of his time that no good could be accomplished by it; and yet they are willing for expediency to take up Chief Justice Chase, having a faint hope that by so doing they may obtain the support of his former Republican friends—thus betraying the fact that their only object in the contest is the loaves and fishes.

I am for peace. God knows I hope never to see any more war. I went into the service in 1861, and went out in 1865. I fought to assist in making the principles of our government as enduring as time itself.

This noble State should long ago have been reconstructed, and would have been but for Andrew Johnson. The Democratic party say they are in favor of an early reconstruction of these States, but if so why does the President of the United States veto all the bills looking to reconstruction? They are not in favor of reconstruction except upon their own plan, and that plan is the exclusion of every black man from suffrage. (Cries of "That's so.") They would establish as near as possible the old state of things that existed here before the war.

Now, fellow citizens, several of these States are on the verge and ready to enter, and they will be States within twenty or forty days from now. When this has been accomplished, is there a man in the land of any party who will dare attempt the subversion of these reconstructed State governments and bring all our struggles upon us again? There is not a man or a party in the land that dare do it. When once reconstructed we are reconstructed for all time. It therefore becomes the people of this State to leave the dead issues of the past and march forward to that glorious future that awaits us as one of the finest States in the Union. Men of capital, wealth, and enterprise will come here and unite their fortunes with you when they are assured that a man can entertain his opinions undisturbed.

We want to turn our attention to internal improvements. We want a Southern Pacific railroad, starting from New Orleans, which owing to the advantages of climate, will draw the tide of travel which surges Westward. We want a railroad to Texas, connecting with the upper Red river, giving us a sure communication at all seasons with that rich country, enabling the merchant and planter to bring his cotton to market without being subject to the delays of low water. We want a railroad to Arkansas, and may have all these when the work of reconstruction is complete, if our people will awake to the fact that unless they put forth an effort that little city of Chicago will build railroads to these rich countries, and the trade and commerce which belongs to us will go Northward. The success of the Republican party in November and the election of Grant will give peace to the whole land, when all these substantial advantages may be secured to our State. The capitalists of the country are not afraid of the Republican party. They trusted the Republican party with the money to carry on the war, and they do not fear repudiation or national dishonor so long as that party is in power. The people who sustained the Union cause and gave their men and money to save the life of the nation will elect General U. S. Grant and Schuyler Colfax President and Vice-President of the United States in November next. The Republican party was never so thoroughly united as at present. From Maine to California the people sent up a unanimous request for the nomination of their great military hero. The nomination of Schuyler Colfax is one of the very best that could be made. He is loved and respected by every Republican in the land. Always true to the principles of loyalty, faithful to every trust since he first entered public life in 1854, when he was elected to Congress, he has been re-elected six times, and doubtless had a life lease on the office if he had so desired. These are our standard-bearers, and with these we can march to victory in November next. (Loud applause.)

WHAT IS SAID OF BUCHANAN.

To see ourselves as others see us may not always be flattering, and we do not propose to flatter the military gentleman whose sceptre as commander of the fifth military district is departing by a reproduction of the pen portraits of him from the columns of Republican papers in various sections of the country.

The Albany Evening Journal, in an editorial headed "Buchanan's Outrage," says:

General Buchanan, the general commanding in Louisiana, is a pliant tool of the Andrew Johnson policy. For months it has been apparent that he was in league with the rebels and conservatives to prevent reconstruction. A reign of terror prevails in his department. Traitors are bold, and Union men feel that their lives are not safe. The military arm, which was strengthened for their protection, has been turned against all who are suspected of loyalty.

The last act performed by Buchanan is the most infamous of all. Under the act of Congress an election was held on the eighteenth of April to decide upon the new constitution and choose a Legislature and State officers. The result was a success of the Republican party. The general kept back the returns for more than six weeks, and when it was no longer possible for him to conceal the result, ordered that the officers chosen should not enter upon their duties until after the first of November. The clear object of this despotic decree was to keep the State out of the Presidential campaign. In resistance to this the Board of Registration issued a proclamation calling upon the officers elect to resume their responsibilities on the fifteenth of June, as they had a clear right to do. Upon this the general put the President, and subsequently all the members, of the Board under arrest. He afterward released them in obedience to a telegram from General Grant, but informed them that he should try them by military commission unless Congress intervened.

The appeal is now to Washington. General Buchanan is the servant of law. Encouraged by the example of his master, he has ventured to set himself above the law, and ignore its restraints. Fortunately, there is a power which can reach him. May it not be slow to avenge this unparallelled outrage upon popular rights.

The Chicago Journal says:

The real issue between General Buchanan and the representatives of the loyal people of Louisiana is: Shall the State be permitted to take part in the approaching Presidential election? The voters have, by a large majority, ratified the constitution; they have elected State officers, and, in fact, done all in their power to effect reorganization.

The only impediment in the way is the order issued by Gen. Buchanan. This order is to the effect that the State officials will enter on the discharge of their duties on the first Monday in November, and that the General Assembly must not convene until the commanding general shall have been officially notified by Congress of the acceptance of the new constitution. The Chicago Times admits that Buchanan is a Democrat, and that "the order, if not revoked, will prevent the State from taking part in the Presidential election, as the general will not probably convene the Assembly before the time named by him for the installation of the State officers.

The duty of Congress is plain. General Grant wisely refused to interfere in the matter because Congress being in session and at this very time engaged in reconstruction legislation, upon that body devolves the responsibility of preventing Buchanan from carrying out his nefarious design. If the people of the State comply with the terms of reconstruction it is the duty of Congress to admit it; and if the general in command abuses his discretionary power, and instead of aiding reconstruction becomes an obstructionist, then Congress must remove the obstruction.

The New York Tribune says:

The political complications in Louisiana are affording the clearest evidence we have seen for many a day that the only obstacle to a speedy reconstruction of the Union is the policy of President Johnson. In accordance with the terms of the reconstruction bills, a new constitution for Louisiana was framed by the Convention which met last November, and under its provisions an election for State, parish, and municipal officers was held on the seventeenth and eighteenth of April last. This election was managed entirely by General Buchanan, and it is charged that rebels, by his orders, were treated with gross partiality, and that every effort was made by the military authorities to defeat the Radical ticket. The Union men, however, conscious of their strong majority, submitted quietly to this injustice; they even contented themselves with sober remonstrance when General Buchanan kept the ballots for six weeks after the election before announcing the result, in order, as everybody felt assured, that the count might be so arranged as to give the city of New Orleans at any rate to the Democrats. This proved to be the result when the laborious addition was completed; but the Republican majority in the State at large was too handsome to be overcome. The Union party secured the Governor and other chief officers, and the Legislature. According to the new constitution the civil officers were to be inaugurated on the second Monday after the official publication of the result of the election (which will be the fifteenth of June), and the General Assembly to meet on the third Monday. If this should be done the Assembly would undoubtedly ratify the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States, the new constitution of Louisiana would be approved by Congress, her Senators and Representatives would be admitted to the capitol, and the Republican policy of Reconstruction would be completely vindicated. But this Mr. Johnson and his agents resolved should not happen. Relying, as we suppose, upon that somewhat indefinite power of interference which the acts of Congress have necessarily left with the military commanders, General Buchanan forbids the assembling of the Legislature, and the inauguration of the civil officers at the time specified, and determines to keep Louisiana out of the Union at all hazards uutil after the Presidential election. The civil officers, he announces, shall not take possession until November, and the General Assembly shall not meet until the constitution has been accepted by Congress. This, of course, puts off readmission until November, and perhaps later. The ratification of the fourteenth amendment is made by the act of March 2, 1867, an indispensable condition of reconstruction, and it can not be ratified until the General Assembly meets and the new Governor has been inaugurated, whose assent is required to give validity to its acts. The purpose of keeping him out of office until November we think is plain enough. Tell us, now, who prevents reconstruction, the Republican party or the President?

We might reproduce other extracts, but these serve to show the sentiment of the Republicans of the powerful and loyal North.

LOCAL INTELLIGENCE.

TRIAL OF HARVEY GIBBS FOR MURDER.—This case was commenced Friday morning before Judge Howe, in the first district court, and occupied all that day and the greater part of yesterday.

Attorney General Lynch prosecuted on behalf of the State. Messrs. Dooley, Edwards, and Walton defended the accused.

On the night of the nineteeth of April, 1866, one William A. Jenkins was murdered on board a flatboat lying in the river at the foot of Notre Dame street. Three frightful wounds were inflicted on him with a hatchet, each of which cleft his skull to the brain. One of the wounds extended from the middle of the forehead along the nose, and nearly to his mouth. He was found on the deck of the boat, after having crawled from his bunk in the cabin, where the outrage was perpetrated. The hatchet which the murderer had used was found in the cabin, spotted with blood and hair; there was also a pocket book found in the cabin containing about $700. The wounded man was carefully removed by the police to the Charity Hospital, where he died next day.

Jenkins was a resident of Crawford county, Indiana. He came to New Orleans with a cargo of lime, and was captain and owner of the boat and cargo. He had five men on the boat with him as a crew. They came with him from Indiana, and from his neighborhood. Two of them were named respectively Harvey Gibbs and Wickliffe Gibbs—half-brothers. When the boat arrived here the crew were paid off, and on the evening of the eleventh of April already referred to, all except Harvey Gibbs and Jenkins left by steamboat to return to Indiana. Jenkins requested the former to remain with him that night, and for doing so he was to pay the passage money of Gibbs to his home. Between the hours of one and two o'clock on the morning of the twelfth the bloody tragedy took place. Soon after the police arrived, and found Jenkins as above related. Gibbs was not then to be found. About eight o'clock on the morning of the same day Gibbs went alone to the Charity Hospital to inquire about Jenkins. The latter was then in a state of unconsciousness. Gibbs soon after was found sitting on an empty barrel near the scene of the murder, and was arrested by Officer Pecora. On the evening of the twelfth he was taken to the hospital to be identified. Recorder Vennard was present to take the testimony of the wounded man. The Recorder asked Jenkins who had struck him. He answered, "Gibbs." "What Gibbs?" said the Recorder. The answer was, "Harvey Gibbs." Gibbs then approached Jenkins, and said: "I did not cut you, Bill; did I?" Jenkins answered, "Yes, you did." At the time of the arrest of Gibbs a spot of blood was noticed on his shirt both by Officer Pecora and Lieutenant Manning. Spots resembling blood were also seen on the wristbands of his shirt.

Dr. Smith, of the Charity Hospital, testified that at the time of Gibbs' identification Jenkins was in a stupor, and his answers seemed to be given with great hesitation and delay so as to imply that he did not understand what he was answering to. The opinion of Dr. Smith was different from that of Recorder Vennard and two other State witnesses as to the consciousness and mental condition of Jenkins at the time. Here the Attorney General's examination of the doctor was very critical and minute. The doctor stated in reply to a question from Mr. Lynch that in anything touching the mental condition of Jenkins any of the other witnesses present were as competent to judge as he himself. That the answers given by him (Jenkins) were before them all, and their coherency or incoherency was not to be known by medical knowledge, and that a physician was no better judge of the state of mind of the sick man by those indications than any other ordinary witness.

A great number of witnesses were heard for and against the accused, among them Wickliffe Gibbs and two other citizens of Indiana.

At one o'clock P. M. yesterday the case was submitted to the jury after a charge from Judge Howe. In half an hour thereafter the jury returned into court with a verdict of "not guilty." This was the third time that Gibbs was put on trial for this crime. The first time, owing to one of the jurors having separated from the others, there was a mistrial. On a second trial the jury failed to agree after being locked up for more than twenty-four hours. Gibbs established an excellent reputation on the trial both as to his conduct before and after the homicide of which he was yesterday acquitted. It was a general opinion among all present at the trial that the evidence was insufficient to warrant a jury in finding him guilty.

HOMICIDE OF EUGENE PINCHARD.—An inquest was held by Dr. Bradford Monday, at the Charity hospital, on the body of Eugene Pinchard, who was stabbed Sunday night, at the corner of Prieur and Palmyra streets.

Thomas Boda said that the difficulty took place about nine o'clock on the banquette in front of Fisher's grocery. There were four young men who appeared to have been drinking who were then quarreling, and who wanted to get more liquor from Mr. Fisher. Fisher would not give them any. One of the party, whose name was Joseph Constance, told Richard that he had struck somebody; Richard denied it; Constance added that the man was drunk and ought not to have been struck; Richard said it was a lie; he was then leaning against a gallery post, and Constance was ten yards distant; Constance then walked to where Pinchard was, took him by the throat with his left hand and dealt a blow at his side with his right hand; no knife was seen; Pinchard stepped back; a gentleman took hold of Constance and told him he was arrested; Pinchard said that he was cut, and was taken to a drug store, and subsequently to the Charity hospital; the weapon used was a bowie-knife.

Jacob F. Fisher sworn—When Toal struck Pinchard, Pinchard shoved him away; when the search for the knife was made, heard it drop on the floor; it was six inches long, and bloody, of a very large size; Pinchard at the time said that Constance had cut him, and that he (Pinchard) had to die.

The deceased was nineteen years old, and the wound was from two to three inches in length.

The verdict of the coroner's jury was that Constance had stabbed him without cause or provocation.

TOO ANXIOUS.—For the first time since New Orleans was founded a plan has been devised for labeling the streets in such a manner that the names can be read by night as well as by day. The contract was recently awarded to Mr. O'Hara, of Carondelet street, who has since devoted his entire energies to the prosecution of the work. But there is an occasional ungentle criticism indulged in here and there by some grumbler who lives in the rear of the city, because his immediate corner was not the first attended to. It is a work of some magnitude, and may not be finished for several months, although we learn that the first and fourth districts will probably be completed in about two weeks. As to the question of placing these labels on the cross streets first it is one entirely of convenience to the contractor, with which private parties have nothing to do. And as Mr. O'Hara has not yet applied for a dollar from the city treasury there will be ample time for the proper authorities to consider the justness of his claim when he presents it. Instead of growling at the performance of a good work, all reasonable men should be thankful to Mr. O'Hara for undertaking it at all for so bad a paymaster as our corporation has proved itself to be. So far as we have observed, the contract has been performed in a manner that leaves no room for just criticism. The method he adopts is to follow one street at a time, for instance Canal street, until it is finished, and then if not a parallel street a cross street like Carondelet and other streets. This methodical manner of doing it prevents confusion in the transportation of the signs and in labeling the streets. In due time all the cross streets will be properly designated under Mr. O'Hara's contract.

A MURDER.—Between 8 and 9 o'clock Sunday night a party of men, most of them partially intoxicated, were about separating or leaving a coffeehouse corner Prieur and Palmyra streets, when one of them, Eugene Picard, for some reason not stated, struck a companion a severe blow, which was taken up by Joseph Constance who made the matter worse by instantly stabbing Picard fatally in the left side, which wound resulted in Eugene's death within two hours afterward in the Charity Hospital. Constance, not more than twenty-five years old, hearing of the fatal consequences of his stabbing, voluntarily surrendered himself at the central station, from whence he was conveyed to the parish prison. When a judicial investigation shall have developed particulars our readers will have them in detail.

A PUGILISTIC BURGLAR.—The residence near the corner of Baronne and St. Joseph streets, Saturday night, was secretly entered by a fellow whose object seems to have been to plunder the premises. His first exploit was in a room in the rear occupied by Captain Comox and family. The thief had secured a lamp and all the matches, and then gently "went through" the furniture; but while so employed the captain awoke, half conscious that a burglar was in the house. Jumping from the bed he accidentally ran against the bold intruder, and at once grasped him and raised an alarm, which was repeated by his wife in loud tones, when a watchman, hearing the noise, was on hand almost instantly. The thief was struggling hard to liberate himself, and in the darkness succeeded, but left a portion of his shirt in the captain's hand. However, before he was detected he had stolen a few small valuables. We are sorry that we failed to learn the name of the officer on duty, for he is deserving of honorable mention and promotion. The dwelling belongs to Mrs. Bell, who wishes us to inform burglars generally and individually that they will find poor pickings there hereafter and warm receptions.

PLEASANT FRUIT.—What the eye does not see the heart does not crave, but when our spectacled eyes behold luscious peaches, tinted as no painter can paint, and perfumed cantelopes that melt as cream on one's tongue, our mouth yearns for satisfaction, but a slim pocket warns against indulgence. Let appetite wait on lower prices.

CERTIFICATE AND ORTHOGRAPHY.—The following is the copy of a document transmitted to the Street Commissioner to which the party certifies on oath, omitting only names:

NEW ORLEANS, June the 22 1868.

DISCHARGED FROM CUSTODY.—The alleged fillibusters were yesterday arraigned before the United States Commissioner for examination, but it appearing that the accused, if about to engage in any unlawful expedition, were going in subordinate capacities, as mere rank and file, and as none of them appeared to be leaders, they were released.

MISCELLANEOUS ITEMS.

It is said that Seward will support Grant and Colfax this fall. This is the first time we have trembled for their fate.

Lotta authorized the statement before she left St. Louis that she was not engaged to be married, and never intended to be.

Mr. John W. Eckley, one of the most popular and agreeable clerks in the New Orleans trade, has abandoned the river, and gone to California.

A Southern paper attempts to define the relation of the Southern Democracy to the negroes. That is easy enough. In most cases it is a blood relation.

Mr. Chase went to see the President on Wednesday. If Mr. Chase was not already in bad odor, it can't be denied that he got into a bad odor on that occasion.

Chase will draw no votes from the Republicans, neither will Grant draw votes from the Democracy. He ruined himself with that party when he captured Lee.

A returned Californian found the baby he had left at home a miss of five summers. One day he offended her, and she irefully exclaimed: "I wish you had never married into the family."

The House opened its proceedings Thursday with the prompt reconsideration and final defeat of the bill to give department clerks $2,000,000 in the way of twenty per cent increase on their salaries.

The New York papers state that a party of about seventy young girls from one of the Lowell factories recently came to that city, spent the day in the park, and returned home on the evening of the same day.

Doolittle says the negro can not be the equal of the white man. In short, that the negro is a fool. Doolittle should not get up a controversy with a fool. A man divided against himself shall surely fall.

Senator Saulsbury, of Delaware, the other day remarked: "If they nominate Chase I suppose I must support him; but I'll be d—d if I won't make a fight before I see Sumner put on the ticket with him for Vice-President."

Dispatches from Washington to two of the New York papers state the position of Mr. Johnson on the Presidential question as follows: First choice, Chase; second, Hancock; third, Hendricks. Pendleton he will not support.

Ex-Governor ("Extra Billy") Smith and A. H. H. Stuart are stumping Virginia against the Republican party and policy. They did the same thing during the rebellion, but Grant proved too much for them, and he will now.

The "Conservative" soldiers who will run to the New York rebel Convention are mainly the ones who ran away from the rebels when a fight came on. Notwithstanding this, they believe in flogging their enemies, provided always they are niggers.

Chicago has accommodations in her public schools for 16,000 scholars, and in her private schools for 12,000. Her school population, including the ages of six to twenty-one, is, according to the census of 1860, 53,100. These figures show 25 000 scholars unprovided with chances of instruction.

Prince and Princess Salm-Salm are sojourning in Switzerland. She is writing her "Mexican Diary," and her husband a history of the seige of Queretaro. He has in his possession a great many relics of Maximilian—among others a piece of his bloodstained sash, and a large piece of his beard, and even a portion of the poor Emperor's heart, which he preserved in a small bottle.

The Democratic victory in Oregon at the recent election is explained by a simple paragraph in a letter from Portland, in that State, which we find in the Greensburg, (Indiana) Standard. It is scarcely necessary to say that the letter was written weeks before June 1, the day of the election. The paragraph is short but emphatic:

We have been flooded with renegades from Missouri and Arkansas—remnants of Price's army.

The Providence Journal says that Walter Arnold, the young clerk in the office of the State auditor who robbed the State treasury of some ten thousand dollars, and devoted it to the brothels and gambling houses that still open their doors in the city's heart to entrap the weak and the unwary, has been pardoned and released from the State prison, having served scarcely a month for each thousand dollars of his ill-gotten and ill-spent plunder.

An old man named Edwards, who lives in Springfield, Massachusetts, and his bewitching daughter, who doesn't live with her husband, are said to be confederates in a neat little game to swindle countrymen. The female is sweet on young men, induces them to invite her to ride, and the parent starts after the young couple, raises a breeze, and the young man, if green enough, pays roundly to avoid arrest for an attempt at elopement.

The Chase movement will be found to be one of those long, harassing, and rarely successful efforts known to seamen as "the stern Chase."

Another unguarded individual undertook to blow out the barrel of his gun the other day, but the gun got in the first blow and took off the top of his head.

Some wag says that woman has one indisputable right—the right to bear arms. The White Fawn people have to bear more than this, though some think it is not a right but a wrong.

Yes, we want Democratic, not Radical puppies.—Advocate.

If your party is as well organized and "full" as you pretend, you should have a heavy supply at command.—Homer Iliad.

At a rousing Republican ratification meeting held at Grundy Center, Iowa, last week, the following resolution, among others, was adopted:

Resolved, unanimously, That "Old Grimes is dead."

At one of the hotels in Selma, Alabama, the landlord said to a boarder: "See here, Mr. Baker, the chambermaid found a hair pin in your bed this morning." "Well," replied John, "I found a long hair in the butter this morning, but it did not prove there was a female in it."

We are shocked to hear that the President was one of the objects of the missiles of the negroes at their reported outbreak in Washington. Returning from a walk on the night of the outbreak he found a brick in his hat.

Committees from various sections of the State in the interest of Chief Justice Chase have arrived in town, and are actively at work to secure his nomination for the Presidency. We are afraid their efforts will result in a stern chase.—New York Commercial Advertiser.

Mr. J. C. Derby, the well-known New York publisher, purchased a farm near Aiken, South Carolina, last year for $15,000, and has a very fair prospect of getting his money back this year on the peach crop alone.

A Texas gentleman writing to the St. Louis Democrat, says: I would rather receive as immigrants into Texas fifty thousand genuine, full-blooded, unadulterated Yankees, than to receive that number from England, Ireland, France, Germany, or the South.

Forney says "No voice is raised against Grant and Colfax, or the platform on which they stand." This is a slight mistake. A good deal of voice is raised against them, but it is like the bray of the ass, all voice and no sense or music. It is vox et præterea nihil.

A poor Vermont widow decorated a whole graveyard herself on the thirtieth ultimo. The little cemetery is near Washington, and contains the remains of forty Union soldiers, including those of her own son. Assisted only by her children, she wove forty wreaths of flowers, and laid one on each mound.

The Memphis Bulletin claims that John B. Henderson, who it will be remembered was the Senator from Missouri who voted for the acquittal of Andrew Johnson, is a native of Tennessee. If this be so, the burden of that State is becoming greater than she can bear—Johnson, Patterson, Fowler, and Henderson.

The Democratic leaders appear to be in as "sad a predicament" now as they were in the days "lang syne," when the poetaster said:

"They have six horses in the pasture,
And don't know which can run the faster."

We judge that Congress will not adjourn before the winter holidays, from the fact that they are making "mince meat"—probably for Christmas—of Schenck's tax bill.

The Washington correspondent of the Chicago Tribune says of Judge Chase and the Democratic nomination for the Presidency:

The Chief Justice's private secretary asserts that Mr. Chase will accept the nomination of the New York convention on a platform to the following effect: economy in public affairs, reduction of taxation, maintenance of the rights of foreign-born citizens, condemnation of military tribunals for the trial of persons not in the army, speedy withdrawal of the military governments from the South, recognition of the reserved rights of States, universal amnesty, and immediate restoration to the Union of the late rebel States with constitutions acceptable to the numerical majority of each State, suffrage under the entire control of the several States, with a recommendation that it shall be impartial. The private secretary has reduced this statement to writing, and the document has been circulating for the last ten days among the leading Democrats of Congress. They say they are given to understand that it may be taken as a correct representation of the Chief Justice's position. The platform is reported to be silent on financial questions.

"That is probably the oldest piece of furniture in England," said a collector of antique curiosities to a friend, and pointing to a venerable looking table as he spoke. "How old is it?" asked the friend. "Nearly four hundred years." "Pshaw, that is nothing. I have an Arabic table over two thousand years old." "Indeed!" "Yes, the multiplication table."

The St. Louis Republican of the fifteenth instant says:

Almost daily we receive assurances of the entire feasibility of shipments of grain in bulk via New Orleans to the Atlantic ports and Europe, and as the matter is attracting general attention, not merely in the valley of the Mississippi but at the East and in Europe, we feel assured that by the time the new crop will be fairly in the market every proper facility will be provided for the safe and rapid transportation of all the wheat and corn that may seek a market through the natural and cheaper channel of the Mississippi and its tributaries, and therefore most heartily indorse the efforts of those who are thus moving to advance the interests of the country by cheapening the cost of transporting grain to market.

Cheap Fares.—The low rates of fare on the steamboat lines between here and New England are really productive of greater profits than were the higher prices charged, for the boats are daily loaded with excursionists. As a specimen of the crowds of pleasure seekers coming hither from down East we clip the following from the Narragansett Times of Wakefield, Rhode Island:

"Ho! For New York.—The reduction of the fares between Providence and New York to fifty cents for a cabin passage has induced many to make their first visit to the great metropolis. On Tuesday fourteen young ladies from Wakefield, under the protection of a single young Lothario, started via Stonington for the Central Park. That young man's courage excites our admiration."

About one year ago a co-operative foundry was established in Rochester, New York, after the plan of the one in this city, Albany, etc. It has proved a great success. Only a trifle over $18,000 was paid in. The profits for the six months ending December 19 were $8392 82. A dividend of twelve per cent on the stock has been declared, payable in stock, and the balance has been divided pro rata among the employes, making to them 29 3-10 per cent upon their earnings.

It is a matter of fact that the elegantly carpeted and furnished apartments which constituted Wooley's "bastile" also contained the fair forms of his wife and child; and when the sergeant-at-arms informed him of his release he wasn't just ready to go, but asked permission to remain until he should have dispatched his letters and other business. Wooley is doubtless a remarkable man; but as a martyr he is a decided failure. The Democracy will be compelled to look elsewhere for that sort of commodity.—Chicago Post.

The Natchitoches Times predicted several days since that Buchanan entered into an unequal contest with Captain Packard and the Board of Registration. That view was correct. The Board of Registration was instrumental in the creation of amendments to the bill to admit Louisiana and other Southern States providing for their admission and the inauguration of the State governments immediately. Thereby Buchanan's nice little game of keeping Louisiana under military rebel rule until November was blocked. The Times said:

Mr. Packard expects to accomplish nothing directly, but much indirectly. He comes among the big dogs as a snapping and barking fice to foment the quarrel and then stand back and see how it ends. He knows that in the unequal contest Buchanan is bound to go down. The whole issue of this quarrel will be in the triumph of the Radical party of this State. General Buchanan must go to the wall as Hancock did.

General McDowell at Work in Mississippi.—General McDowell has commenced work in Mississippi in a business-like manner. Governor Humphreys, who has taken the stump against the adoption of the new constitution, and been using his whole personal strength and official patronage to defeat the reconstruction law, has been removed. Colonel C. E. Hooker, the rebel Attorney General for Mississippi, who has been stumping the State with the Governor, has also lost his official head. General McDowell is evidently determined that there shall be fair play in Mississippi, and that the Union people besides the popular rebel terrorism prevailing, shall not be bowed to the earth by a rebel State government. General Ames has been appointed Governor, vice Humphreys, and Captain Meyers Attorney General vice Hooker. Let the good work go on.—Memphis Post.

The Cincinnati Gazette of the fifteenth says:

We sent a boat out for New Orleans the second day of the week which had been four days securing about 300 tons. Another boat, now at the wharf, has been advertised nine business days, but is not yet more than half-loaded. Rates to New Orleans will be advanced this week. Next week our merchants who desire to ship by river will be compelled to ship on sternwheel boats, as there will not be sufficient water in the river for those of larger capacity. Already preparations are being made to bring out boats that have either been laid up or engaged in other trades, and the large boats will go to the dock as fast as they return. New Orleans freights appeared to be more plentiful on Saturday than they have been for a week before.

The call made by the National Executive committee of the Conservative soldiers and sailors for the convention at New York is signed by nine generals, nine colonels, and one major. The military titles of five of the generals are bogus, some of the gentlemen not even appearing on the war records as officers. Five of the colonels never smelled gunpowder in the field, and one of them was lieutenant in a nine months' regiment which never reached the front.

The New Orleans Times claims that the white are superior to the black electors in that city, because "No white man ever yet followed the business of blacking boots on St. Charles street, or any of the public streets of the city." Mighty few black men follow it on the streets of this city, which figures up nearly 60,000 Copperhead majority.—New York Tribune.

A letter addressed to Miss Van Hoosen, Shodack, and postmarked eleven years ago, was found recently by a mail agent on the Hudson River Railroad. It had slipped into the false bottom of the distribution table, which, with the car had been laid up for several years. The owner finally received the letter. A similar case occurred some time since on the Long Island railroad.

THE GERMANIA LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY, established in 1860, and based upon the most approved principles of Life Insurance security, presents its claims for consideration, believing that its solid foundation already secured by the faithful and efficient management of its officers and Board of Directors will give it the preference above all other similar institutions.

It is purely Mutual, as the net profits are distributed among the parties insured, the interest of the capital stock being only five per cent according to its charter.

It assumed the system of cash payments at the commencement of its existence, and maintained it faithfully until now, and promises the same for the future, thereby securing to policy holders the full amount for which they are insured. The advantage of this system over the half cash and half note system is patent to every careful observer, but will be more fully illustrated by the following statement and table:

If a person of thirty years of age insures his life for the amount of $1000 in one of the credit companies, and pays a premium of $28 30 per year, with a note for half of the premium, then by means of this note and interests thereon the amount will become less and less in the following proportions:

| | |
|---|---|
| After 10 years the $1000 will amount to | $887 44 |
| After 15 years the $1000 will amount to | 795 28 |
| After 20 years the $1000 will amount to | 666 02 |
| After 25 years the $1000 will amount to | 484 73 |
| After 30 years the $1000 will amount to | 250 47 |
| After 33 years the $1000 will amount to | 32 53 |
| After 34 years the $1000 will amount to | Nothing. |

So that after a lapse of 34 years the whole amount will be eaten up, notwithstanding the parties insured paid their money in good faith.

The large dividend of 40 per cent declared last January is evidence of the care and success with which the Managers have conducted the enlarged and rapidly increasing interests of the Company, and vouches for its future brilliant and permanent prosperity.

Parties contemplating an assurance on their lives will do well to examine the status of this Company, every facility for which will be given by the

THE DRUNKARD'S DAUGHTER.

Go, feel what I have felt;
Go, bear what I have borne;
Sink 'neath the blow a father dealt,
And the cold, proud world's scorn;
Thus struggle on from year to year,
Thy sole relief the scorching tear.

Go, weep as I have wept
O'er a loved father's fall;
See every cherished promise swept,
Youth's sweetness turned to gall,
Hope's faded flowers strewn all the way
That led me up to woman's day.

Go, kneel as I have knelt;
Implore, beseech, and pray;
Strive the besotted heart to melt,
The downward course to stay;
Be cast with bitter tears aside,
Thy prayers burlesqued, thy tears defied.

Go, stand where I have stood,
And see the strong man bow
With gnashing teeth, lips bathed in blood,
And the cold livid brow;
Go, catch his wondering glance, and see
There mirrored his soul's misery.

Go, hear what I have heard;
The sobs of sad despair
As memory's feeling fount hath stirred,
And its revealings there
Have told him what he might have been
Had he the drunkard's fate foreseen.

Go to my mother's side,
And her crushed spirit cheer;
Thine own deep anguish hide;
Wipe from her cheek the tear;
Mark her dimmed eye, her furrowed brow,
The gray that streaks her dark hair now,
Her toil-worn frame, her trembling limb,
And trace the ruin back to him
Whose plighted faith in early youth
Promised eternal love and truth—
But who, forsworn, hath yielded up
This promise to the deadly cup,
And led her down from love and light,
From all that made her pathway bright,
And chained her there, 'mid want and strife,
That lowly thing, a drunkard's wife;
And stamped on childhood's brow so mild
That withering blight, a drunkard's child.

Go hear and see and feel and know
All that my soul has felt and known:
Then look upon the wine cup's glow,
See if its brightness can atone,
Think if its flavors you would try
If all proclaimed, "'Tis drink and die!"

Tell me I hate the bowl!
Hate is a feeble word!
I loathe, abhor—my very soul
With strong disgust is stirred
Whene'er I see, or hear, or tell
Of that dark beverage of hell!

NEW ORLEANS, June 26, 1868.

MR. EDITOR:

The manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors is a great and towering evil in our country—an evil which, though profitable to the few, is nevertheless working untold mischief to the many. It burdens the land with unnecessary taxation, pauperism, and crime, impairing all the interests of the body politic, and really profitable to none. This is not fancy, but fact. The statistics and testimony have often been gathered, and they are such as no honest and impartial mind can reject. We know in this age as our fathers did not so well know what are the consequences of this liquor business. Take a single statement: "President Everett computed that the use of alcoholic beverages had cost the United States directly, in ten years, $1,200,000,000; had burned or otherwise destroyed $5,000,000 more of property; had destroyed 300,000 lives; sent 150,000 to our prisons, and 100,000 children to the poorhouses; caused one thousand five hundred murders, two thousand suicides, and bequeathed to the country one million of orphan children."

Call this exaggeration if you choose; yet no man, with his eyes half open, having a sound head and an honest heart, will deny the enormous extent of the evil incident to the liquor traffic, fostered by it, and growing out of it.

What, then, is the duty of civil society? Was there ever a case that called more loudly for effectual legislation? Shall government suppress lotteries, gambling, and counterfeiting; outlaw mad dogs, and abate nuisances; establish and execute quarantine laws for the public health; and yet leave alcohol to run at large? Shall it prohibit minor evils, and yet be indifferent to the greater one? Shall it forsake the line of duty just when the argument becomes most powerful, and plea for action loudest? Shall it fold its arms in such premises? Then it will not perform its duty to God or man. If there be any case for legal interposition, this is such a case.

But, it may be said, this is a moral question, and ought to be left to moral suasion. So is gambling a moral question. Will you leave that to moral suasion? Counterfeiting is a moral question. Will you trust it to a dispensation of argument, merely? Murder is a moral question; and will you leave this to the mere force of argument? Indeed, every use of property, in some aspects, involves a moral question. Shall society, therefore, withhold all laws in respect to property?

The principle of the Maine law ought to be put in action by every civil community that is burdened and cursed with the liquor-traffic. The body politic has duties to perform as well as rights to exercise. Look at this point a moment.

Civil society established, and operating through government as its agent, is a moral person, legitimately the subject of duty, and bound by its obligation. This is a fundamental axiom of political ethics; and it certainly is a Christian principle. The State can do wrong—the State is bound to do right. The principles of morality for the State and the individual are the same. The State is morally bound to provide for its own welfare—to conduct over all its citizens an impartial and wholesome legislation, to enact and execute such laws as are adopted to promote the virtue, happiness, and general thrift of the whole community, while at the same time they ought not to be tyrannical and oppressive toward any class. The State exists not for a monopoly of benefits, but for the general good; not to license crime or patronize public evils, but to exert its legitimate powers for their suppression.

The grand feature of the Maine law consists in the fact that it does not aim to regulate and limit the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors to be used as a beverage, but to prohibit them altogether. It is not a regulating but a prohibitory law, and in this respect differs from the license system. It make the liquor business a crime for which the offender is liable to be punished. It confiscates these liquors to the State when kept for sale, and directs them to be destroyed. It outlaws them as an article of commerce within the limits of the State. Its aim is to break down the traffic, and thus relieve the community from the terrible evils consequent upon its continuance. It does not make the sale unlawful when the article is to be used for medicinal or mechanical purposes, but by stringent provisions limits the sale to these uses, directing the appointment of agents therefor, who are placed under bonds to conform strictly to the provisions of the statute. Prohibition, exclusion, outlawry, and not protection or regulation—this, then, is the grand principle of the Maine law, armed with a sufficient number of minor provisions to give force and certainty to the principle. Nearly all previous legislation had proceeded upon the assumption that the traffic was an evil to be regulated, which is the theory of the license system. This Maine law proceeds upon the assumption that it is an evil to be suppressed or removed altogether. It is the "summit-level of entire prohibition."

The principle of the Maine law is the only one adapted to the result. Theoretically the question is a very simple one. Intemperance and its evils depend on two causes: the supply of intoxicating beverage, and the consumption. Remove either and the vice is dead. There is a difficulty in directly attacking the consumption by law in saying to a man under the solemnity of a statute that he shall not make use of alcoholic beverage. This would be a kind of sumptuary legislation likely to defeat itself, impracticable in its operations, and at war with those notions of personal liberty which are so thoroughly rooted in the American mind. Hence, if the arm of the law is to be interposed at all it must operate upon the supply, and this is the direction of all the legislation that has ever been attempted on the subject. The supply is the only point where law can make its agency felt.

In respect, then, to the supply you may take one of three grounds. The first is to have no law on the subject, leaving every man to manufacture or sell as much as he pleases, to conduct the liquor business just as he does any other that is neither regulated nor restrained by law. Upon its face this is no remedy, and leaves the whole matter to the instincts of profit and appetite. A man may advocate this ground; yet he will not be so absurd as to call it a remedy.

The second ground is that of regulation, which is the license system in its different phases. This system admits that the traffic is an evil too serious to be open to all, and that it must therefore be limited to a few persons licensed by law to conduct it, and protected by law in doing so. Now it is a sufficient objection to this system to say that in practical effect it is, ever has been and always must be, a failure. It has been tried in various forms, and for a long series of years; and this has been the uniform result. It never did and never can reach the evil, as the most abundant facts conclusively show. Though it professedly undertakes to limit the number of the suppliers, it does not limit the supply. This keeps pace with the demand, and by generating an appetite creates and increases that demand. It is the sober truth, that under every form of the license system there has always been liquor enough in market to supply all the drinkers who want it and can pay for it. The system, therefore, amounts to nothing as a remedy; it creates a monopoly to do a bad business, on the pretense of limiting it, without accomplishing this result. It protects, by legalizing, the evil it seeks to curtail. Under it grogshops, especially in cities, are almost as thick as locusts of Egypt, at all times sufficient in number to keep the drinkers perfectly supplied.

The third ground is that of the Maine liquor law; and, as we have already said, it is a total prohibition of the supply, except when the article is to be used for medicinal or mechanical purposes. Its penalties, in the way of fines, confiscation, and imprisonment, are intended to be sufficiently searching and severe to carry this point. It is a thorough, radical, and stringent effort to destroy the liquor traffic, and in this way dry up the fountain whence issue the desolating streams of intemperance. It proposes no terms with the business: it makes no compromise with it. Its deliberate and undisguised aim is destruction, and not regulation or toleration.

Now, it must be evident to every reflecting mind that this kind of legislation, if we have any, is of the right sort. It is adapted, as no other has been and no other can be, to the work, so far as law can do it at all. If you want to have intemperance tolerated and continued, then the present license system will answer the purpose; but if you wish to banish the vice by removing its means, then the Maine liquor law, or some other one of similar aim and stringency, must be the instrument. You can not reach the result without the use of law; neither can you do so by any system of legislation that falls short of this mark. If we have a legal remedy we must have one that will do the work, and this feature is the glory of the liquor law of Maine.

The principle of the Maine law is a perfectly legitimate exercise of the powers that belong to civil society. By this we mean that every State in this Union over which the stars and stripes wave is fully competent to enact such a law; it comes within the province of what is called the police power of the State.

The general doctrine which lies at the foundation of the powers claimed and exercised by the Maine law is this: Society has a right to exist, and to protect itself against whatever is adapted seriously to harm or destroy it. It has the right to consult its own welfare, and use the requisite means. The individual living in its bosom and enjoying its protection is not so free that he may do what he pleases, make any use of his property which he pleases without reference to the effects upon others. The late Professor Stuart very properly observed: "Every society of men united to protect each other's rights, and to secure the peace and safety and happiness of the whole, have the right to do what is necessary to accomplish these ends. It is the common law of our nature, and of all nations of men. Who even questions the principle whether a community has a right to abate a nuisance? Of course it is their right, and duty, too, to judge and determine what is a nuisance. What has Maine done more than this?"

This is sound doctrine. This doctrine, moreover, was most fully affirmed by the Justices of the Supreme Court of the United States when giving their decision in a suit brought to test the constitutionality of certain prohibitory laws passed by Massachusetts, Rhode Island, and New Hampshire. The late Chief Justice Taney held the following language: "If any State deems the retail and internal traffic in ardent spirits injurious to its citizens, and calculated to produce idleness, vice, or debauchery, I see nothing in the Constitution of the United States to prevent it from regulating or restraining the traffic, or from prohibiting it altogether if it thinks proper." With this opinion the other Justices of the court fully concurred.

Let it be distinctly observed, also, that the principle of the Maine law claims no greater power than has always been conceded and assumed in the license system. This system says to the many that they shall not engage in the liquor traffic; while, at the same time, for a paltry tax, it grants the privilege to the few. Now, clearly, if the State has power to prohibit the traffic in respect to one-half or nine-tenths of her citizens, she has equal power to prohibit it in respect to all; if she may make the business unlawful except when licensed, if she may confer the right to sell, then she may withhold that license, and make the traffic unlawful to all her citizens; and whether she shall do the one or the other is not a question of power, but of expediency and duty. Hence, as you perceive, the liquor law of Maine does not claim or exercise any new power on the part of the State.

But it may be said that this law confiscates and destroys private property when kept and used contrary to the provisions of the statute. This is true. Remember, however, that this is part of the penalty for the crime of such keeping and using, and of course affects none but the man who breaks the law. If he were a law-abiding citizen the penalty would not harm the hair of his head. Those who lose their property by seizure and confiscation are those, and those only, who use it unlawfully. The tools and implements of a counterfeiter are seized and destroyed, being forfeited by their unlawful use. The fact that the confiscated property is not put into the public treasury but destroyed by the State does not in the slightest degree enhance the pecuniary damage of the individual. He simply loses it, as a penalty inflicted for violating the law of the land.

In the light of this reasoning, the principle of the liquor law of Maine is a perfectly legitimate exercise of the powers belonging to civil society. It undertakes to abate and remove a nuisance, and this is my answer to the objection (offered by a gentleman yesterday to the petitioning for the passage of a Maine liquor law in Louisiana) "that it would interfere with the property rights of individuals." Individuals have no right to create or perpetuate a nuisance.

We reiterate that the principle of the Maine liquor law ought to be put into action by every civil community that is burdened and cursed with the liquor traffic. We have stated its end, the thing which it aims to do. We have also shown that it is the only system adapted to this end; and we have further considered the powers of civil society to do such a work. Now we take the ground that it is the duty of society thus to act.

It may be further objected that although society ought to do something, it ought not to use a remedy of so much severity as the liquor law of Maine. This depends altogether upon a question of fact. If I could cure a disease with rose water I certainly would not use caustic, but I would use caustic rather than let the patient die. So in this case; if it be the purpose of civil society to break up the liquor traffic on account of evils incident to it, and to employ the arm of law for this end, then you must have law enough to do the work.

If the preceding arguments are not based on truth, then an American community has no legal power to prohibit any business that is as a whole injurious to it. Take this to be so that they can not legally help themselves, then the extent of the injury does not affect the principle involved, although that extent may reach the point where one-quarter of a community are sent by it into premature graves; another quarter rendered insane; another quarter made beggars and criminals; and the remaining quarter, taxed to their last dollar to meet the expenses of confining the insane, supporting the paupers, and in bringing the thieves and murderers to justice.

Laws on the principle of the Maine law have with varying results been adopted in several States. While public opinion is strong enough to enact such, the moral force to sustain them is usually wanting. The public move only under the smart of a wrong, and when that is past all is forgotten until the forces of evil rally and scourge anew. More anon.

Yours respectfully,

FREDERICK K. HYDE.

The Talmud.

To whom is not this word familiar? Yet what the Talmud is, where it was written, what it contains, are not very well or generally known. It is the purpose of this paper to state briefly some facts on these points gathered from a recent article in the Quarterly Review, written by Emanuel Deutsch, of the British Museum, a great linguist and scholar.

The Babylonian Talmud, as it now exists, was written some time near the close of the fifth century after Christ, the Jerusalem Talmud having been produced in its present shape about a century earlier. The former is about four times as large as the latter. But the Talmud is much older than the date of its reduction to writing, as its origin is coeval with the return from the Babylonish captivity. It is not the work of any one man or of any one age, but the result of a growth or development, extending from the return from Babylon to the fifth century after Christ.

What then is the Talmud? It is "an encyclopedia of law, civil and penal, ecclesiastical and international, human and divine." The close of the Babylonish captivity is marked in Jewish history by a reawakening of interest in their religious laws and books, which begat study and investigation concerning them and their teachings. These expoundings and interpretations and commentaries, grew to an expanding science, a kind of unwritten law—and this, in its final form, is found in the Talmud.

But there is another kind of matter in the Talmud strangely intermixed and confused with this legal knowledge, something peculiarly eastern, and to our minds most out of place in connection with the other. This consists of allegories, parables, tales, wise sayings, and apothegms, set forth with all the luxuriance of Eastern imaginations and highly poetic language. These two elements are not placed side by side, but blended in the most baffling manner. In the midst of an abstruse discussion of a legal or doctrinal point we suddenly lose the thread of discourse; we drift away as it were in aimless reverie; all becomes imaginative, allegorical, poetical. From this strange fairy land, often as weird as the Arabian nights, we come back again as abruptly to the thread of the discussion which was so suddenly broken off. It is the interpretation of the intellect and of the fancy of the brain and of the heart, the prose and the poetry, thus flowing in one current. Thus the whole work resembles what we understand by a legal code "about as much as a primeval forest resembles a Dutch garden."

The Talmud, therefore, is the unwritten law, the interpretations and precedents and principles of application applied in practice to the precepts of the Pentateuch. It consists of two parts, the Mishna, a commentary of the law of Moses, and the Gemahra, an examination of the Mishna and application to the individual instances. But how was any unity given to matter thus accumulated through ages by multitudes of minds?

The developement of this law was in the hands of the scribes. They had to preserve the sacred text, to explain its precepts, to instruct the people, and to preach in the synagogues and teach in the schools. Besides these were the "Learners," or "master builders" as they were called. They formed schools, and in these the received teachings were handed down from master to pupil with scrupulous care.

In the New Testament the term "master" or "doctor of laws" describes much more than strictly legal acquirements. It includes all departments of investigation, all knowledge then extant, because of the importance of all kinds of knowledge in legal practice. At that time schools were held in the highest estimation. "The world is only saved by the breath of the school children," and "A scholar is more meritorious than a prophet," are the popular sayings of the time. Through the schools and the constituted courts, or Sanhedrims, these Talmudic principles were preserved and developed. The highest dignitaries were the President and Vice-President of the Sanhedrim.

We can but briefly state some of the characteristics of the Talmudic teachings specified by Dr. Deutsch. While many of them are clear expansions of Scripture teachings, others are mere traditions, connected with Scripture only by forced and special interpretations. Yet they seem all to have been held equally authoritative, and to have been appealed to generally in preference to the Mosaic law. They are extremely practical. They look more to the intention in the fulfillment of a precept than to the fulfillment itself. Certain duties bring fruits in this world, but the real reward is in the world to come.

The spirit of the laws is remarkably humane. The first duty of the judge in civil cases is always to urge an agreement between the parties. The Talmud says that justice and good will meet when the contending parties agree peaceably. The law of revenge is wholly unknown, as the Talmud says, "Paving measure for measure is in God's hand only." The care taken of human life was very remarkable. Time must elapse between sentence and execution, that whatever could favor the condemned might be found out, and on the way to execution any one knowing aught in the culprit's favor was called upon by the herald to proclaim it. There was no confiscation of the culprit's goods.

The poetical element above mentioned — the Haggadah, as it was called—transforms the Scripture into a thousand themes for its variations. Everything was bound up in the Bible, it was said, and therefore everything could be found in it. Hence everything in Scripture had a kind of second and symbolic sense—every person and event was allegorical. This the Haggadah interprets, it fills up gaps, finds strange connections between parts, pours in legends, tales, jests, parables, and draws the moral from most common-place matters. Some of these "rabbinical stories" have been translated, and being taken as a sample have given a false idea of the Talmud as a whole. This is an illustration of the interpretations: The masters refer to the first verse of Genesis, "And God saw all that he had made, and behold it was good," and to Ecclesiastics iii: 11, "God created everything in its proper season," and argue "He created worlds upon worlds, and destroyed them one after the other, until he created this world. He then said, 'This pleases me, the others did not'—'in its proper season'—it was not meet to create this world until now."

The Talmud tells much about the angels, but there were no angels at first, "lest men might say 'Michael spanned out the firmament on the south, and Gabriel on the north.'" There are seven angel princes, and hosts of ministering angels. Two accompany every man, and for every new good deed he acquires a new guardian angel.

"Every nation," the Talmud says, "has its special guardian angel, its horoscopes, its ruling planets and stars. But there is no planet for Israel. Israel shall look but to him. There is no mediator between those that are called his children and their Father which is in Heaven." Miracles are regarded as only possible through a sort of "prestabilitated harmony," they were "created" at the end of all other things, and among them was the art of writing. All souls that are ever to be united with bodies were created in the beginning. They were originally cognizant of all things, but at the hour of birth in a human body an angel touches the mouth of the child, which causes it to forget all that it has been.

The fear and service of God is the end and aim of man's existence. Resurrection and immortality are plainly taught. "Prepare thyself in the hall that thou mayest be admitten into the palace." "This world is like a wayside inn, but the world to come is like the real home," are some of the sayings. Everlasting punishment is denied. "Generations upon generations," the most wicked are punished, but whoever repents will at last attain everlasting bliss. The descriptions of heaven are exceedingly glorious.

We append a few of the proverbs and sayings:

The dying benediction of a sage to his disciples was, "I pray for you that the fear of heaven may be as strong upon you as the fear of man. You avoid sin before the face of the latter; avoid it before the face of the All-seeing."

"If God hates idolatry why does he not destroy it?" asked a heathen. They answered:

"Behold, they worship the sun and the moon and the stars; would you have him destroy this beautiful world for the sake of the foolish?"

He who has more learning than good works is like a tree with many branches but few roots, which the first wind throws on its face; while he whose works are greater than his knowledge is like a tree with many roots and fewer branches, but which all of the winds of heaven can not uproot.

The house that does not open to the poor shall open to a physician.

When the thief has no opportunity for stealing, he considers himself an honest man.

There is a great difference between him who is ashamed before himself and him who is only ashamed before others.

Not the place honors the man, but the man the place.

Commit a sin twice, and you will then think it perfectly allowable.—Standard.

The Crescent City Seventy Years Ago.

We generally prefer to afflict our readers with our own lucubrations in this column to quoting those of others, and occupy ourselves rather with the present than the past. But the first of the year is a good time for taking a look in all sorts of directions—backward, forward, around, and above. Coups d'œils of this sort all enable us to obtain clearer the views of life, sweep away the cobwebs of prejudice, and assist sometimes in lightening the burdened soul of more than one perplexing question.

Let the reader then forget the history of the city for almost a hundred years; its cars, its pavements, its gaslamps, its present mercantile houses, banks, hotels, cafes, journals, and indeed all the improvements that have been made outside of the twelve original streets of the city. Canals and deep ditches then drained every street, forts stood at the mint and custom-house. A paliside wall extended around Canal, Rampart, and Esplanade; and although Mr. Lincoln had not yet brought down his flatboat from the Ohio, the scanty commerce of the river was then conducted with the same rude conveyance.

If the reader will transport himself back to that time, he will be in a condition to understand the following description of the Crescent City and its inhabitants, extracted from the journal of Baily, who visited the place seventy years ago:

Their houses are generally built of wood, boarded very plain in the inside, and made very open, that there may be a free circulation of air; consequently they avoid all the inconvenience of paper, fires, carpets, and curtains. The bedrooms are fitted up in the same plain style, and are furnished with nothing but a hard stuffed bed, raised very much in the middle, and covered with a clean white sheet, and over the whole there is a large gauze net called a bar, a mosquito net, and intended for a defense against the mosquitoes, and serves tolerably well to keep off those tormenting creatures. On this sheet, spread upon the bed and under the net, you lie down without any other covering, and if it is summer time, with the doors and windows open, so intolerable is the heat of the climate.

During several days when I was there, the thermometer was at 117 degrees in the shade. The dress of the inhabitants also corresponds to the furniture of the houses, being clothed in the lightest manner possible, and every one in the manner which pleases him best. There is not in these new countries that strange propensity to ridicule every one who deviates from the forms which a more established society may have prescribed for itself; but every one in this respect doeth that which seemeth right in his own eyes. Some will wear the short linen jacket of the Americans, others the long, flowing gown of the Spaniards; some the open trowsers and naked collar; others the more modern dress of tight pantaloons and large cravats; some with white or black chip hat; others with the beaver and feathers, after the manner of the Spaniards, and so on in respect to all other minutiæ of dress.

There is but one printing press in the place, and that is made use of by the government only. The Spanish Government is too jealous to suffer the people to have the free exercise of it; for, however strange it may appear, you can not even stick a paper against the wall without its first having the signature of the Governor or his Secretary attached to it, and on all of these you see the word "permitted" attached to the corner. As to the diversions of the place they consist principally of billiards, of which there are several tables in the town. This practice, I presume, they have adopted from the Americans, who, in the southern part of the continent, follow this amusement very much. They have a playhouse, which is rather small. It consists of one row of boxes, with an amphitheatre in the middle, which is raised above the pit, and over the whole there is a gallery. The plays are performed in French, and they have a tolerable set of actors.

The inhabitants are also musical, but this lies chiefly among the French. The gentlemen of the place often perform in the orchestra at the theatre; in fact, there is no other music there but what they obtain in this voluntary way. The place contains about a thousand houses. It is one hundred miles from the sea down the Mississippi, but across the country it is not much more than twenty-one miles. Owing to the rapidity of the current vessels are a long time coming up here. There is a fort called Balize at the mouth of the river, but I am informed it furnishes no defense. The tide ascends but very little way up the channel of the Mississippi, owing to the rapidity of its current. The banks of the river are well settled for a few miles below the city; but after that there are no plantations of any consequence.

Baby Talk.

We never read a child's book until we read the "Prudy Series" and "Dotty Dimple." Their author is a genius, whose imagination has got within a child and reproduces its thoughts and talk. To us the following "baby talk," which little Prudy and Dotty Dimple have in bed, is very fascinating:

"Suppose we make up some poetry?" said Prudy.

"Why, you don't know how to make up poetry, do you?" said Dotty. "I love poetry when they read it at school. Don't you know,

'Tremendous torrents! for an instant hush!'

Isn't that splendid?"

"Very splendid, indeed," replied Prudy, pinching herself to keep awake.

"I think Torrence is such a nice name," pursued Dotty; "don't you tell anybody, but when I'm married and have some boys, I'm a-going to name some of them Torrence."

"Not more than one, Dotty!"

"O no! I couldn't, could I? There mustn't but one of them have the same name. I forgot. 'Tremendous Torrence!' I shall say, and then he'll come in and ask, 'What do you want, mother?'"

Prudy, who is older, explains that a "torrent generally means the Niagara Falls."

"Does it?" said Dotty; "who told you so? But I guess I shall call him by it, just the same, though—if his father is willing. I shan't have but two boys, and I shall name the other one for his father," said Dotty, thoughtfully; "I shall have eight girls, for I like girls very much."

Observations by Josh Billings: If a man wants to get at his aktual dimensions, let him visit a grave yard.

If any man wants to be an old bachelor, and get sick at a boarding tavern, and have a back room in the fourth story, and a red-haired chambermaid bring his water gruel to him in a tin washbasin, I have always said, and I stick to it yet, he has got a perfek right to do it.

When a man loses his health then he first begins to take care of it. This is good judgment. This is!

It is getting so now-a-daze if a man can't cheat in some way he isn't happy.

Success in life iz apt to make us forget the time we wasn't much. It is so with the frog on the jump; he can't remember that he was a tadpole—but other folks can.

An individual to be a fine gentleman has either got to be born so or be brought up in it from infancy; he kant learn suddenly any more than he kan learn to talk injun korectly by practicing on a tommyhawk.

DR. NEWMAN. — The address of Rev. Dr. Newman, the editor of the ADVOCATE, will, for a few weeks, be Albany, New York, care of S. R. Gray, 38 State street.

HARMONIAL BENEVOLENT ASSOCIATION.—The officers and members of this Association are hereby notified to attend the regular monthly meeting on Tuesday, July 7, at half-past 6 o'clock P. M. at the Wesley Chapel, Liberty street. Punctual attendance requested.

By order of the President:
FREDERICK K. HYDE,
Secretary.

Letters from Washington of very recent date confirm the telegraphic report that no confirmations will for the present be made by the Senate. The fight for and against Mr. Perry Fuller, nominee for the Commissionership of Internal Revenue is very bitter, and there is not much prospect for his success, notwithstanding the whole force of the wealthy and influential "Indian ring" is at his back.

The chances of Mr. Lacey for eventual confirmation as Collector of Internal Revenue at New Orleans are declared to be brightening: but immediate action on neither of the cases in which the people of this State are immediately concerned is deemed probable.

It is stated that President Johnson will recall all the nominations he has made of Democrats who are still hanging fire in the Senate, should he be in any degree snubbed at the New York Convention.

The latest good joke perpetrated by our earnest and enthusiastic Camp street cotemporary, the Times, is in the shape of a startling head line over its report of Legislative proceedings, to wit: "Insubordination of the Radicals!" Considering that the Radicals in the Legislature are in a goodly majority, and that all they have done is in strict accordance with the prescriptions of the paramount authority of the nation, it is rather hard to divine in what or against whom this insubordination exists. The only explanation we can give, therefore, is that our neighbor blundered in the term used, and meant to refer to the Democratic bolters as insubordinate.

The New Orleans Associated Press reporter seems to have created a sensation by his report of the first day's proceedings of the Legislature now in session here. If he has misrepresented facts it is not the first time a like error has been committed by the Association. The proceedings of both Houses were strictly in accordance with law and justice. There is no Republican in or out of Congress who will question the propriety of the action of the Louisiana Legislature. The Associated Press dispatch in this morning's paper from Washington is of a highly sensational character, and is entitled to no serious consideration.

[From the Cleveland (Ohio) Herald.]

We understand that General W. L. McMillen, of Louisiana, formerly a resident of Ohio, is prominently spoken of as one of the United States Senators from that State. General McMillen was one of the organizers of the Republican party in Ohio, and until the war broke out was one of the prominent and influential members, vindicating its principles by his clarion voice and fervid eloquence on many a successful political battle-field. He went into the war with the first Ohio regiment, and never left the service of his country until the war closed, when he was mustered out as a major general by brevet. He has since purchased a large plantation in Louisiana, and is now a permanent resident of that State. The senatorial mantle could not fall on more meritorious shoulders, and Louisiana may well felicitate herself upon having so able a servant upon whom to confer the senatorial honor.

United States Senators.

Gentlemen of the Senate and the House of Representatives, it will devolve upon you on Tuesday of next week to exercise one of the highest prerogatives of the Legislature of a sovereign State of the Union. You will then elect two Senators to Congress. Is it not evident that the political reputation of Louisiana, our political well-being in the immediate future, and the advantages we hope to gain from readmission into the Union depend very largely upon the kind of men selected for that high office?

Need we say in the first place that our Senators should be men of eminent ability? It must be borne in mind that in legislation the mistakes of incompetent men have the practical effect of crimes. Their motives may be good, but that does not lessen the harm or the wrong they may unwittingly inflict upon the country. Never before in our history has there been such need of the highest statesmanship. Our land is almost perishing for want of knowledge, for want of a clear comprehension of those great social, moral, and political forces which are the mighty but invisible allies of every good cause, and which rule in the world of ideas just as truly as unseen physical forces control the world of matter.

Hitherto we have fought evils that were palpable. Slavery and secession were so conspicuous, were of such brazen front, that no one could possibly mistake them. To overcome them required knowledge, courage, loyalty, moral convictions outweighing every consideration of self, but by no means so high an order of statesmanship as to meet and destroy the mighty evils that now assail us. For the giants with whom we have now to contend are invisible, impalpable. Neither are we now borne along by the enthusiasm inspired of a great war. Subtle questions of finance, the burden of a national debt, so great as to equal about one-seventh of the assessed values of the whole country, the growing corruption that threatens the life of the nation, who, even of our wisest and best statesmen, thoroughly comprehends all these? And those intricate but reaching principles of political economy which Napoleon I. said "Would grind France to powder, though she were made of adamant." We must understand them if we wish to escape national bankruptcy, and fully develop the wonderful resources of the country. Does the knowledge of these things come from inspiration? Can it come from anything short of potent thought, from wide observation and experience, from large acquaintance with men and affairs?

Those are mistaken who assert that because the war has ceased, because slavery and secession belong to the past, there is no longer need of the highest qualities of statesmanship. There are broader fields opening than were ever yet explored. There are higher prizes to be gained than were ever yet won.

Why, look at the position of Louisiana, of this great city of New Orleans! What ought they not to become? The Almighty hand has so disposed the mountains and slopes and valleys of one-third of our national domain that the accumulated waters of that vast region flow grandly past our very portals to the adjacent sea. Now just as the floods from the Alleghanies and the Rocky Mountains are poured down through the delta of the Mississippi, just as it is easier and cheaper to float produce down stream than to carry it up hill by rail, so are we justly entitled to the commerce of this great Mississippi valley.

New Orleans has a rightful mortgage not only upon the gold of Colorado, but also upon the wheat of Nebraska and Wisconsin, the corn of Illinois, the iron of Missouri, the coal of Pennsylvania, upon all the grain and other products of the West that seek an outside market. Our sceptered queen should stand ready with one hand to purchase what these fifteen millions of thrifty people inhabiting the Mississippi valley have to sell, and with the other to pay them in the products of other people and other climes.

But to secure all this requires wise legislation at Washington. We need a revision of the commercial treaties with all the countries bordering on the Gulf of Mexico, with the South American States, and the West Indies. We need a vast system of internal improvements, the main object of which should be to construct railroads so as to control the trade with Texas, and first of all to restrain the floods of the Mississippi, and cause her currents to flow in equal and regular volume. To make our State what Louisiana should be we ought to attract to her within the next two years one hundred thousand thrifty farmers from the North with their capital, their experience, their energy, their love of law and order, During the same time we ought to induce a hundred thousand sturdy immigrants from Europe to settle within our borders.

Now what can contribute so much to these most desirable ends as the presence in Congress of two able Senators from Louisiana? Considering the splendid opportunities in the immediate future, considering what we have at stake, would it not be throwing away our chances, would it not be a sacrifice of the best interests of the people to fill those high places with incompetent men? with men who would fail to appreciate the situation? It seems to us that we need for our United States Senators the very best talent in Louisiana.

Our Senators to Congress should also be men of spotless reputation and of unquestioned loyalty. Their character should be above reproach. Without the possession of good character no man in this country can attain to commanding or to lasting influence over his fellow men. Brilliant intellectual qualities may attract wealth, and often confers a certain degree of strength, but in the end these have to yield to the secret and mighty power of character. Its possession is a moral force which nothing on earth can resist. In the world of ideas character (and by character we mean the powers of human intellect devoted to high and noble purposes) is the same as momentum in the physical world. And nowhere else is it so desirable as to the legislator and statesman. Who does not know that the man who condescends to buy a vote to elect himself to office will, if successful, himself be in the market for sale.

We have entire confidence in the intelligence and patriotism of the honorable members of the General Assembly, and we shall expect to see them elect two men to the high office of United States Senators to whom we can refer with honest pride.

For United States Senator Gen. Cyrus Bussey.

The ADVOCATE has maintained a strict neutrality on this and all important subjects up to this time, feeling that the interest of the State would be best subserved by quietly awaiting the announcement of the various candidates, and deliberately weighing their respective claims before committing itself to the advocacy of any particular person. We have earnestly urged upon the members of the General Assembly the importance of securing for these positions gentlemen of first-class ability, of unquestioned integrity, of legislative experience, of fine business qualifications, and men possessing the fullest confidence and esteem of their fellow citizens. The time has come to express a choice. Governed by these rules, and while not wishing to derogate in the least from the claims of the numerous gentlemen whose names have been mentioned in connection with the candidacy, we unhesitatingly affirm that in each and all of these qualifications General Cyrus Bussey stands eminently distinguished.

The facts of his public life are on record, and are well known to all. We will only briefly recur to them. He began life in Iowa when quite young, with no capital but his honesty and ability. He devoted himself to mercantile pursuits, and by his energy, integrity, and comprehensive business talent won for himself when quite young a very high standing in commercial circles, a wide and commanding influence in his State, and a comfortable competence.

Without seeking it he was placed by his friends in political life by being elected to the State Senate of Iowa, where he rapidly rose to the position of a political leader, and of commanding influence. The war broke out, and he was at once placed on the staff of the Governor of Iowa, and intrusted with the defense of the border, which was then in imminent danger of invasion. Having successfully performed this arduous task, he then, at his own expense, raised and equipped a regiment of cavalry, and went into the service as its Colonel. For gallant and meritorious conduct he was speedily promoted to Brigadier General.

In the dark days of 1863, when from the disasters to our arms and the consequent depression at the North, there were apprehensions that the Copperheads at home might carry the elections, he was at the request of leading Senators sent home to aid in the political canvass. He traveled through his State, and by his eloquence and the confidence which his high reputation and great popularity inspired among his people, aided more than any one else in restoring faith in our ultimate success, and sweeping the State for Lincoln and the Republican ticket by an increased majority.

He returned to the front, participated in the important campaigns then going on in Tennessee, Mississippi, and Arkansas until the spring of 1865. He was then selected, though the youngest of his Brigadier Generals, by Major General Reynolds for the important task of remodeling the affairs and abolishing the abuses and corruptions of the District of Northern Arkansas and the Indian Territory. This task he fulfilled so ably, impartially, and honestly, that he left it the best regulated district in the department, had the unbounded affection and respect of his troops and of the people of his district. Since the war General Bussey has removed to Louisiana and become permanently identified with this State.

He has conducted a large and complicated business through the trying seasons of the past two years, on whose shoals and reefs many a gallant commercial bark lies stranded. General Bussey has been a uniform and uncompromising Republican, and a supporter of the Congressional plan of reconstruction, and his counsels at home and in the North have contributed influentially to its successful operation here. In the last political canvass he was a warm supporter of the regular Republican ticket, and aided largely in its triumph. He was sent to Chicago as a delegate to the National Convention, and also to the Soldiers' and Sailors' Convention, and while there was greeted by hosts of warm friends from all parts of the Union in a manner which showed the high estimation in which they hold him.

General Bussey enjoys the confidence of Generals Grant, Sherman, and Sheridan, with all of whom he has served, and of Senators Sumner and Harlan, and others of the distinguished Republican leaders. He wields a large influence in commercial circles North, and he is fully acquainted with the particular necessities of Louisiana which demand national legislation, and is more familiar than most men with the steps necessary to assist her.

We have received from various parts of the State reliable assurances that he is the choice of a large portion of the people, and that his election would give universal satisfaction. We have deemed it our duty to give expression to this sentiment, and to advance our reasons for this preference. We submit them to the General Assembly, with the feeling that should they find a man better qualified to discharge the responsible duties of this high position to the best interests of the State we will cheerfully yield our support to such a choice, but with the firm conviction that it will be very difficult to do so.

We commend the subject to the calm consideration of our Senators and Representatives.

Lieutenant Governor Dunn.

Rarely has an officer been met at the threshold of his official career with obstacles and hindrances calculated to test his judgment, temper, courage, honesty, and firmness such as beset Lieutenant Governor Dunn on every side from the moment that he entered upon the discharge of the duties of his office.

And much more rarely in our recollection has any one shown himself so equal in all of these great qualities to every emergency.

Lieutenant Governor Dunn has been tried by one of the severest ordeals, and has come out of it as refined gold. He has gloriously vindicated the good judgment of his constituents in their selection of him for his present distinguished position, and has placed his name among the highest on the roll of Louisiana's statesmen.

First came tempting offers of high rewards, such as we are ashamed to say would have turned the heads of many white men, to bribe him to shrink from the discharge of his duty and to betray the men who elected him.

Then he was met by a covert attempt on the part of the military authorities to usurp the organization of the Senate.

This he firmly and successfully resisted. With becoming dignity he declined any military interference in assuming the duties of his office.

Then he was met by an effort on the part of General Buchanan to dictate the form of qualification for office which he should require of the Senators elect.

This he respectfully but firmly declined to accept.

Proceeding upon the undeniable ground that the new State government and constitution, though perfect in form so far, and in full operation, so far as the solemnly declared will of the people of the State could place it, was yet inchoate and incomplete so far as its relations to the national government were concerned, and yet in a dependant position, subject to the jurisdiction of Congress in every respect, to be approved or disapproved, abolished or maintained; and that its officers as being elected exclusively under and according to the laws of Congress, and subject to its direction as to when, how far, in what manner they should assume the exercise of their functions, were to this extent officers acting under and in obedience to the laws of Congress, and to the same extent officers of the United States as well as of this State, he felt it his duty to qualify himself, and to require all qualifying before him to qualify in obedience to the terms of the act of Congress providing an oath of office for all officers of the United States government in the rebel States. In conceiving and maintaining this position; in refusing to entertain any motions or protests from persons claiming to be members of an unorganized body, Lieutenant Governor Dunn evinced an able and comprehensive judgment of the law of the case and a familiarity with parliamentary usages which admirably qualify him for the position of a presiding officer. We congratulate the people of Louisiana on the courage, ability, and wisdom of the gentleman whom her people have elected to this responsible position.

He held the dearest rights of the people in his hands for two trying days, and bravely has he defended them. He has endeared himself to all her loyal citizens.

The Republican Members of the General Assembly.

Right nobly have this band of patriots, resisting all attempts at bribery or coercion, begun the task of inaugurating civil government in Louisiana.

For the bold and manly manner, and the prudence and wisdom with which they have met all the embarrassments and temptations before them, they have earned the lasting gratitude of their constituents, and will be held by them in enduring remembrance.

In view of the tremendous efforts of our opponents, and the advantage they derived from military counsel and assistance, we were anxious for the result. The event has vindicated the confidence which the people have reposed in their Representatives. The people look to them to protect the sanctity of the ballot-box, which was most shamefully violated in the recent elections. Where peaceable citizens have been driven from the polls, and arrested and imprisoned on the days of election, robbed of their registration papers and refused redress; where commissioners of election have sent instructions to their subordinates to use every means, fair or foul, to defeat the Radical ticket; where election officers have been selected with gross partiality from among ex-rebel officers and parties entirely opposed to reconstruction, and this by a General sent here to aid loyal men; where thugs and assassins have been allowed to wield the authority of Deputy Sheriffs to interfere with the election, and to oppress and outrage voters; where a prominent Democratic candidate for office openly threatened to assassinate one of our most respected citizens for seeking to prevent these outrages; where a prominent judicial officer has tried to extort from men falsely imprisoned a promise not to expose him as a condition of their release; where rebel commissioners of election have stuffed ballot-boxes, received bribes, and falsified the count of votes; where all this fraud has been perpetrated to the extent of thousands of votes, as it was done in this city, we think there is a pretty fair field for legislative investigation. The people demand it. Let a committee be appointed with power to send for persons and papers, and let the whole thing come to light and justice be done, and Congress see how its agents have performed the high duty committed to them.

Editorial Correspondence.

CROPS.

The crops are very promising everywhere in the Northwest. Wheat is abundant, and the prospect of a rich harvest was never brighter. Corn and potatoes also look well, together with oats and hay. Providence is thus blessing our country, and placing our people under renewed obligations. And the general thrift of our people is one of our national wonders. The curse of poverty which rests upon so large a portion of the population of our great cities is not perceptible in the Great West. It is a crime to be poor in this section of our land, and to such the old Bible rule should be applied: "He that will not work, neither shall he eat."

LOCUSTS.

Stopping at Kalamazoo a few days we rode into the country some twelve miles, when we found the trees covered with locusts. These destroyers repeat their visits once in seventeen years. Their habits and modes of multiplication are singular. They usually alight on some tender branch of a tree, in which they lay their eggs; in a short time the branch falls and the eggs are deposited on the ground, out of which is hatched a worm; this worm burrows into the ground, where it remains seventeen years, when out of its eggs comes a light-colored, wingless locust, which in turn burrows its way to the surface, and shortly after its appearance its back opens and out comes the locust proper. Apparently it is wingless, but soon the small bunches on its sides begin to extend themselves, and in fifteen minutes are full-blown wings, and in fifteen minutes more are beautifully colored. Then the creature flies on its mission of destruction. These insects are now destroying both the fruit and forest trees. They are so destructive that within a day a tree they have attacked is left leafless and apparently dead.

Change of Editors.

We regret to notice the retiring of Dr. M. A. Southworth from the Republican. As a brilliant, terse, and nervous writer, a judicious editor, a wise statesman, a safe counselor, and a bold and able party leader, Dr. Southworth has not his equal in Louisiana. To his prudent and wise management, his untiring industry, and his generous liberality the Republican party owes largely its brilliant triumph in the last campaign. Under his conduct the Republican newspaper rose rapidly in public favor and influence, and decided the success of the campaign. We do not know a single man whom the Republican party can so illy spare from the ranks of its leaders. Our best wishes accompany him, and we hope to see his labors rewarded and his usefulness increased by his promotion to a sphere of still wider influence.

We welcome to the editorial tripod a gentleman so widely and favorably known as his successor General Lee. Under his supervision we believe that the Republican will grow in influence and prosperity.

Hon. W. L. McMillen.

The merited and sharp reproof which this distinguished gentleman administered to General Buchanan in the House on Monday deserves to be telegraphed throughout the land.

It was characteristic of the man—fearless, just, and uncompromising.

The presence of such a man in the House is a host in itself to resist the unwarrantable usurpations which General Buchanan has such fatal facility of making.

General Buchanan knows that a little finger laid wrongfully upon the least of the rights defended by W. L. McMillen will be resented as a chivalrous, honorable, high-toned gentleman only knows how to resist, and be hurled back with a blow which would be strengthened by the arm of every loyal man in the whole North. He can not trifle with such a man.

The Hon. J. D. Beares.

This gentleman by his noble stand in the Senate has earned the thanks of his constituents whose interests he has protected, and the State whose reconstruction he has manfully assisted. Mr. Beares has been wrongfully classed with the rebel party by the press of this city. He has refuted this slander by fearlessly keeping step to the music of the Union in the ranks of the loyal party with which he fought in the war. We hail his accession to our numbers, and congratulate the loyal party. We predict for him honor and success in the political career he has so gloriously commenced.

Hon. John S. Harris.

Any one who has been cognizant of the patient and unflagging industry with which this gentleman labored in the work of reconstruction since the adjournment of the Convention, and the quiet, unassuming manner with which he has done his work, will not be astonished at the host of warm friends who gather around him.

Mr. Harris deserves well of the State. The party can not afford to let such men go unrewarded.

Hon. G. M. Wickliffe.

Our popular and energetic Auditor elect deserves anew the thanks of the people, and especially of the colored people, for the untiring and valuable labors he has contributed to the work of organizing the State government. Wherever there has been a breach to fill, a villainy to unravel, or a post to be strengthend, he has been on hand with counsel and work. He is a man who not only tells what to do, but does it.

The Oldest Relic of Humanity.

The oldest relic of humanity extant is the skeleton of one of the earlier Pharaohs, incased in its original burial robes, and wonderfully perfect considering its age, which was deposited about eighteen or twenty months ago in the British museum, and is justly considered the most valuable of its archeological treasures. The lid of the coffin which contained the royal mummy was inscribed with the name of its occupant, Pharaoh Mykerimus, who succeeded the heir of the builder of the great pyramid, about ten centuries before Christ. Only think of it; the monarch whose crumbling bones and leathery integuments are now exciting the wonder of numerous gazers in London, reigned in Egypt before Solomon was born, and only about eleven centuries or so after Mizraim, the grandson of old father Noah, and the first of the Pharaohs, had been gathered to his fathers! Why, the tide-mark of the deluge would scarcely have been obliterated, or the gopher-wood knee timbers of the ark have rotted on Mount Ararat when this man of tke early world lived, moved, and had his being! His flesh and blood were cotemporary with the progenitors of the great patrician! His bones and shriveled skin are cotemporary with the nineteenth century, and the date of the crucifixion is only about midway between his era and ours.

TURN FROM THE WINE CUP.

BY GEORGE W. BUNGAY.

Oh! touch not the cup that is brimming with wine,
Profane not the lips where the kisses divine,
From the mouth of a mother, have blessed
The dear child which her white bosom pressed.
Though like the "melted ruby" it glows,
It is a liquid fire—and fire that flows,
Through the veins in a lava-like flame,
Consuming health, and fortune and fame.
The cup of Circe, filled with wine,
Turned the friends of Ulysses to swine,
So turn from the wine cup away,
And take not the risk of their day;
And heed not its roseate glow,
In its red liquid lair, the foe,
That bites like an adder lies;
Its beads are the serpent's eyes;
"Dash it down, dash it down,"
The throne, sceptre and crown
Of thy manhood may be Lost in the Red sea,
Where no prophet's rod,
Points the path to God.
It stains
On heart and brain;
It blots the light
Of hope and right
From afar;
With no star
In its crown
Settles
down.
Drink the dew, and rain,
From the wine cup refrain.
Where the sparkling fountain drips,
Moisten thy parched and fevered lips,
From its bright waters flow the silver rills,
Where the sweet birds quaff their songful bills,
On its margin are flowers of starry gold,
In whose petals cold water pledges behold,

The Fate of the Apostles.

All the apostles were assaulted by the enemies of their Master. They were called to seal their doctrines with their blood, and nobly did they bear the trial. Schumacher says:

St. Matthew suffered martyrdom by being slain with a sword at a distant city of Ethiopia.

St. Mark expired at Alexandria after having been cruelly dragged through the streets of that city.

St. Luke was hanged upon an olive tree in the classic land of Greece.

St. John was put in a cauldron of boiling oil, but escaped death in a miraculous manner, and was afterward banished to Patmos.

St. Peter was crucified at Rome with his head downward.

St. James the Greater was beheaded at Jerusalem.

St. James the Less was thrown from a lofty pinnacle of the temple, and then beaten to death with a fuller's club.

St. Bartholomew was flayed alive.

St. Andrew was bound to a cross, whence he preached to his persecutors until he died.

St. Thomas was run through the body with a lance at Coromandel, in the East Indies.

St. Jude was shot to death with arrows.

St. Matthias was first stoned and then beheaded.

St. Barnabas of the Gentiles was stoned to death by the Jews at Salonica.

St. Paul, after various tortures and persecutions, was at length beheaded at Rome by the Emperor Nero.

Such was the fate of the apostles, according to traditional statements; and though we can not authenticate them all, we at least know that the hatred of the world to these men and their teachings was sufficient to render the accounts not very improbable.

Dancing.

Dr. Patton, of New Haven, concludes an article in the Independent as follows:

Having thus carefully examined every text in the Old and New Testaments in which the [dance or dancing] words occurs, we are led to the following conclusions:

1. That dancing was a religious act among idolaters as well as the worshipers of the true God.

2. That it was practiced as the demonstration of joy for victories and other mercies.

3. That the dances were in the day time.

4. That the women danced by themselves; that the dancing was mostly done by them.

5. No instance is recorded in which promiscuous dancing by the two sexes took place.

6. That when the dance was perverted from a religious service to mere amusement it was regarded disreputable, and was performed by the "vain fellows."

7. The only instances of dancing for amusement mentioned are of the worldly families described by Job, the daughter of Herodias, and the "vain fellows." Neither of these had any tendency to promote piety.

8. That the Bible furnishes not the slightest sanction for promiscuous dancing as an amusement as practiced at the present time.

How to Make Successful Pastors.

Every minister will be successful, we believe, who has one member in his church given to constant prayer for his success. We would that every pastor had just one friend who never ceased to bear him and his work to the throne of grace, and to supplicate for the gifts of the Holy Spirit following his labor and giving his preaching power! Let such facts as the following speak:

Mr. Finney tells of a pastor who was constantly successful—enjoyed a revival every year for twelve years, and could not account for it till one evening at a prayer meeting a brother confessed that for a number of years past he had been in the habit of "spending every Saturday night, until midnight, in prayer for his pastor the next day." That explained the secret in part, at least. Such a man praying would make any ministry successful. The great John Livingston, of Scotland, once preached an ordinary sermon with such power and success that five hundred were converted under it. But it was after a large company of Christians had spent the whole previous night in prayer for that object.

Mr. Chase has performed signal services to the Republican party, but nothing that he has heretofore done is perhaps so worthy of the gratitude of his old associates as his recent attempt to introduce a new element of discord into the Democratic party, already rent by the contentions between the factions of Pendleton and Hancock. It was a masterpiece of political strategy. Boston Transcript.

MURDERS IN RAPIDES PARISH.

INVADING PRAYER MEETINGS.

SHOOTING AND HANGING COLORED PEOPLE.

Three men, whose reputation as desperate characters seems to be pretty well established in Rapides parish, and who have become the terror of colored people in that parish, were arrested last Monday night about thirty miles from Alexandria. Their names are Larkin D. Corley, Millard Corley, and Lewis Tally, and they are charged with the willful and deliberate murder of Nathan Green, Dinah Hoffman, Charles Hoffman, and Henry Corney.

The prisoners were brought down the river on the steamer St. Nicholas, and arrived here yesterday morning under the charge of a Deputy United States marshal, and guarded by soldiers of the Twentieth United States infantry.

The deputy marshal accompanied a detachment of the Twentieth United States infantry, under the command of Brevet Lieutenant Colonel J. C. Bates, who took with him Lieutenant B. Carney and Dr. J. F. M. Forwood, surgeon of the regiment. They left Alexandria at five o'clock in the evening, and guided by the light of pine knots marched until midnight, when they surrounded the premises occupied by the alleged murderers, in the piny woods, and arrested them. No resistance was made, though one of the party came out with a double-barreled shotgun, but as soon as he saw the superior numbers against them he yielded without attempting to raise his weapon.

The parties arrested have the reputation of being pretty desperate characters, and hence a large squad of military was employed to capture them.

The murders occurred six or seven weeks ago in the piny woods, some six miles from the camping ground of the alleged murderers, and the acts were committed under horrible circumstances.

One colored woman and two colored men were hung, and one colored man was shot by the miscreants. Green was at a prayer meeting when a party of twelve or more came up, one of whom went into the house and deliberately shot him. Hoffman and Corney were taken out of the church, bound together, a rope placed around their necks, and they were led to a house where another prayer meeting was held, and there Dinah Hoffman, the mother of Charles, was seized, and all three of them hung together to a rafter in the house.

The wife of Corley, when they were arrested, told her husband it served him right, "for he had no business to go down there and meddle with them niggers."

Great credit is due to General West, United States marshal, for having dispatched one of his most vigilant deputies to execute the warrant. It is a pleasure also to express the gratification enjoyed by loyal men of Louisiana at being able most cordially and sincerely to commend the promptness with which Colonel Bates came to the aid of the civil authorities, and assisted in the arrest of the outlaws who committed this great crime against God and humanity.

The men in custody will be examined before United States Commissioner Shannon in a few days.

ROBERT H. ISABELLE.

This gentleman, who was on Monday chosen temporary Speaker of the House of Representatives, was born in 1837 in the parish of St. Landry. His father, Dr. Isabelle, served as a surgeon in the armies of Napoleon, and afterward settled in this State. Mr. Isabelle has resided in this city for the last twenty years, for a long time being engaged in the shoe trade. He was a member of the constitutional convention, representing in that body the third ward of this city. In all party conventions he has been prominent, and possesses a well-earned reputation for ability and political integrity. He early became interested in educational movements, and in 1862 organized and took charge of a school in Jefferson parish, and at a later period at the Wesleyan Chapel in this city. General Butler commissioned him as second lieutenant of the second Louisiana Native Guards, and on leaving the service he held rank as captain of the seventh Louisiana, same corps. Mr. Isabelle is an owner of real estate in this city, and from that source derives a comfortable income. In himself he is a refutation of the often reiterated theory that the colored race is fatally deficient in intelligence and capacity.

As a presiding officer he fully justified the choice which placed him temporarily in the chair of the House of Representatives. His perceptions were clear and quick, and his rulings swept away at once the specious tissues of parliamentary points which were occasionally attempted by a baffled and enraged minority.

Rebel Outrages in Mississippi.

We copy this from the Jackson Pilot:

We are compelled to call the attention of readers in every issue to the gross outrages perpetrated in and throughout the State by the blood-thirsty rebel Democracy. Every mail brings us accounts of the most unprovoked and fiendish attacks upon the persons of Union men—Republicans whose only and great offense is being connected with the Republican party, and we can assure our readers, that do what we may, we can not fully represent to them the awful condition of things in every part of the State: particularly in the interior Republicans go with their lives in their hands proclaiming the truth, and are everywhere met with rebel insults, threats, and violence, which by this time have so fired the hearts of these traitors that it is not safe for a man to avow Union sentiments where there is no military to give him protection.

This rebel "reign of terror" has been worked up to such a pitch of excitement and madness that it is impossible at many polls in the State to get a fair and free election. This is true of every poll where the whites are in the ascendancy. There a colored man is compelled by force and threats to vote the Democratic ticket or refrain from voting at all. Rebel papers prate loudly about Democratic colored men, but when they do so they know they are guilty of uttering unmitigated falsehoods. Not a hundred colored men in the State would vote the Democratic ticket if they were allowed to vote as their judgment dictates, but they are met on all sides by villainous and unprincipled Democrats, who take the most cowardly and infamous advantage of them, and compel them to vote their ticket. We hurl this into their teeth, and with their rebel bowie knives and revolvers buckled to their sides they must admit the truth of our assertion.

Mrs. Ames has brought to Washington the fine bust of Lincoln which she has executed for the government, and it has been placed on exhibition in the rotunda of the Capitol. Hundreds who knew the martyr President well stopped to gaze on the faithful reproduction of his well-known features, and were loud in their praises of the likeness, while art lovers were equally delighted with the conception and the execution of the work. It is decidedly the best bust of Lincoln. Mrs. Ames is now modeling a bust of General Grant in miniature.

ADVICE-MONGERS.

BY HENRY WARD BEECHER.

Blessings on the heads of those who give good advice! What a shame it would be if those who know every thing should carry their mouths like a dark lantern!

It is bad enough when men hoard their coin, and refuse to distribute their property. But how much worse would be a kind of miserism of the soul—an avarice and stinginess of wisdom.

A kind Providence stays this evil, and ordains that an element so indispensable to human society as good advice should be had for the asking, and even without asking. Men are raised up for this very purpose. They have all the instincts and aptitudes which clearly indicate what may be called a natural ordination. They are called and set apart—not, to be sure, by the laying on of human hands—to this work of giving advice; but, better yet, by the hand that gave them life! At any rate that seems to be their own opinion. And this must be said to the credit of this natural priesthood, that they seldom "neglect the gift that is in them." First, in the order of nature, children are subject to their friendly offices. From morning to night these ministers of instruction tell the helpless creatures what they should and what they should not do. No part is neglected; their dresses, their sports, their tasks, their habits at the table, in the bed, in the house, out of doors; their speech, their thoughts, their morals are all but so many pegs on which is hung incessant good advice! Poor things!

A mild and unresisting child lies down to it like an orthodox griddle-cake to the molasses pot, and always swims in the sweetness of endlessly flaming advice! But others there are, resistant, self-willed children, who do not take kindly to advice, and yet can not escape it, but, like an over-dosed salad, grow hot and sour, from too much pepper and too much vinegar! But what rights have children? The world's theory is, practically, that men have so many rights as they can defend, and no more. Children, alas! can not defend themselves.

Neighbors come next to children. Newcomers thrive in the good opinion of neighborhood advice-givers by the manner in which they receive the advice volunteered upon their arrival in the town.

"Young Acorn is a nice fellow, and he has got a good wife! I was over the very morning they came in town. I told them what I'd do if I was in their place! I'd put the garden on the other side of the house; and I'd never consent to use that old shed for a kitchen; and I'd have a pump, instead of pulling my arms off at that well; and I'd take those pinies away from the front yard, where they blaze up for a week and then all the rest of the year are good for nothing. And then they took my butcher and my store-keeper. And last week she wanted me to go and help her pick out a dress. They are an ornament to this neighborhood. You may depend on't they are going to prosper. They an't above learning. They know what's what and who's who, let me tell you! None of your stuck up folks, like Adonus, on t'other side. Impudent hussey! When I did the neighborly thing and told her what I'd do if I had her children, she looked me in the face as sweet as if she was going to kiss me and said, 'When I wish your advice, Miss Negus, I will send for you!'—the conceited minx! Well, of course, I don't s'pose that had anything to do with her child's death—of course I don't—but it did sicken—and die too—that's all I know!"

Advisers are not all of the one gender. Every neighborhood has its men who feel in every atom of their being that they know everything, and that they have no right to hide their knowledge. Not to take their advice seems to them obstinacy and conceit.

"Oh, you can't tell that Orr anything! He knows all there is already!" This is the character of a man that will not take advice. Witness his awful fate.

"I told him last fall that he'd be sorry if he touched flour. But he went in, and I should like to know what he thinks of it now?"

A real advice-giver regards himself as a natural law, and those who disregard his opinions have set at nought a providential arrangement, and must expect the inevitable penalty. They don't require time nor study for the formation of a judgment. They will dictate to a lawyer or to a doctor at a moment's notice. They are able to instruct the clergyman how to preach, the politician how to harangue, or the schoolmaster how to manage his school. There are several spheres in which they are peculiarly at hand.

First, in all that relates to marriage. They penetrate character, they dictate right matches, they know the methods of approach, and all the arts of winning, and in the great round of matrimony he must be a sad case indeed who is beyond the reach of their salutary advice. Next, advisers revel in the management of the family and the conduct of domestic affairs. Especially is this the case of those who have had no real experience in these things, and are obliged to rely upon intuitions. Intuitions are nimble, experience is sober and cautious. Indeed, experience is prejudicial to the art of advising, as by limiting men to what they really know it makes their sphere small, and introduces withal an element of conscience which assorts ill with many of the necessities of common life. Advice could never be so free, so various, and so cheap if men were obliged to conform too rigidly to moral elements.

What streams of advice, neither drying up in summer nor freezing in winter, flow down the rock valleys of domestic affairs! Does a woman find herself allied to an intractable husband? A hundred persons can tell her how to manage him. Even in the very rare case of a woman who will not obey her husband, it is plainly his fault, since there are scores who at the slightest hint will tell him how she should be managed.

How well our children would be brought up if they were educated and managed as our neighbors declare that they should do it if they had them!

"It's a wonder to me that such a good man as Mr. Popkins will let those girls of his go on as they do! I'd show them a different way, if they were mine."

It is edifying to see how wives can manage all husbands but their own! "I wouldn't let any man alive tease me as your husband plagues you! I wish I had him a little while—I'd teach him a lesson!" And yet, is this dear wife without complaint of her spouse? Is he perfect? Is she happy, wholly and always? No. In some other way her worthy lord tries her patience utterly, and then she will find some other one who "would like to have the management of him for awhile. There is no earthly need of your permitting such things. It is just because you don't govern him rightly."

But if in these regions advice is profuse, what shall we say of the generous and prodigal gifts of advice which heap themselves up before the door of every man who has money! All the people in town know how a rich man ought to spend his money. There are fifty different ways in which he ought to spend every dollar of it! It should be given away, chiefly; it should be loaned to promising young people; it should be invested in public improvements, hotels, academies, etc; it should go largely into the contribution-box; it should be given to the church; it should go with the foreign missionary, and stay at home with the domestic missionary; it should go into coal mines or iron mills, or play stool-pigeon in Wall street, to tempt countless other dollars into the man's net. Next to being poor is the unhappiness of being rich, or worse yet, of being thought so unjustly!

In low civilization men steal each other's money. In higher grades of society men pick each other's pockets by a well-managed public sentiment, which says to every one convicted of having property: "Your money—or your reputation."

But advice culminates in the realm of sickness. Once let a man be ailing, and every creature that he meets knows how to cure him! Forty remedies for every disease? Say a thousand, rather! Why should one be crumpled up with rheumatism, when every old woman within a hundred miles has a specific? What need of fevers, when a hundred people in the village know how to break them?

Besides the infallible quack medicines that brag in every newspaper there are hundreds of nostrums that hold the keys of life and death in every town. Dying is the most unnecessary act of a man's life! "Who is your doctor? Lancet? Why I wouldn't trust a dog with him! My doctor never lost a case of that kind." And at the funeral the solemn truisms about the uncertainty of life and inevitableness of death are enlivened with criticisms on the needlessness in this case of dying. "They were infatuated with that doctor of theirs. I told them how 'twould be. I offered to lend 'em my doctor, who never lost a case like this in his life; but—they were obstinate. Well, we must all die!"

Mr. Bonner, does anybody give you advice? Have you anybody about you that sticks like a burr, that comes up every day, whose tongue can outrun Dexter, who can tell you how to edit your paper better than you know yourself—that will show you how to make money, and then tell you how to spend it?

A Sensible Southerner.

From a letter written by Judge B. F. Porter, of the second judicial district of Alabama, and who was also a native of that State, written to the great Montgomery Grant ratification meeting, we extract the paragraphs below. The axiom that the wisest statesmanship is identical with good common sense, was never more clearly illustrated than in the observations which conclude this letter. He writes:

As an individual I will give Grant and Colfax an earnest support. It is the ticket of reconstruction under the Constitution and laws of the United States, of peace, and of obedience to the authority of the Union.

General Grant has been the instrument under Providence of closing the war of a revolution with which, while I had many local and personal, I held no political sympathy. I shall hail him as he advances to deposit his sword upon the altar of perpetual peace as one whose administration will obliterate the Mason and Dixon line of discord, and allay forever the spirit of dissension and civil war.

The clamors of negro supremacy which assail this Presidential ticket receive no countenance from me. No man in his senses, in the South or elsewhere, need fear that in this intelligent country, and in this Christian age, intellectual and moral power will not reach the apex of the temple of liberty and hold it. It is the storm of revolution which brings ignorance and corruption to the surface of society. In times of peace and of submission to the law, they sink to obscurity, and control no nation's destiny. Civil equality is not personal or social degradation. With very great respect, your obedient servant,

BENJAMIN F. PORTER.

The sudden death of Judge Porter, a few days since, will be much regretted by the Republicans of the South, as he was a gentleman of irreproachable character, and an able champion of the Republican cause.

We regret exceedingly that the small number of Swedes that came to this parish and located last winter have become dissatisfied and intend emigrating to some of the Western States at an early date. We are not advised as to the cause of their dissatisfaction, but presume it is owing mainly to the absence of more of their countrymen. We fear their departure from our midst will to some extent retard emigation from Sweden to this State, as they will doubtless inform their friends in the old country of their dissatisfaction and removal. We did hope their settlement in our parish would be permanent, as their influence over their relatives and friends across the Atlantic would have been inducing others to follow them. They are highly spoken of as men of strength and industry, and give complete satisfaction to their employer.—Mansfield Times.

The secret of the reluctance of European emigrants to work as plantation laborers is that they are neither accustomed nor will they submit to the rough fare and rougher usage of plantation hands in the days of slavery. They are not willing to subsist on the everlasting "hog and hominy," nor will they submit to the tyranny of the plantation overseer. To make plantation labor pleasant to Swedes and Germans good quarters, liberal rations, and generous treatment must be afforded them.

THE MARCH TO THE SEA.—In an address to the Philadelphia Union League recently Governor Geary related the following important fact:

On a certain occasion, when dining with General Grant at Chattanooga, after the tablecloth had been removed, he called for his maps, which he spread before me and said: "Sir, you and your division have been instrumental in obtaining the victories around this city. The plan for the next campaign is already formed, and it is proper that you should know it. I intend to concentrate my troops around this place, and pour them on Atlanta, while a strong attack is made on Richmond. After Atlanta falls, a line will be taken for the sea shore, ending either at Charleston or Savannah; and having thus made our point, we will enter the Carolinas and attack Richmond." This was in 1863, nine months before the city of Atlanta was taken. Justice should be done, and I tell you so that you will know who it was that planned the march to the sea, and bisected the Confederacy and brought the rebellion to a termination.

The Washington correspondent of the Louisville Journal says that Chief Justice Chase, in reply to an old line Democrat who asked him how he felt in the Democratic company he was keeping, said: "I feel like a man who has been traveling in foreign countries, improving his view of society, returned once more to the original fold. The Democratic party has gotten round very nearly to the point where I left it. It is the conservative force of the nation; and if it were liberalized a little it would inevitably absorb everything that is not radical."

The Democrats are just now in serious trouble lest the Republicans fail to raise money enough to carry on the campaign. They are, every mother's son of them, in the market, and want to be bought up. They are for greenbacks, you know; but their only hope of getting any is by selling out to the highest bidder.—Chicago Republican.

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed in his next annual estimates of appropriations to state all the balances of appropriations made prior to the present session of Congress for each branch of the public service, and remaining unexpended on the first day of July next, and designate the amounts necessary to execute contracts or pay expenditures properly chargeable to each of such balances.

[PUBLIC RESOLUTION—No. 27.]

JOINT RESOLUTION to provide for the removal of a suit pending in the circuit court of Jefferson county, West Virginia, to the circuit court of the United States.

Whereas, A suit in ejectment is now pending in the circuit court of Jefferson county, in West Virginia, against the tenant in possession, to recover possession of the Harper's Ferry property, owned by the United States, and it is doubtful whether under any existing law of the United States the said suit can be removed to the circuit court of the United States: therefore,

Be it resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That it shall be the duty of the circuit court of the United States for the district of West Virginia, if in session, or of the judge thereof in vacation, on the application of the defendant in said suit, showing that the property sought to be recovered is owned, or claimed by the United States under cover of title, and verifying the facts set out in such application by this [his] affidavit, to issue a writ by certiorari, directed to the said State court, directing it to send the record and proceedings in said suit to the said circuit court of the United States, a duplicate of which writ shall be delivered to the clerk of the said State court, or left at his office by the marshal of the said district, or his deputy, or other person thereto duly authorized, and thereupon the said State court shall stay all further proceedings in said suit; and upon the return of the said writ the said suit shall be docketed in the said circuit court of the United States, and there proceeded in according to law, and all further proceedings had therein in the said State court shall be null and void.

Approved June 10, 1868.

[PUBLIC RESOLUTION—No. 28.]

JOINT RESOLUTION authorizing the Secretary of War to furnish supplies to an exploring expedition.

Be it resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of War be and he is hereby authorized and empowered to issue rations for twenty-five men of the expedition engaged in the exploration of the river Colorado, under direction of Professor Powell, while engaged in that work: Provided, That such issue is not detrimental to the interests of the military service.

Approved June 11, 1868.

[PUBLIC—No. 32.]

AN ACT making appropriations for the expenses of the trial of the impeachment of Andrew Johnson and other contingent expenses of the Senate for the year ending June thirty, eighteen hundred and sixty-eight, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the following sums be and the same are hereby appropriated out of any money in the treasury not otherwise appropriated for the payment of the expenses of the trial of the impeachment of Andrew Johnson, and other contingent expenses of the Senate of the United States for the year ending June thirty, eighteen hundred and sixty-eight:

For miscellaneous items, forty thousand dollars.

For deficiency in the appropriation for the payment of the capitol police, and for additional policemen and incidental expenses thereof, seventeen thousand dollars.

Approved May 19, 1868.

[PUBLIC—No. 33.]

AN ACT to grant the right of way to the Whitehall and Plattsburgh Railroad Company.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Whitehall and Plattsburgh Railroad Company be and is hereby authorized to locate, construct, and operate its railroad across the land belonging to the United States at Plattsburgh, in the State of New York, upon a line commencing in the highway leading from Plattsburgh to Peru, at a point one hundred feet north from the north line of the inclosure surrounding the government buildings, running thence in a northeasterly direction about sixteen hundred feet to the bank of Lake Champlain, thence northwardly along the bank of said lake to the north line of the land belonging to the United States, such line of said road being designated on a map of survey of the same made by Jas. P. Campbell, and now on fill in the office of the Secretary of War: Provided, That the right of way herein granted shall be subject to such restrictions as the Secretary of War may think necessary to protect the interests of the United States; And provided further, That no more than four rods in width of the government land shall be occupied under the provisions of this act.

AN ACT to extend the time for completing the military road authorized by an act entitled "An act granting lands to the States of Michigan and Wisconsin to aid in the construction of a military road from Fort Wilkins, Copper Harbor, Kewenaw county, in the State of Michigan, to Fort Howard, Green Bay, in the State of Wisconsin."

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the time for completing the military road, and for the sales of lands authorized by an act entitled "An act granting lands to the States of Michigan and Wisconsin to aid in the construction of a military road from Fort Wilkins, Copper Harbor, Kewenaw county, in the State of Michigan, to Fort Howard, Green Bay, in the State of Wisconsin," approved March third, eighteen hundred and sixty-three, be and the same is hereby extended to March first, eighteen hundred and seventy.

Approved June 8, 1868.

[PUBLIC—No. 41.]

AN ACT to further provide for giving effect to the various grants of public lands to the State of Nevada.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the State of Nevada is authorized to select the alternate even-numbered sections within the limits of any railroad grant in said State, in satisfaction, in whole or in part, of the several grants made in the following acts of Congress, to wit: the act organizing the Territory of Nevada, passed March second, eighteen hundred and sixty-one; the act admitting the State of Nevada into the Union, passed March twenty-one, eighteen hundred and sixty-four; and the act concerning certain lands granted to Nevada, passed July fourth, eighteen hundred and sixty-six: Provided, That this privilege shall not extend to lands upon which there may be rightful claims under the pre emption and homestead laws: And provided, That if lands be selected the minimum price of which is two dollars and fifty cents per acre, each acre so selected shall be taken by the State in satisfaction of two acres, the minimum price of which is one dollar and twenty-five cents per acre: And provided further, That the lands granted in the eighth and ninth sections of the said act admitting Nevada into the Union shall be selected within four years from the passage of this act, and the period for the selection of said lands is hereby so extended.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That the lands known and designated for the establishment of an agricultural college by the act of July second, eighteen hundred and sixty-two, and the acts amendatory thereto, shall be selected in the same manner and of the same character of lands as may be selected in satisfaction of any other grants referred to in the first section of this act. But this act shall not authorize the selection of lands valuable for mines of gold, silver, quicksilver, or copper.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That the county of Esmeralda, in the State of Nevada, and the counties of Mono and Inyo, in the State of California, are hereby created a land district; and the land office for such district shall be located at Aurora, in Esmeralda county; and the President shall be authorized hereafter, from time to time, as circumstances may require, to adjust the boundaries of any and all of the land districts in said State, and change the location of the land office from time to time, when the same shall be expedient.

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That the lands granted to the State of California for the establishment of an agricultural college by the act of July second, eighteen hundred and sixty-two, and acts amendatory thereto, may be selected by said State from any lands within said State subject to pre-emption and sale: Provided, That this privilege shall not extend to lands upon which there may be rightful claims under the pre-emption and homestead laws, or to mineral lands: And provided further, That if lands be selected as aforesaid, the minimum price of which is two dollars and fifty cents per acre, each acre so selected shall be taken by the State in satisfaction of two acres, the minimum price of which is one dollar and twenty-five cents per acre: And provided further, That such selections shall be made in every other respect subject to the conditions, restrictions, and limitations contained in the acts hereby modified.

Approved June 8, 1868.

[PUBLIC—No. 34.]

AN ACT to extend the charter of Washington city, also to regulate the selection of officers, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That an act entitled "An act to continue, alter, and amend the charter of the city of Washington," approved May seventeenth, eighteen hundred and forty-eight, and the several amendments thereof now in force, are hereby continued in force for the term of one year from the date hereof, or until Congress shall by law determine otherwise.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That it shall be the duty of the mayor of the city of Washington, District of Columbia, the board of aldermen, and the board of common council thereof, to assemble in joint convention at the city hall in said city on the first Tuesday of July, eighteen hundred and sixty-eight, and proceed to select by ballot all officers whose appointments, upon the nomination of the mayor, are now authorized by the charter, or by any law of the United States, or act or ordinance of said city, or which may hereafter be authorized thereby, who shall hold their offices respectively for one year, and until a successor is appointed; and on the same day of the month in each year thereafter the joint convention shall proceed to a new selection: Provided, That no person shall be regarded as incompetent to hold any of said offices, or be disqualified therefor, who is a qualified elector in said District.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That in all meetings of the mayor of the city of Washington and of the boards of aldermen and common council for the purposes mentioned in the second section of this act, the mayor or the president of either of said boards shall preside, and the secretaries of said boards shall act as tellers, and keep a record of the proceedings, and the mayor, or any member of either of said boards may nominate one or more persons for the offices required to be filled, and the person having the highest number of votes shall be publicly declared selected, and a certificate of his election shall within five days be made out and be signed by the presiding officer and secretaries, and be transmitted to the person selected, who shall within ten days thereafter enter on the discharge of the duties of his office, which shall be immediately vacated by any person then holding the same.

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That all questions arising in the joint convention authorized by this act shall be determined by a majority of the votes of the members thereof present at any of its meetings, and it shall have power to adjourn from time to time until all the duties imposed upon it shall be completed, and to require of the persons selected for any office such security as may be deemed necessary. And in the event of any vacancy from disability, death, or resignation, it shall be the duty of the mayor to call a meeting of the joint convention to select a successor for the unexpired term of service.

SEC. 5. And be it further enacted, That when the mayor, the board of aldermen, and the common council shall be assembled in joint convention, as provided for in this act, they shall, by a majority vote, designate a bank in which the various moneys of the city of Washington shall be deposited, and they shall make such regulations in relation to the mode in which such funds shall be kept and paid out as shall be deemed advisable for the interests of the city; and within five days after such designation a certificate of the bank selected shall be made out and placed in the hands of the president or cashier thereof, and thereafter it shall not be lawful to retain or deposit the funds of the city, or any part thereof, in any other bank or place, unless by order of the board.

SEC. 6. And be it further enacted, That the first section of the act entitled "An act to regulate the elective franchise in the District of Columbia," passed January eight, eighteen hundred and sixty-seven, be and the same is hereby amended so as to require electors in the city of Washington to reside in the ward or election precinct in which they shall offer to vote fifteen days prior to the day of any election, instead of three months: Provided, That said section shall not be construed as conferring the elective franchise in said city on non-commissioned officers, soldiers, sailors, or marines in the regular service of the United States, stationed or on duty in said city, except such as may have become actual residents with their families in said city for one year previous to any election: Provided further, That no person claiming to be a naturalized citizen shall be registered as an elector, nor shall the name of any such person be retained on the list of voters without the production of his naturalization papers or duly certified copies thereof, or satisfactory proof of the loss of the same; and for the purpose of correcting said list as regards the aforesaid classes of persons, and in all other respects, the judges of election shall meet in some proper place in said city between the hours of nine o'clock A. M. and seven o'clock P. M., on three days instead of two days, as now required: Provided further, That all the original lists of voters both before and after their correction shall remain in the custody of the member of the board of judges first named in their appointment by the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia; and in the event of his removal or resignation, in the custody of his regularly appointed successor, except when being copied for publication and for the use of the commissioners of elections, and said original lists shall at all times be open for the use and inspection of either of said judges: Provided further, That no property qualification shall be required for any of the officers of said city, and that three days prior to any election each board of commissioners of election shall appoint two clerks to assist them in registering the names of voters in their respective election precincts, and in making returns of the elections, who shall be sworn before the clerk of the supreme court of said District truly and faithfully to perform their duties, and for any misconduct in office be subject to the same penalties to which said commissioners are now subject: And provided further, That it shall be the duty of the judges of election to make any regulations and give any notice which may be proper or necessary to carry out any of the provisions of this section.

SEC. 7. And be it further enacted, That all acts and ordinances or parts thereof, or parts of the charter of the city of Washington inconsistent herewith, be and the same are hereby repealed.

SCHUYLER COLFAX,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.
B. F. WADE,
President of the Senate pro tempore.

Indorsed by the President: "Received May 16, 1868."

[NOTE BY THE DEPARTMENT OF STATE.—The foregoing act having been presented to the President of the United States for his approval, and not having been returned by him to the house of Congress in which it originated within the time prescribed by the Constitution of the United States, has become a law without his approval.]

[PUBLIC RESOLUTION—No. 24.]

JOINT RESOLUTION concerning certain lands granted to railroad companies in the States of Michigan and Wisconsin.

Be it resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That a failure to grade twenty miles of the roads within two years from the passage of the act entitled "An act to extend the time for the completion of certain railroads to which land grants have been made in the States of Michigan and Wisconsin," approved on the third day of March, anno Domini eighteen hundred and sixty-five, and twenty miles additional thereof in each year thereafter, as required by said act, shall not cause any forfeiture or reversion to the United States of any lands granted to the said States, or either of them, to aid in the construction of the railroads described; Provided, That said companies, or either of them, shall fully complete their said railroads in the manner required by law on or before the thirty-first December, anno Domini eighteen hundred and seventy two, at which time a failure shall forfeit the lands to the United States: Provided, [That] the provisions of this section shall apply only to the chartered and projected line of railway from the city of Fond du Lac, in the State of Wisconsin, northerly to Esconaba, in the State of Michigan, and the chartered and projected line of railway from Marquette, in the State of Michigan, westerly to Ontonagon, in the same State: And provided further, That if the said Marquette and Ontonagon Railroad Company, in the State of Michigan, shall not have completed according to law ten additional miles of their railroad on or before the first day of January, A. D. eighteen hundred and sixty-nine, and shall not in like manner complete ten miles of said railroad in each and every year thereafter, then it shall be lawful for the legislature of the said State of Michigan to declare the grant of lands to said company to be forfeited and to confer the said grant of lands upon some other company in the same manner as if the said grant was now for the first time made to the said State of Michigan.

SEC. 2 And be it further resolved, That the Commissioner of the General Land Office be and he hereby is authorized and directed to cause a patent, in due form of law, to be issued to the Chicago and Northwestern Railway Company, in pursuance of a resolution passed by Congress granting the same to the State of Wisconsin, approved April twenty-five, anno Domini eighteen hundred and sixty-two, and an act of the legislature of Wisconsin, approved June sixteen, anno Domini eighteen hundred and sixty-two, granting the same to said company for eighty acres of land of the Fort Howard military reserve, as the same was surveyed and approved by said commissioner on the eleventh June, anno Domini eighteen hundred and sixty four.

Approved May 20, 1868.

LOCAL INTELLIGENCE.

MURDER OF COLONEL MANNEY—The Coroner's Inquest Yesterday.—Coroner Bradford yesterday morning began an inquest on the body of the late Colonel Manney, lying in Victor's restaurant, 185 Canal street. A large number of people had gathered around the locality, anxious to learn all particulars, but the police required the crowd to keep back, and only a few officials were allowed inside the building. The bloody corpse was lying just where it fell in the death struggle. The post mortem examination held by Dr. Hire showed the fact that Manney had been stabbed twice in the left side, one between the fifth and sixth ribs, wounding a lobe of the lung, piercing the ascending aorta, causing hemorrhage and death; the other penetrated the chest, near the same place, entering the left ventricle of the heart. Either wound was necessarily fatal.

Mr. W. J. Hare was questioned by the Coroner, and testified about as follows:

Thursday at half-past seven o'clock in the evening I was at Victor's saloon, sitting at a table eating dinner. As I entered the room I saw Colonel Luckett and Mr. Craig, and a third person whom I do not know, standing near the door. Colonel Luckett was very much excited, and said that the deceased had no manners, or had better learn some manners. Then he remarked he would go and get a police officer, and left the room. Craig then said, referring to the deceased, "I do not know what to do with Manney, he is an intimate friend of mine." He asked him what was the matter? He said further that deceased was drunk, and had insulted Colonel Luckett. Deceased had at this time a very loud discussion with George Martin at the counter, and Craig went up to him and succeeded in pacifying him, and got him to sit down at a table with him near the middle of the room. The deceased appeared to be very drunk. They remained about fifteen or twenty minutes at the table, when they rose, Mr. Craig asking deceased to go home with him, and they started to go.

As they rose to leave the room Colonel Luckett and the gentleman who killed the deceased entered the room. They met at the centre table; the deceased asked Colonel Luckett if he had taken any exceptions to what had been said. Colonel Luckett answered, "You have cursed me, sir." The deceased replied in an excited manner, "No, by God, I have not cursed you, sir," which he repeated once or twice. The gentleman in company with Colonel Luckett called the deceased a son of a b—h, and then struck him on the side of the head with his fist, and, as witness thinks, repeated the blows twice before witness saw a knife. Then witness saw a knife in his hand, and saw him stab deceased twice. Deceased made no resistance nor said anything whatever. The knife was one of those called gimlet knives. The stabbing occurred at the front window. When deceased was first struck with the fist he staggered toward the door and kept staggering to the window, where he was stabbed. He remained standing at the window about one minute, and as George Martin offered him a chair fell out of the door on the floor into the hall. The man who stabbed the deceased stood where he stabbed him, and witness heard Colonel Luckett remark that it was horrible, or something to that effect, whereupon witness told Colonel Luckett that that man was going to die. After this Colonel Luckett went into the back part of the room and the assassin went out of the front door, both very rapidly. Witness then went outside and called the police; they came over and he described to them the fugitive. Witness did not see Colonel Luckett any more in the room after he walked to the rear of the room.

Witness describes the murderer as being a man of five feet seven inches, had a dark complexion, mustache, and goatee, trimmed and jet black, and witness thinks he had a checked linen sack coat and felt hat, but does not recollect the color. He was rather stout in appearance. Witness thinks that he will recognize the man again. The deceased never spoke a word or made any resistance after being struck, and had nothing in his hand during the whole affair. The attack commenced about three or four minutes after Colonel Luckett and his friend came in. Did not hear Colonel Luckett ask to send for a physician after deceased had been struck.

Louis D. Craig: Knew Major Frank Manney. Known him four or five years. Took a plate of soup with the deceased Thursday night at half-past eight o'clock in the restaurant; never saw the cutting, as witness at the time was standing outside of the door. The man that killed the deceased never said a word. The one that it was said had killed him had been eating in the restaurant. After finishing with the supper, witness and deceased started to leave. Witness was leaning up against the door on the outside awaiting his friend when the killing occurred. Witness had supposed that deceased was following immediately on behind him. Could not have been leaning up against the door more than a minute when a man passed witness going out. Did not notice him any more than he would any other man in a public house. Thinks Colonel Luckett was with him; he had been eating dinner with the man that passed witness in going out. They had both gone off together and came back together to the restaurant.

John Pickett, a cab driver, without being sworn, stated that he heard the cry of watch, and went to the door of the restaurant, supposing that a cab was wanted. At that time there were apparently only four persons in the restaurant. Saw the man fall, and Victor go to the door and call for the watch. Saw a man in a Panama hat pulled over his eyes moving rapidly past Mr. Victor, and stepping off pretty lively into a fast walk, toward Burgundy street. Thinks he was running before he got there. The man turned the Burgundy corner.

Charles Myers, an officer of the first district police, without being sworn, states that he was standing at the corner of Burgundy and Canal streets at the time he heard the cry of "watch." He went to the restaurant, and was the first person that entered after the affair occurred. At that time there were only two guests in the restaurant eating—one near the keeper's stand, the other half-way down the room, at a window. There were then four waiters present. At the corner of Burgundy and Canal the officer states that he saw a man with a Panama hat and black coat, the hat pressed over his eyes. The man was walking fast.

The statement of George Martin, one of the proprietors of the restaurant, and a nephew of Victor, is to the effect that Major Manney was in the habit, during his visit to New Orleans, of taking his meals at this place; that in the course of his visits he had run up a small bill. Thursday he visited the restaurant, in company with a friend, to procure dinner; he was very much intoxicated, and continually used abusive and insulting language, to the annoyance of half a dozen guests, among whom was Colonel Luckett, of Texas. On finishing his dinner he called Mr. Martin to charge his dinner to his account. This Mr. Martin respectfully declined to do, and insisted on payment in accordance with the rules of the house. Inflamed with wine and highly incensed, Major Manney rose from the table applying to him the most offensive epithets. Colonel Luckett and a friend, seated at an opposite table, became disgusted at the language and demeanor of Major Manney, approached Mr. Martin, and demanded their bill, intending to leave the house. The ire of Major Manney now seemed turned on Colonel Luckett, and several very harsh expressions passed between them, when Colonel Luckett left the house and immediately returned accompanied by a dark, heavy set man. Major Manney met them as they entered the door. Some words passed, some blows were struck, and when Mr. Martin and others reached the door Major Manney was a corpse.

On deceased was found a knife almost exactly the same as the one which had ended his existence. They are what are termed "gimlet knives," one of the most villainous weapons ever manufactured. They are easily carried, and when used are not easily seen, as the handle is hidden in the hand the same as is the butt of brass knuckles. His friends removed the body before noon yesterday, preparatory to interment. He formerly boarded at No. 159 Customhouse street, kept by Mrs. Margarette Jules.

COMMISSARIES.—Mr. J. R. Conway has appointed E. A. Michel commissary of LeBreton market; Clement Ramos, collector Claiborne market; Noel Magnon, commissary Vegetable market; N. E. Turner vice Julius Jelele, Dryades market; Edmond Girard vice V. Mielly, Beef market; M. E. Stack vice John J. Boujean Ninth street market; Michael Hines vice J. A. Thomas Sorapuru market.

DELICIOUS FRUITS.—The season for our most delicious fruits is with us, but that fact interests the few who have large bank accounts at home and abroad, for prices of peaches, pears, figs, melons, cantelopes, plums, not to speak of tropical fruits, are higher than a balloon. Peaches on sale are of a fair quality, but not of great variety. Of pears there is a greater diversity than in any previous year, and in far greater abundance. Cantelopes are fair in size and quality, but are generally taken from the field while green and left to ripen in store, an abominable fashion which prevents sale and consumption of these excellent articles. Watermelons are of enormous size, both in price and measurement, but will in a week or so be offered at reasonable rates. Figs have turned out a fair crop, and are of delicious flavor. It seems strange that no more of this healthful fruit is produced, especially as the tree requires no item of attention more than a little pruning. In springtime a single branch broken from the tree and planted will furnish fruit in two or three years.

SUICIDE OF A YOUNG WOMAN.—The parish coroner has succeeded in obtaining the following testimony in the case of Harriet Cascardon, who committed suicide Friday:

S. F. Siskron stated that at 9½ o'clock he saw deceased for the last time. She was in good spirits then. She never had told me anything about committing suicide. When I returned an hour later she was lying on her face. Under her head was a pillow. Upon either side were towels exuding a strong odor of chloroform. Three bottles were found, two of which were labeled chloroform. A doctor was sent for.

L. H. Cohen stated that he was called at midnight, and found the girl Harriet dead. A drachm of chloroform is enough to produce death, and said he was shown a vial which had evidently contained chloroform.

Andrew Mayer refused at first to sell the deceased chloroform when she came to the drug store to purchase it without a prescription from a doctor. The excuse she gave for wanting it was that a young man was suffering from the toothache and was too sick to come himself. Witness sold her three ounces.

CREDITORS OF JACOB BARKER.—There was a meeting of the disconsolate creditors of Jacob Barker yesterday, and the assignee read to them certain portions of the bankrupt law which neither they nor the reader clearly understood; this they learned, that there was very poor promise of receiving back their hard earned money which they unwittingly deposited in the Bank of Commerce. A petition is circulating asking that the assignee be ordered to give the requisite bond for the faithful performance of his duties. It may be consoling to victims that it is thought there will be sufficient money secured from the estate to nearly pay the assignee's fees. Another meeting will be held ten days hence, according to the adjournment ordered.

IMPORTANT GRANTS.—The police jury of St. Bernard parish recently granted to Mr. Jules Delery the privilege of erecting a wharf, stock yards, and a slaughter house on his plantation, which adjoins the line of the parish of Orleans. This grant is for twenty-five years, we learn, the license being but five hundred dollars for the first fifteen and the thousand dollars for the remaining ten years of the term.

If the Legislature should deem the action of the police jury valid in this case, it will prove a most valuable privilege, and will doubtless monopolize the Texas cattle trade.

AN OLD CITIZEN BURIED IN THE SEA.—Mr. Josiah Cole, one of our most enterprising railroad men, died at sea, while on his way to New York, on the steamship Crescent City, and was buried at sea on the twenty-third instant. Mr. Cole intended visiting Europe, with the object of recruiting his declining health. He was a native of Ohio, and not more than fifty-four years old. There are thousands of people here who will lament the loss of one of God's noblest works—an honest man.

THREE YOUNG MEN DROWNED.—While two sons of Mr. S. E. Moore, respectively aged fourteen and sixteen years, youths of excellent character, were bathing in the Mississippi, near Harvey's canal, right bank, last Saturday last were drowned. The youngest, Robert S., not being able to swim, by some means found himself beyond his depth, and gave an alarm that he was drowning, on which his brother Samuel swam to his assistance; and the young men both met a watery grave. Before the two had sunk, a freedman whose name we have not yet learned, who was in their company, perceiving the awful state of affairs, gallantly plunged into the water with the intention of rescuing the drowning lads, but he too found himself unable to keep on the surface, and at the same time went down with his companions. Samuel would have graduated in the high school next year. The bodies of Mr. Moore's sons have been recovered, and were buried yesterday.

GOVERNOR WARMOTH'S PRIVATE SECRETARY.—Our Governor has made an excellent selection in choosing Mr. Frank C. Remick as his private secretary. Mr. Remick is a lawyer of fine education, and a gentleman who is possessed of a good share of literary talent. He has been practicing in our courts for years.

RED AND BLUE FLAG.—The window of Lilienthal's jewelry store, 95 Canal street, contains an attractive flag, which will be contested for on the fifth of July by raquette clubs on the fair grounds. It is a prize offered by the Firemen's Charitable Association to the winning club. One side is of red silk, on which is painted by C. E. Mondelly, a game in progress; the other side is of blue silk, on which are inscribed pertinent devices. This flag with the other pieces attracted much attention yesterday, throngs of people stopping to admire.

CRIMINAL SHERIFF, DISTRICT ATTORNEY, CLERK OF CRIMINAL COURT.—Mr. Edward S. Wurzburger yesterday subscribed to the required oath before Judge W. W. Howe, for the purpose of taking formal possession of the Sheriff's office. His bond, which is $20,000, was signed by Messrs. F. Oberhenser, Ed. Claren, and Jacob Hassenger. This accomplished Mr. Wurzburger was taken in hand by his predecessor, Dr. Avery, and the two gentlemen proceeded to the parish prison, which was turned over to the care of Mr. Wurzburger in an agreeable style.

C. H. Luzenberg, Esq. took the oath before Judge Howe for the office of District Attorney. No bond required by law.

Mr. Norbert Trepagnier also took the oath as Clerk of the Criminal Court. His bondsmen are Messrs. E. T. Parker and P. H. Morgan in the sum of $5000.

MORE FILLIBUSTERS CAPTURED—They are Brought to this City from Fort Livingston. On the twenty-fourth instant General Buchanan received a message from the commander of Fort Livingston, which is situated at the mouth of Barataria bay on an island called Grand Terre, that a body of men, in number about seventy-five, were in that vicinity with no apparent means of support. The general dispatched a company of soldiers, under command of Major Bates, on the steamer Ella Morse, accompanied by Deputy Marshal A. H. Freeman. The vessel sailed down the river and to the westward in rather stormy weather, and arriving at the fort found the story correct. She took on board fifty men who resembled the last run of the lost cause army and conveyed them to Fort Jackson, then returned to Grand Terre and brought away the remainder of the fillibusters who did not start for Mexico.

A majority of the fellows were foreigners and adventurers. Some of them asserted that they had been employed to go to work "somewhere" at "something," but nothing in particular was pumped out of them. Hilary Cenas and one Hernandez appeared to possess a share of command, somewhat undefined however. The steamer brought the captured men up here yesterday morning, and they were imprisoned. What is proposed to do with this crew we have no idea, but most likely they will be discharged as were others of their ilk some days ago.

These men were at first on Grand Isle, the general rendezvous for these chasers of wild geese, but our old Uncle Samuel not choosing to allow an irresponsible rabble to flout his neutrality laws, laid a finger on them, and the entire organization was suddenly blotted from an infantile existence that else would probably have ended in carnage and murder.

SICILIANS IN THE SENATE CHAMBER—Who Are the Leaders?—Yesterday, just about the time of calling the Senate to order, Mr. Anthony Sambola came to the Institute accompanied by from fifteen to twenty dark-browed ruffian looking Sicilians, or men of such stamp. Following him, they attempted to penetrate the hall. Two entered, when the gang were stopped by the police and forbidden entrance. Mr. Sambola insisted on their entrance; said they were friends of his and witnesses for him, and had as much right there as others. He was told they could not. Many of them were known to the police as "spotted" characters—men who had been in broils, fights, and stabbing affairs, and the array was deemed a decidedly suspicious one.

However, Aid Bradley communicated with President Dunn, who informed him that he knew of no witnesses to be sworn, but if they were required they could be called and admitted singly.

As the aid returned Mr. Sambola said to him: "You have told the President that I came here to make a fuss." Bradley replied that he had not, but would now say so to him.

Sambola said he wished he had a hundred men, and he would show him something; that all of these men should testify, and should do something else.

Meanwhile the ruffians in the lobby increased to thirty or forty, and a fresh detail of police were ordered from the station to watch them. One of the officers heard a Sicilian in conversation say that there were too many policemen there for them to do anything to-day, but they would try it tomorrow.

When Sambola left the Senate these men all followed him. Stopping on the corner of Canal street, they conversed together in Spanish, and were overheard to say that they "would come back and clean it out tomorrow." One was overheard to say, in the same language, that Mr. Hugh Campbell would not take his seat to morrow.

Yesterday morning the columns of the Times were starred with cabalistic characters and figures, evidently for the information of mysterious "conclaves."

About the Legislative halls were crowding ruffians, who could make no pretense that they came to listen to the proceedings, for a majority of them could not understand the English language.

Perhaps their intent was innocent, and perhaps Mr. Sambola's excited remarks were chance expressions engendered by some momentary passion. We hope so, and are not ready to believe otherwise of a gentleman of his character.

But in this land of quick revenges, of secret societies, and ominous "klans," it is well for the community to be observant, and the police alert.

ALGIERS POLICE JURY.—The newly elected Police Jury of the parish of Orleans, right bank, held its first meeting on Tuesday evening.

Hon. E. McCarthy presided, and Messrs. T. Kennefic, A. Freville, O. Pilman, J. Gouigs, C. Harris, and W. Channing having been duly qualified took their seats.

Secretary—James Tiner.
Roundsman—Armant Ramos.
Police—James Scott, John Williams, James Tiner, Henry Corkhill, John Norton, Arthur Anderson.
Syndic—Thomas Kennefic.
Parish Tax Collector—William Channing.
Treasurer—Eugene McCarthy.
Parish Attorney—B. L. Lynch.

A resolution was passed annulling the proceedings of the late Police Jury at the meeting held on Monday evening last, on the ground that the authority of said Police Jury terminated at noon on Monday.

Another resolution was passed suspending the action of an ordinance passed by the late Jury authorizing the Tax Collector to receive warrants on the Parish Treasurer for debts due the parish.

The Board adjourned at a late hour.

ARREST OF AN EX-MEMBER OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.—C. Q. Butler, of the parish of Bienville, whose seat was contested by and awarded to E. Dewees in the present House of Representatives of this State, was last evening arrested upon a warrant issued by United States Commissioner Shannon upon a charge of being one of the party who recently attempted to assassinate William H. Honneus, the Republican candidate for Sheriff in Bienville parish.

He is to appear before the Commissioner this morning to answer to the charge which is made against him by Mr. Honneus.

A NEW GLEE BOOK.
THE GREETING.

The contents of this work are for the most part NEW. A large number of valuable pieces have been contributed by Mr. L. H. Southard, whose name is a sufficient guarantee of their excellence. The marked features of the collection are originality, brilliancy, and variety; and it will be found upon careful examination that there is no glee book now before the public that in every particular will prove so completely satisfactory to musical societies and conventions, conservatories, clubs, and amateur singers. Price $1 38. Mailed post-paid.

Carmina Collegensia:

A Complete Collection of the Songs of the American Colleges, with Pianoforte Accompaniments; to which is added a Compendium of College History, Collected and Edited by H. R. WAITE.

This is the most extensive Collection of Student Songs presented to the public. Every college in the United States having been solicited to contribute to its pages, nearly a thousand songs were received, from which great care was taken to select those most valuable in reference to quality, permanency, and general interest; only such being used as possessed intrinsic merit, or cast light upon some peculiar college custom.

Prices: In cloth, emblematically embossed, neat, and durable, $2 25. Superior edition, on extra paper, full cloth, emblematically embossed, gilt edge, $3.

Mailed, postpaid.

THE GERMANIA LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY, established in 1860, and based upon the most approved principles of Life Insurance security, presents its claims for consideration, believing that its solid foundation already secured by the faithful and efficient management of its officers and Board of Directors will give it the preference above all other similar institutions.

It is purely Mutual, as the net profits are distributed among the parties insured, the interest of the capital stock being only five per cent according to its charter.

It assumed the system of cash payments at the commencement of its existence, and maintained it faithfully until now, and promises the same for the future, thereby securing to policy holders the full amount for which they are insured. The advantage of this system over the half cash and half note system is patent to every careful observer, but will be more fully illustrated by the following statement and table:

If a person of thirty years of age insures his life for the amount of $1000 in one of the credit companies, and pays a premium of $28 30 per year, with a note for half of the premium, then by means of this note and interests thereon the amount will become less and less in the following proportions:

| | |
|---|---|
| After 10 years the $1000 will amount to | $887 44 |
| After 15 years the $1000 will amount to | 795 28 |
| After 20 years the $1000 will amount to | 666 02 |
| After 25 years the $1000 will amount to | 484 73 |
| After 30 years the $1000 will amount to | 230 47 |
| After 33 years the $1000 will amount to | 32 53 |
| After 34 years the $1000 will amount to | Nothing. |

So that after a lapse of 34 years the whole amount will be eaten up, notwithstanding the parties insured paid their money in good faith.

The large dividend of 40 per cent declared last January is evidence of the care and success with which the Managers have conducted the enlarged and rapidly increasing interests of the Company, and vouches for its future brilliant and permanent prosperity.

Parties contemplating an assurance on their lives will do well to examine the status of this Company, every facility for which will be given by the ## Poetry.

[For the New Orleans Advocate.]

A REVERIE.

There's a charm in the glimmering moonlight
That entrances the soul by its spell;
While thought, on its airy pinions,
Goes flitting o'er mountain and dell,
To that land of the mystic hereafter,
Ever sheltered by azure-hued skies,
Where no darkening clouds, but rose-tinted,
With their golden margins arise.

How readily fancy doth picture
Scenes of freshness and beauty alone;
For this light, so soft yet so radiant,
Is a mantle of charity, thrown
Over all of this earth's imperfections;
And as nature so faultless appears,
How easily comes the forgetting
That our life has its sorrow or tears.

These trees, clad in foliage of silver,
With linings of emerald green,
Are more beautiful far than when basking
In the glare of the sun's bright sheen.
The blue dome is more closely arching
Our world than in noonday light,
For the tree tops are almost brushing
Yonder clouds of snowy white.

Oh, heaven seems so much nearer
Than amid the bustle and strife,
For the spirit's vision is clearer,
And a glimpse of that better life
Which awaits us "over the river"
Is given, the weary to cheer;
And we rest with the view enraptured,
Knowing not but that heaven is here.

ECCE SIGNUM!

A sign upon the blood-red heaven!
A darkness blotting out the sky,
And troubled voices shoreward driven,
All stormily to die.
The iron age is born again,
The lion once more feeds on men,
While o'er the vulture's beetling nest
Echo the wailings of the lost,
And midnight winds that never rest.

A sign upon the blood-red heaven!
A star above the shrouded graves,
And stormy sunsets dimly driven
Along time's troubled waves.
See ye not yonder fires which streamed
From glories that the ancients dreamed,
And glittering planets wandering, lost
From some far Eden firmament,
Like sunlit drifts all tempest tossed?

God's footsteps graven on the rock,
The way which saints have made sublime,
The power that bound the earthquake's shock,
And stayed the flow of time.
See ye not all along the years,
Though arched with hate and wrong and tears,
The strugglings of a life to be,
Like some far light athwart the gloom,
The morn which riseth from the sea.

God help us! There are Edom wilds,
And red seas foaming back their ire.
God help us! There are serpent gulfs,
And paths all strewn with fire.
Lead us to thee! Thy will be done,
And in the long way but begun,
Drifting, e'er drifting out from shore,
Let heart and soul and vision know
Thy presence evermore.

Number Ten.

RED RIVER—ALEXANDRIA QUARTERLY CONFERENCE—PREACHER MURDERED—CHURCH BROKEN UP—DONATIONS.

Father Mississippi was full and doing some damage by way of the old crevasses, but little trouble was apprehended, as it was reported from above as falling. Red river was in the same condition, and many fine farms were under water. Much of the corn is, however, beyond harm, and crops along the river look well. Alexandria looks about the same gloomy place; very little building going on. Landing at midnight, we found good accommodations at the Ice House Hotel, and next day proceeded to look up old friends. The Quarterly Conference was, of necessity, thinly attended. Brother Small gave a good report of his work. No complaints were brought against the official members. The circuit has suffered some from persecution. The breaking up of the Halloway's Prairie appointment, the murder of Brother Green, the local preacher, and several members, and the failure so far to find some of the families who were driven off, casts a gloom over our people. Many outrages were reported, and without any immediate prospect of redress or protection. The church property is in good condition, a fine pulpit has been built, with altar, rail, etc., at an expense of fifty dollars—a generous gift by the Pastor's friends. A pair of large pulpit lamps has been presented to the church, and at the preaching services a neat desk hymn book was subscribed for by a few of the sisters.

THE SCHOOLS—PINEVILLE CHURCH—KU-KLUX DEMOCRATS—THE SOLDIERS' CEMETERY.

The Sunday school is in good condition, under the care of Brother Small, assisted by Mr. Mills, the school-teacher, and his wife, with other good friends of the children.

Mr. Mills has an excellent day school, and his pupils are increasing rapidly. I visited the school, and heard some recitations.

In Pineville the school has been closed for want of a teacher; and this interest is suffering all over the parish from the sad poverty and oppression which prevails, and not from any neglect of duty by Captain Butrick, our excellent Bureau agent.

We are likely to soon obtain land and a house at Pineville. Good friends have it in hand. Meetings have not been held at nights for some weeks at these places for fear of violence. The parsonage and church at Alexandria were recently searched by the Ku-Klux Democrats on the pretense that arms were secreted in them.

Soldiers' Cemetery near camp is well arranged. One fine monument is conspicuous, while around lie the thousands of dead heroes, and over them floats in heaven's breezes the loved flag under which they fought and died for their country.

AVOYELLES PARISH—BIBLE FAMINE—OLD CHURCH—CAUCASIAN INSTITUTE—INDIAN FERRYMAN.

The ride through the fragrant piny woods was pleasant. Stops were made at the poor settlers' houses to distribute Bibles and tracts. Several families were destitute of the sacred volume, and all kindly welcomed the supply brought to their doors. At the Red river ferry the family had neither Bible nor money, but a Bible paid the fifty cents ferriage, and may be the means of directing more precious souls across the dark river of death into the better land. At Marksville, among strangers, the hospitalities of Captain Collins and lady, and Mr. Ross, the new agent of the Bureau, were highly valued.

A dilapidated Methodist church in the village looks the whole story of religious destitution. It has been occupied by Protestants and Catholics, used for shows, balls, and everything except the profanation of a negro school. I found here an opening for Nasby, "The Marksville Caucasian nstitute." Only some half-dozen pupils attend it, and the thing is about to go down, probably under the weight of such a bombastic name. Other good schools are, however, in operation, one of them for colored children, kept by a one-armed colored man. It was a wild country, across swamps and bayous, to Holmesville. I was ferried over one swamp a half-mile wide by "Lo! the poor Indian," a veritable son of the forest, with coal-black eyes and hair; he had the conscience to make me pay a dollar for the job; and to cross DuLac a fee of half a dollar was charged. The bridges had been destroyed, I was told, to keep away the Yankees. Vain thought, as though bridges were impediments to the hosts of Freedom.

NEW CIRCUIT—BROTHER HILTON'S WORK—PERSECUTION—HOLMESVILLE QUARTERLY CONFERENCE—EXCELLENT SUGAR HOUSE SCHOOL.

I was enabled to organize a new circuit for this section of country, where no Protestant minister is now laboring, and put it in charge of Rev. William Smith, a Baptist elder who has joined us with all his people. We start with four appointments, one hundred and fifty members, two hundred Sunday-school children, two preachers, and several exhorters. Brother Hilton, of the neighboring circuit, deserves much credit for his labors in this matter. This brother was found happy and prosperous, although enemies had striven to drive him from his work. The owner of the sugarhouse in which his school and church had been held, and who was under obligations to him for influencing hands to work his place, ordered him out, "because his members and the children's parents voted the Republican ticket." This is the avowed policy of our Ku-Klux Democracy. Thankful that his life was spared, our brother crossed the bayou, and now has a much better sugarhouse for his use, and a larger school and congregation. So much for persecution. The Quarterly Conference minutes show a good condition of his circuit; no complaints; three appointments; three Sunday schools; two new preachers received. I visited his day school of about sixty scholars, and was gratified with the exercises; all the lessons were recited well; the singing was excellent; the old sugarhouse rang with the sweet melodies, "We'll Stand for the Right." "Pilgrim Band," and the precious "Nearer, My God, to Thee." On Bayou Bœuf we have a great work and many adversaries; threats are constantly made against us, but in God is our trust, and we shall prevail.

ITINERANT.

Men change, but truth never. The sweep of time bears on its surface a thousand floating things, but in its calm and tranquil depths lie unmoved the diamonds and pearls that beauty covets and wisdom labors to secure.

[For the New Orleans Advocate.]

Letters on Temperance.

BY FREDERICK K. HYDE.

NEW ORLEANS, July 3, 1868.

MR. EDITOR:

One point remains to be touched upon in this subject—the adulteration of liquors. This is now carried on to such a vast extent that the intelligent physician hesitates to prescribe alcoholic liquors, even in the most urgent cases, for external or internal application, from the uncertainty of procuring anything but a poisonous imitation.

The poisonous articles mostly used by the manufacturers of liquors are strychnine, coculus indicus, opium, tobacco, henbane, potash, nitric acid, prussic acid, oil of vitriol, etc. Some years since Dr. Woodward, of Worcester, Massachusetts, published an account of his visiting a man who had broken his leg, and when he had set it he asked if they had any rum in the house. They brought him some, with which he wet the bandages; but two days afterward he was alarmed when he found the heads of the pins which he used in binding it up were corroded, and on examining the rum which was used he found it contained a large portion of oil of vitriol!

Poisonous flavorings of various kinds, put up in packages of five, ten, and forty gallons, requiring only the addition of pure spirits to make every kind of drink which the debased taste of the community may require, are now publicly advertised in our journals. We annex some facts on adulteration taken from reliable sources: "Brandy is almost universally a base adulteration. The imported article, as a general fact, is adulterated. The profit is so enormous that the dealers can not withstand the temptation to adulterate. Aqua fortis is the acid used in the preparation of counterfeit brandy; when combined with rectified spirits it imparts to it a brandy-like flavor. Potash, ashes, oil of vitriol, are used to give proof. To prepare and sweeten gin, etc., oil of vitriol, oil of almonds, oil of turpentine, oil of juniper berries, lime water, alum, salt of tartar, subacetate of lead are used. Sulphate of lead is poisonous, and the use of it is frequent, because its action is more rapid, and it imparts to the liquor a fine complexion; hence some vestiges of lead may often be detected in malt liquor. As with brandy and gin, so with rum. If whisky will sell for more money under the name of rum than under the name of whisky, it is as easy to turn whisky into rum as into brandy, gin, or wine.

We now come to wine. Here the fabricators make the greatest profits, exercise their greatest skill, and probably do the greatest amount of injury. Unadulterated wine, according to its name and quality, must command a certain price to make it worth dealing in. The fabricator's ingenuity is put to the greatest trial to produce an article resembling the pure, so as to obtain as near as possible the price of pure, and as it is impossible to distinguish the pure from impure, and as the impure can be made at one-tenth to one-quarter of the value of the pure, the same as the bogus dollar would take the place of the pure silver dollar provided it was settled by common consent a dollar was a dollar whether bogus or not.

Says Dr. Nott: "I had a friend who had been once a wine dealer, and having read the startling statements made public in relation to the brewing of wines and the adulterations of other liquors generally, I inquired of that friend as to the verity of those statements. His reply was: "God forgive what has passed in my own cellar, but the statements made are true, and all true, I assure you."

The process of adulteration is carried on in wine countries as well as in this country, with regard to madeira, sherry, claret, and all other kinds of wine.

The Rev. Dr. Baird has stated "that little or no wine is drunk in France in a pure state, except it may be at the wine press. The dealers purchase at the vineyards in a pure state, but in their hands it is entirely changed by adding drugs or distilled spirit."

Says Horatio Greenough, the eminent sculptor, "That although wine can be had in Florence at one cent a bottle, the dealers do not hesitate to add drugs and water to gain a fraction more of profit."

CHAMPAGNE.—A man who once worked as a printer is now engaged in making champagne for the ladies and gentlemen of the country at a cost to him of two dollars the dozen.

Some cider or whisky, some water, some fixed air, some sugar of lead, etc., form the compound. When this fabricated mixture circulates in the country, it is generally sold as pure, and our young men often quaff it at two dollars the bottle, and an advance on original cost of only 1100 per cent!

A physician in New York purchased a bottle of what was called genuine champagne of the importers, and had it subjected to chemical tests. It was found to contain a quarter of an ounce of sugar of lead. Who would like to drink a mixture of sugar of lead and water?

A gentleman in New York who made champagne purchased some of the regular importer, wishing to give his friends some of the genuine article. At a convivial party he produced his pure as imported: when the corks began to fly one dropped near him; on examining it he found it was his own fabrication. The supposed importer had purchased it, and by his French tinsel and French labels sold it back as pure to the original fabricator—biting the biter.

PORT.—An Episcopal clergyman, recently returned from the continent of Europe, visited an immense manufactory of all kinds of wines. Logwood came in as a great ingredient; so great that the proprietors kept a vessel in their employ for its importation.

The dyers in Manchester, England, say "The wine brewers are running away with all the best logwood," and the London people say, "If you wish to get genuine port you must go yourself to Oporto, make your own wine, and ride outside of the barrel all the way home."

In the manufacture of beer nux vomica and coculus indicus are extensively used. Nux vomica is the substance which forms the poison in the upas tree, and is so bitter that one grain deposited in eighty pounds of water produces a bitter solution. Coculus indicus is a poison of which ten grains will "kill a dog."

Your readers who may be desirous to pursue the subject of adulteration in full are referred to Hunt's "Frauds in the liquor traffic, elicited and proved from the standard receipt books and guides of vinters, distillers, and brewers." It not only proves the frauds beyond all cavil, but shows the deadly nature of the ingredients used.

In fine, it is believed by those who are competent judges that there is scarcely a drop of intoxicating liquors, whether brandy, gin, rum, whisky, wine, or beer sold or drank in this country which is not adulterated or drugged. Could the real truth be known upon this subject it is evident that, with the exception of those already within the deadly embrace of the syren of intemperance, the whole community would at once and forever abandon the use of intoxicating drinks.

Among your readers there are many who stand high in society by the offices, civil and military, which they fill. For a few moments I entreat the indulgence of such. As public functionaries you have considerable influence in the community; the honors conferred upon you are proofs of the position. You can do much; you have it in your power to contribute largely to the promotion of moral goodness and the suppression of vice. Your demeanor will unquestionably have a powerful agency in forming the conduct of those who walk in the humbler spheres of life. Let religion and morality characterize your behavior. Foster temperance and Christianity, and assist those who are its avowed advocates. In the neighborhoods where we see temperance most prevalent we uniformly see better citizens, better husbands, better wives, better parents, and better children. By your words, by your actions inculcate principles of integrity, sobriety, and industry. Let no man be able to charge you with being auxiliary to anything incompatible with strict decorum. Let your characters stand fair, not only unimpeached but unimpeachable. If you violate the rules of propriety by frequenting grog shops, barrooms, and doggerels, it will be claimed as a license by others to do so. Thus for immoralities you are doubly responsible, responsible not only as private individuals, but as officers.

Gentlemen, I may be younger than you who I now specially appeal to; I may be inferior to you in point of knowledge and experience, yet I claim it as my privilege to be plain with you on this subject, and I feel that every lover of temperance will protect me in the exercise of this privilege. Then, as friends to your country and constitution, love virtue and temperance, and practice them daily.

Fathers, for I know there are many, I beg your attention. Though I can lay claim to nothing beyond a youthful parent, I ask you to heed. I intend no reflection, but the peace of your declining years, and the constant felicity of your offspring. By becoming parents you have placed yourselves in a situation peculiarly critical. A more important charge than that of rearing children has never been assigned to a human being. By becoming parents you imposed on yourselves all the duties arising from their maintenance, their protection, and education; and upon the manner in which you discharge these will in a great measure depend their future standing in life, as individuals and as members of society. Nature herself prompts to a discharge of the obligations resulting from the two former; but the education of children is too frequently neglected, or if attended to at all it is in such a way as is not the most commendable. At an early period, let them be taught the sciences, which are so useful to every person in every imaginable station in life. If the proper methods be adopted they may be instructed in these very necessary branches of literature before they can be of much service to you either on your farms or in your shops. If possible, inspire them with a passion for reading. Whatever their avocations may be they will find many vacant hours which they can not spend more profitably than in the perusal of good books. Books will not only afford amusement, but an addition to the qualifications of the mind. Put it in their power to know something of what is transpiring in the world. For effecting this I would recommend newspapers. Examine them on what they read. Give them every encouragement. Point out the advantages resulting from books, and the pleasures of the well-informed mind.

The celebrated Goldsmith has said that a country of ignorance will always produce a plentiful harvest of error and superstition, which are two mortal enemies to human happiness. Tyrants can not subjugate an enlightened people. Where science erects her standard freedom will reign. Ignorance and intemperance will generate slavery. Those who are acquainted with their rights will not be duped. Then teach your children wisdom and temperance; teach them those things which are necessary for the constitution of a worthy and useful citizen. Inspire them with a love of morality and an abhorrence of intoxicating liquors. Instruct them by precept. Teach them to pay a conscientious respect to the golden rule. Inculcate the propriety of living honestly, of injuring no person, and of giving every one his due. Teach them that coffeehouses, grogshops, bar-rooms, doggerels, champagne suppers, and every place where intoxicating liquors are sold or used as a beverage are but doors to eternal infamy, or roads to the prison or gallows.

Strong in Faith.

It must be confessed that many who in the judgment of charity are true Christians show very little of the power of faith. Many, too many, are compelled to say in the same breath, "Lord, I believe," and "Help thou my unbelief." Too many have just such a contradictory experience; now believing, now unbelieving; and the best evidence of belief they have is that they find themselves applying to Christ for deliverance from their unbelief: "Help thou mine unbelief."

Only to believe is to live; but merely as the feeble, wailing infant, that must be nursed and carried, and fed with milk, and borne with in its thousand infirmities; but to be strong in faith is to be grown into vigorous manhood, to be a power instead of a care in the family, the church, and the community; to be able to digest the strong meat of the word. The weak believer dwells in a kind of twilight. It is as if the shining light which had broken the darkness of his night stood still before quite reaching the horizon, and left him amid half-dissipated shadows, scarcely enabling him to distinguish between friendly and hostile objects, scarcely revealing to him the way of truth and rectitude. He that is strong in the faith has a fully risen sun shining upon him. He plants his foot firmly in the well-marked path of duty. He grapples unhesitatingly with his foe

To be strong in faith is to take a firm hold of the offers of mercy in the Gospel. It is to be most heartily convinced with the all-sufficiency of the merits of Christ and the sincerity and freeness of his offers, and to put implicit trust in them. It is to lay hold on them as our only and yet complete salvation. It is to yield them our highest confidence, depend upon them as we do not depend on the best earthly friend or earthly substance. It is to feel them as an immovable rock beneath our feet, as an anchor to the soul, sure and steadfast, entering into that within the veil. It is to see in Christ our complete salvation. It is to feel satisfied, safe, assured in him, to transfer all our fears to him, to rest in his arms of mercy as a place beyond peril from all the assaults of hell and sin and Satan. It is to feel that his grace is full enough, his merits rich enough, his satisfaction broad enough to warrant all who accept them in the exercise of a humble but positive and comforting assurance of salvation.

To be strong in faith is to grasp firmly those unseen truths and facts revealed in the Scriptures. Materialism has no Bible, and could never have originated the sacred books or traditions of the most debased of heathen tribes. A strong faith is a nature divinely endowed, or trained quite beyond the meagre limits with which materialism would fetter thought. Materialism ignores and would crush the capacity of faith in man. The man of strong faith asserts his prerogative as a spiritual being. He has in himself the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen. The existence of God, and of the other world as a place of rewards and punishments, the duty and value of prayer, and all the grand facts and principles involved in the Christian religion are practical realities to him. He walks with God. He worships and obeys him. He accepts of his great love in Christ Jesus, and takes it as an unspeakable consolation to his heart. He shortly expects to meet his God in judgment, and afterward to dwell with Him forever. These things exert a constant perceptible influence on his everyday life and conduct. They are the rule of his life. He walks by faith, not by sight.

The strong in faith grasps the great, strong doctrines of the Bible with a firm hand. He admits them unwaveringly into his mind, because he has already given them a cordial admission into his heart. Not by dint of laborious self-persuasion does the belief in the inspiration of the scriptures, in the divinity of the Christian religion, and the reality of the miracles of the Bible hold its uncertain tenure in his convictions. No chill, negative criticism can send quaking into his steadfast soul. He feels a deep harmony between his soul and the glorious doctrines of the gospel. Glowing in the calm majesty of undoubted divine truth they communicate their own stability to his mind; his faculties, his energies, all the movements of his being fall into beautiful order, and keep time to their inspiring celestial music. Healthful vigor animates his inward life: hope beams like a star on his countenance; his blows for truth and for God have more than mortal energy, while skepticism knows nothing better than to ask questions, to raise cold suspicions, to discover difficulties and obstacles, to chill the heart, to shatter the will, and to mope helpless and bewildered in the mist she herself has raised. The highest enterprise of the doubter is criticism of the grounds of his neighbor's faith; and all he undertakes is—

"Sicklied o'er with the pale cast of thought,"

To the strong in faith the doctrines and facts of revealed religion, with their mysteries, in their heaven-reaching height and depth, and in their all-embracing breadth, are the very pillars of the universe. Nothing is so real as they; nothing is real without them. Their very difficulties, instead of being objections, are to him but the incomprehensible majesty of their truth. He believes them the more and the better for their difficulties.

Once more, the strong in faith grasp and keep hold of the promises. They take God at his word. They have believed in Christ, and they know that in him all the promises are Yea and Amen. With Christ, the greater gift, they know God in his kingdom of grace will freely give us all things. Resting on the promises they pray, and their prayers are deeds. They put God upon his faithfulness, and he honors it and answers them. They wrestle with him as if they actually had a hold upon him. Rising up thus in a mighty energy of prayer to God, their souls have wrought with prayerful energy in the world, and their great works for God have marked the history of their race, and have changed its currents. Strong in faith were Luther and John Knox, mighty in prayer, mighty in deeds. Strong in faith was Abraham, the father of the faithful, who, a friendless stranger, took possession in Jehovah's name of the promised land, then the abode of powerful idolatrous tribes; who dwelt in tents with the second and third generations of the heirs of the promise, and died in the faith, not having received the promises, but having seen them afar off, and was persuaded of them and embraced them. The childless old man, a hundred years old, received the promise that he should be heir of the world, that in his seed all the nations of the earth should be blessed; he believed in the God that quickeneth the dead and calleth those things which be not as though they were; against hope, he believed in hope and staggered not at the promise, but was strong in the faith, being fully persuaded that what God had promised he was able also to perform.

Of like invincible quality was the faith of Wichern and Harms and Gossner in Germany, and George Mueller, of Bristol, England. The lives of these men were scenes of constant, believing importunity and wrestling with God. Out of poverty and obscurity they raised up great and beneficent institutions, and became almoners of vast sums from the treasury of the Lord. No brighter proofs of the power of faith as a working principle are to be found in the history of the Church than those given in the labors of these men. They, too, with Abraham, believed in the God who calls those things which be not as though they were. They faced indescribable difficulties, and bore mountain weights of discouragement, and clung prayerfully to God through all, and succeeded. Men of strong faith make their mark. They work with more than human strength and guidance. They are positive powers in the world. Their foolishness is wiser than men, their weakness is stronger than men.—American Presbyterian.

Pen and Ink Sketches.

PETER CARTWRIGHT.

A corrugated man is he, tall, strong-limbed, broad-headed, broad-hatted. His face is as thick lined with wrinkles as that of his Eastern prototype in wit and wisdom, Father Taylor. Great ridges are piled up over face and forehead, as if the spirit within had upheaved its fiery lava into these mountainous lines. His remarkable face may have been to his hearers a refreshment; the flat face of their country having been pleasantly contrasted with the rugged face of their favorite. These shaggy features are crested with more shaggy hair. It is yet but slightly gray, and almost rustles as it seems to fly around his head in its wild confusion. From under the heavy covered brows, and from within a mass of rigid flesh, flash out two sharp black eyes. "Like to an owl in ivy bush" those eyes might compare themselves, only they are anything but owl-like in their character. Even in their ashes of eighty years live their wonted fires. He is the oldest member of the Conference, both in years and as a delegate. Since 1816 with one exception he has been a member of every General Conference. Bishop Morris is his only rival in this honor. He takes but little part in debate, and his presence is rather a reminiscence than a prophecy; rather a tree of grand proportions, whose growth and fruitage are largely accomplished, than one which is yet sending forth new shoots and producing fresh harvests. Yet his branches are not without some new fruit. His progress is more marked in this respect than that of some younger men. He sees events, and God in them, with a growing clearness of vision, and on many rising questions shows a soundness of wisdom that is likely to give his closing hours a brighter radiance than his midday glory. The noon was clouded with the darkness, not of slavery, which he always hated, but of the duty of the Church toward it. But at eventide is light.

Dr. Slicer is a powerful man, of portly frame, high and somewhat retreating forehead, very firm-set mouth, very smooth face, light and abundant hair, of sanguine, florid complexion, and temperament of the Saxon, not Southern type. He is a ready, able speaker, and as fond of debate as a war-horse of battle. He has done good service to our Church in Baltimore in one respect. When the Southern tide beat against its walls, and swept into the gulf of secession such leaders as Thomas Sergeant and Thomas E. Bond (son of the former editor of the Christian Advocate), and much of the wealth and talent of the Church and the ministry, and when the timidity which had attended its movements concerning slavery was receiving its just punishment in the blanched faces and hearts which this invasion caused, then the man who had fought abolitionism the most fiercely of any of our ministry fought secession with equal courage and with better success, for this time he was on the side of God. At his house was organized the movement which resulted in the public meeting at Eutaw street that saved Methodism in the city from complete absorption by its Southern foe. It escaped so as by fire. It is rescued from Sodom, but it is too much yet in the condition of Lot after his deliverance, feeble and timid, seeking not the society of its faithful kinsman, Abraham, who dwells in the hill country to the northward, but abiding still in the hills that overlook the fatal plain. Dr. Slicer, we trust, having gone thus far, will go yet further. Let him head the column for breaking up the wicked and weak distinctions between brethren which his churches and conferences now maintain. Maryland has four conferences, and is asking for a fifth upon her little territory. They ought to be all reduced to one or two, and would be but for the fear and trembling of the white ministers at doing the simple duty of men and Christians. Mr. Slicer knows no fear nor trembling. His conference is far in advance of its Southern and even of its Northern neighbor in that first-born of faith—virtue, manliness, courage, pluck. If he would but say the word the colored churches and ministers in the bounds of his conference would be absorbed by his conference, and the regeneration of Maryland be well begun. Dr. Slicer is a hard but generous foe, hospitable and affable, earnest of conviction, bold of speech, warm of heart. A Peter in character, who, when he is fully converted, will mightily strengthen his brethren.

St. Bernard calls holy fear the doorkeeper of the soul. As a nobleman's porter stands at the door and keeps out vagrants, so the fear of God stands and keeps all sinful temptations from entering.

Ames Methodist Episcopal Church.

There will be preaching every Sabbath at 11 A. M. at Dr. Newman's church, corner of St. Charles and Calliope streets, and social meetings for conference and prayer every Sunday and Thursday evening from eight to nine o'clock. You are invited.

Our active young friend the Assistant Editor has left the tripod for a few weeks to enjoy a well-earned vacation. We wish him much happiness in his visit to the loved ones far away, and a return in due season to the pen and scissors.

Pro tem. asks the indulgence of readers and writers while the ADVOCATE remains in his inexperienced hands.

Rev. N. L. Brakeman, late Presiding Elder of the North New Orleans District, left on Saturday last, having been transferred to another conference. He has done some excellent pioneer work in the South, and takes with him our best wishes for his future usefulness and happiness. His post-office address is Kalamazoo, Michigan.

We had the pleasure of a visit a few days since from our excellent young friend F. J. D'Avy, Esq., of St. Landry, member of the State Executive Committee, of the Parish Sub-Executive Committee, and President of the Opelousas Republican Club. We wish him much success in the object of his visit to the city, the re-establishment of a Republican press in his parish.

NEW ORLEANS, July 6, 1868.

MR. EDITOR:

Permit me through your paper gratefully to acknowledge the receipt of $194 35 through the Rev. R. K. Diossy, being the amount of a collection taken up by the Rev. J. P. Newman, D. D., May 31 in the Wabash avenue Methodist Episcopal church, Chicago, Illinois, for the benefit of the Orphans' Home of this city. This contribution comes very opportunely, as the society was entirely out of means for its current expenses.

W. B. ARMSTRONG.
Treasurer Orphans' Home.

The matron of the Orphans' Home gratefully acknowledges the donation of a barrel of clothing from kind friends in Ellington, New York, through Miss S. A. Sampson, teacher of the Home school. The clothing was mostly new and serviceable, just what was needed for our destitute little ones. Gifts of a similar character will be of great service to us, and may be addressed care of the treasurer, Captain W. B. Armstrong, 211 Camp street, New Orleans.

JANE ROBERTS, Matron.

Revival.

Rev. Marcus Dale writes us from Cypremort, St. Mary parish:

God is blessing us, his people are being built up, backsliders are reclaimed, and some souls are being born into the kingdom of grace. Last Sabbath I received eleven persons into the church; around the altar were ten anxious mourners, crying for mercy. I feel much encouraged: my Sabbath school is prosperous; a large class of old people attend, and are reading in the Bible. The house has been considerably enlarged, but is much too small yet for our congregation.

This is encouraging, and indicates that the revival at Franklin is spreading over the circuit. We are sorry to learn that Brother John Lea has been very ill; at the last accounts he was slowly recovering.

Can Grant be Beaten?

Is there any very reasonable hope left in the bosom of lingering Democrats to justify the assumption that Grant and Colfax will be beaten in November?

It has always been the custom for a people to confer the highest civil honors upon those who have been very successful upon the battle-field. Mankind have ever been more prone to reward great military chieftains than any other class of individuals. Half the statues of the world and almost all those of the ancients are those which have been erected to commemorate the names and actions of successful military chieftains.

In the earlier ages of republican Rome a great triumph was always decreed to the returning hero who had successfully reared the banners of the republic over a prostrate empire; and in later days the imperial diadem, the kingdom, and the throne were the sure rewards of the returning victor.

In republican America this example of the old world seems not wholly to have been lost. Six times since the birthday of our independence have the people brought forward for Presidential honors such of their distinguished citizens as had been successful upon the red fields of war. Washington, Jackson, Harrison, Taylor, Scott, and Grant are the six names which successful military events have brought forward as competitors for Presidential honors, and in every instance thus far save one were they successful.

General Winfield Scott is alone the only individual case in which the name of a great military chief has ever been defeated for the highest office in the gift of the American people. It remains for the ensuing ides of November to demonstrate whether the irrevocable fiat of the American people will call this now greatest military chieftain to preside over them for the next four years; or whether the remembrance and recognition of his great deeds shall be clouded by igominious defeat. His very nomination is an almost sure prelude of victory. Had he been a Democrat, and nominated by that party, although the weaker one, his opponent could have hoped for nothing but defeat. His very name is the synonym of victory. This was shown plainly at Chicago when, with a unanimity unparalleled in the whole annals of conventions, the delegates from all our wide-spread land from Eastport to Alaska, from the snow-clad hills of Maine to the far-distant Rio Grande, responded with a unity which seemed guided by Omnipotence, and with one pulsing heart, one united voice, gave their votes for the laureled Hero of the West.

His enemies complain that he is reticent—that he is taciturn. "A still tongue shows a wise head," and surely with the noisy gabble of the present occupant of the White House before him, he is continually impressed with the necessity, if not with the decency of taciturnity.

The Democratic sheets tell us he is only capable of deciding upon the respective merits of cigars, clams, and horses. Strange, indeed, that with a genius never rising above these three small things he was chosen by the wisdom of the nation to lead her conquering cohorts to battle, and stranger still that with this little modicum of talent he was not only enabled to defeat the bravest armies marshaled by the most warlike chieftains of the age, but also organized victory out of the very debris of defeat.

How hopeless, indeed, was the Union cause when he was called to lead her armies in the West. How successfully he foiled the efforts of Sidney Johnson with his reported 100,000 men at Bowling Green. See how he flanked this great host, and caused the evacuation of Kentucky, and in the depth of mid winter threw his Western legions around Fort Donelson, and regardless of the rigors of winter, or the dreadful resistance made by Buckner, he at length compelled the evacuation of that strong fortress, and opened the way for the Federal fleet to the capital of Tennessee.

See him again on the heights of Shiloh, combating a resistance which seemed overpowering, and after sustaining a check in that first day's fight that would have induced almost any other leader to evacuate the field, again at early dawn leading his gallant legions to battle; displaying throughout the carnage of that dreadful day a confidence in victory, which eventually terminated in leaving him master of that well contested field.

Let us follow him to Vicksburg, and during the conduct of that ever-memorable siege see if we found him wanting in talents, expedients, or courage. The water line of that mighty river was covered with floating batteries, while the tall hills above were all bristling with heavy ordnance, and served by as intrepid gunners as ever followed the banner of Napoleon, From Grand Gulf to the mouth of the Yazoo every cliff might be said to hold a battery, and every bush was bristling with bayonets. The entire press of the South sported at the idea of a landing, and after the dreadful repulse at Chickasaw bayou the best skilled foreigners in military circles declared the situation held by Pemberton to be impregnable. During those gloomy days the lovers of the Union everywhere stood with dejected heart. The pale matron as she sent her darling boy to the war; the loving bride who bade her husband of yesterday farewell that he might range himself under the banner of Grant, thought of that rushing river, and of those cliffs crowned with artillery, and with a prayer to God and a trust in Grant, awaited the long and weary termination of that siege. No watchfulness exceeded that of the rebel guards along the shore, and no patrol was more vigilant, and no mere man unaided by Heaven could have succeeded in what the world had considered a forlorn undertaking. The military world after the failure to turn the river through the canal, would have justified the raising of the seige. Sherman with all his gallantry had been hurled back at an immense sacrifice of human life, and nothing remained but to run the gigantic gauntlet, and throw his columns across the river at Grand Gulf. To any other leader thus situated this would have been an insurmountable task, and yet this man so incapable of rendering an opinion save upon the merits of a clam, dared essay a task from which a Wolfe or a Napoleon would have shrunk dismayed.

After marching through interminable swamps. wading bayous, and dragging his artillery through morasses, General Grant threw his advanced guard across the sullen stream, and unfurled once more the banner of the republic upon the heights below Vicksburg, and very soon thereafter had to fight, near Fort Gibson, one of the sharpest contests of the war with the flower of Pemberton's forces. Victory as usual perched upon his standard. Jackson was taken, and every avenue of communication cut off between Vicksburg and the Confederacy, and after fighting the terrible battle of Champion Hills the army sat down before beleagured Vicksburg until the fourth of July, 1863, when the capture of the army and surrender of the city opened once more the mighty river to the commerce of the West.

The successes which had hitherto attended the operations of General Grant were somewhat apologized for by the Southern press by saying he had only been matched with inferior men. "Let him but be placed in competition with Lee," said they, "and all his past fame will wither like a garland from the world." The national exigency soon occasioned him to be brought directly to oppose this renowned General who was always deemed invincible, and the Southern people would as soon have believed that Gibraltar's storm-defying rock had been captured as that Richmond could be taken. The genius of Scott had failed. McDowell, McClellan, Burnside, and Hooker all had failed to match them with the dreadful veterans of Lee. And thus the two armies, both under leaders that had been till then invincible, were now found pitted against each other at the Wilderness and at Spottsylvania, and the Southern presses still claimed the victory after the dreadful carnage of those days. But Lee retreated with his army upon Richmond, while Grant shut him in and besieged him in that city. For several months the war was continued, till at last the great Lee was forced to abandon the capital he had so long defended, and retreated in a direction from whence he could hope for no aid. While he was thus surrounded at Appomattox Grant with a kind consideration which would have forever won him the friendship of any less vindictive enemy offered to receive the surrender of Lee, intimating to him the unreasonableness of longer continuing the now hopeless contest. The wily Lee at length agreed, not to surrender the entire army of Northern Virginia, but simply the men under his command. Lee well knew there were many thousands upon his muster rolls that were not under his command, and could he have spared all the absentees they would have been free for the use of any new levies the South might still hope to raise. But it seems our man of cigars and clams was not thus easily to be outwitted, but insisted on receiving the surrender of the army of Northern Virginia, and thus putting a virtual end to the war at one stroke.

As Washington was the hero of the old revolution so is General Grant of the new. He it was who overthrew the colossal rebellion, secured forever the integrity of the Union, dispersed the hosts of embattled rebels, and gave the old banner of our fathers once more to Southern breezes.

Can the American people now ignore all these splendid services? Can they suffer defeat once to gather around his ever victorious banner? Will they disgrace him by subjecting him to defeat? Methinks I hear one loud swelling anthem rising far away in the frozen lakes of the North, swelling from end to end of this broad Union, echoed by Alleghany's peaks of snow, heard again on the mountains of Montana, rolled on to where Nevada guards the quiet Western sea one glorious shout. one determined resolve. Firmly will we stand by him who so firmly stood by us amid the thunder shock of battle.

About Prayer Meetings.

"The Sabbath at Home," an excellent family magazine, published by the American Tract Society, Boston, Massachusetts, is issuing a series of articles under the above title which contain some excellent thoughts. The subject is pleasantly discussed at the tea table by members of several churches. We commend the following extracts to the careful consideration of our people:

I have come to a perfectly clear conclusion on one point, and that is, that be they interesting or uninteresting no church member is right in staying persistently away from them unless he has reasons that will pass at the final day. Our duty is as plain as daylight to me. We ought to go regularly; and if the meetings are not what we like, the first thing to do is not to abandon them, but to set about reforming them.

* * * * * *

Stereotyped methods of conducting prayer-meetings were commented upon and condemned as unsatisfying, and as going directly counter to the needs of both mind and heart. It took only a short time to reach a unanimous conclusion that variety was an absolute requisite in this, as in all other endeavors for the benefit of men. And equally unanimous was the decision that men should not come to the prayer meeting with sanctimonious countenances, altering their tone of voice, and, indeed, often putting on such an aspect as scarcely to be recognized for the same persons who go to town with us every day in the cars, and meet us cordially in the streets, and run in and out of our places of business. Why should not a man be a man everywhere, speaking in the same tone of voice, and wearing his own look?

Proper preparation was also insisted upon as very essential. If the political and horticultural and railroad meetings occupied no more of the thoughts of those that attend them than the prayer meetings do, and if no more preparation was made to accomplish the proper ends of such meetings, how long would men take any notice of them? If the stale thoughts which are uttered continually in prayer-meetings were spoken in any other gathering, men would be seen quietly taking their hats and departing. Business men consider time too precious to waste in hearing platitudes. They want something to the purpose; at least some fresh thought.

In every church some agreement should be voluntarily entered into, by which, if a man becomes troublesome in speaking, and transgresses the limits of time and propriety, he shall be summarily stopped by the singing of the congregation, or by a reminder equally effectual.

"These are the points which we have made," said Brother C——, "and upon which we are all agreed. Now we must proceed to speak of various methods of conducting the meetings."

Brother E. suggested that a passage of Scripture be given out the week before, so that all could read and meditate upon it, and then let the leader speak ten minutes upon it, and others five minutes, and have many prayers and hymns interspersed.

Brother H. said they only held their meetings three-quarters of an hour. They had become tired of miscellaneous exhortations, and had determined for three months to have no speaking—only praying and singing. It was good to speak less to men and more to God; it was deepening the solemnity of their meetings, and fastening attention on the fact that they expected spiritual blessings only from the Lord.

Brother J. said they had no dull meetings in his church. They always had some interesting topic for discussion given out beforehand. Only five minutes were allowed for speaking. Written communications were allowed if they took only the given time. A signal was always given if one transgressed. A short prayer and a verse sung after every two speeches.

Brother L. said that in their meeting each member selected a passage of Scripture for himself, and made it a matter of study and thought during the week. At the prayer meeting he spoke of it. "You would think," he said, "that very little could be gathered of good in so short a time: but it is really surprising how much can be said in five minutes if the subject has been in mind several days."

These Christian friends then took a solemn resolution to try various methods for the reviving of their interests in the prayer meeting, and especially determined to spend time and effort for it, as they would for any other object which they intended should succeed. They did not expect a profitable and interesting lecture season unless they made effort and sacrifices, procured good speakers, and made sure that the people would attend. He said he should never forget what one man said to him while the talk was going on. "Mr. K——, if you had taken half the pains to get me to the prayer-meeting that you did to that course of lectures last winter, perhaps I should have been a Christian by this time. Do you think that we who look on from the outside can not tell what a man is most interested in, whatever his professions may be?"

One of the gentlemen here said he thought it would be an excellent thing for ministers to preach a common sense sermon on the actual meaning of Christ's command, "Seek first the kingdom of God," and then put the people upon ascertaining, each man for himself, in a statistical way, how much time he gives to the Lord in a week in prayer, private, family, and social, and what comparison could be instituted between his efforts for the advancement of Christ's cause and his efforts in other directions. In the light of covenant vows the results would be startling.

Said Franklin: "Tell me with whom a man associates, and I will tell you who he is."

The United States Senators.

The General Assembly has selected for these responsible posts two stanch Republicans and honorable high-toned gentlemen. We did not succeed in having the gentleman of our first choice elected. Nevertheless, we heartily acquiesce in the decision of the caucus. We hold party integrity and discipline to be more essential to our interests and liberties now than any personal considerations. Bolters must be taught that if they will hazard the being of the party and the liberties of the people by coquetting with rebels and selling out the party, they will be treated accordingly.

This is the only way in which we can secure party success.

Hon. John Ray.

This distinguished gentleman has endeared himself to his party by his noble and magnanimous course in the Senatorial contest. He has spurned proffers of support which would probably have elevated him to the United States Senate, because they involved or might involve even the appearance of unfaithfulness to his principles, Respected alike by political friends and foes, of unflinching integrity and commanding abilities, Mr. Ray is well worthy of the highest honors in the State or the Republic.

Summary of Legislation.

The General Assembly at our present writing are just on the point of passing finally the Constitutional amendment. The police bill will also become a law. It places the police under the control of a Board appointed by the Governor.

A printing bill is before the Senate which we wish to examine more thoroughly before we give an opinion upon it.

These are all the bills which have so far been finally adopted.

Land for Emigrants.

Circulars have been mailed to some of our preachers and to other parties in the country, which bear marks of being a swindling affair. They are signed Stokes & Co., Nebraska, and ask that ten dollars be sent by express or postoffice order for information. Mr. Stokes professes to be "late chaplain of a Georgia regiment," and says: "We want to aid our brother Southerners in getting to a home of peace and plenty." Be careful how you heed such invitations.

The Christian Observer, an official organ of the Methodist Church South, is exercised over Dr. Newman's very able and truthful lecture on the religious condition of the South. Without denying any of the lecturer's statements or statistics, our Christian friend adopts the "you're another" style, calls him vulgar names, tells his readers that Bishops Ames and Simpson are Church robbers, sanctimonious pilferers, camp followers, etc., charges the Methodist Episcopal Church with crime, disgrace, bloodshed, in having incited the murder of one O'Neal, refers to a memorial on the subject, which was sent to our General Conference at Chicago, and tells the falsehood that "it was received with roars of laughter." Having been present at the time we state what we know. After giving the best evidence, by the spirit and matter of his article, that the Doctor has made no mistake as to the demoralization of at least one minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, our amiable brother closes his plantation harangue by the following:

If Dr. Newman had intended to state facts in his statistics, which he so boastingly parades before the public, why did he not add a postscript saying our traveling preachers are hirelings from the North, known as carpet-baggers; our local preachers are negroes that we have lately mustered into the service; that our membership are negroes that we have persuaded from other churches through false representations; our sabbath schools are made up of Yankee teachers and negro children, and that our material wealth in churches, parsonages, etc., was captured from the conquered South.

We are told that some colored men are joining the Ku-Klux Democratic party. To such we commend the following items from orthodox Democratic papers:

The Day Book says this in reference to the effort in the South to coax freedmen to vote for "Old Massa:" "It seems that in every case where the Conservatives expected to get nigger votes they failed, and the mongrels have carried the day. Of course they have done so, and ought to do so, and if there are men who fancy themselves Democrats so stupid and so base as to appeal to niggers, they will be rewarded exactly as they have been rewarded in South Carolina, Georgia, etc. Alabama, with more to contend with than any other State, defeated the obscene and devilish wretches who sought to force a mongrel constitution on that State in the only way possible to do such a thing—that is, by refusing absolutely to recognize negroes as an element of political society.

Our Washington Correspondence

WASHINGTON CITY, July 4.

Prophetic utterances are common to correspondents on all subjects. I may, therefore, indulge in the prophecy that the much ado about corruption and fraud alluded to last week in connection with the pay department and others will develop this fact: A combination of corrupt "and lewd fellows of the baser sort" to break down the Second Auditor of the treasury. The schemes heretefore organized for that purpose have failed, but the originators are still busy. Mr. E. B. Frerich, the Second Auditor, is an able and intelligent officer who has the business of his immense office at his fingers' ends; he took the office with a force of thirty clerks in 1861, it now employs about five hundred. The clerks are worked hard of necessity; the public interests demand it, and the Auditor himself is as laborious as he is scrupulous and prompt.

No letter remains unanswered for a day. The unswerving integrity which has marked the conduct of this office has subjected it to the most violent assaults; the present one bearing the palm of baseness. These tricksters want the place not so much for its emoluments, for they are insignificant, but for the corrupt uses to which they can prostitute it. The fraud charged is about as impossible as anything approaching the impossible. It supposes the heads and employes of three separate and distinct bureaus shall concur with claim agents and others outside the departments to rob the government of money that must be awarded and deposited in the name of the individual claimant and subject to his order.

Mr. Fessenden is out in a strong letter tending to vindicate his vote on impeachment; but people will call up the four distinct votes cast by that Senator, involving the charges on those articles before they were drawn up, and on which the propriety and success of the charges in impeachment were based. Congress is still working at important general questions requiring great labor to perfect, and must necessarily move slowly. They have ordered the removal of the Centre markethouse—a great nuisance, which would dishonor a Turkish village.

INDEPENDENCE DAY passed according to individual inclination—the national salute being about the only public demonstration, unless the general suspension of business and a few picnics may be so called. In regard to demonstrations, Washington may be considered stupid.

Telegrams from Richmond, Virginia, announce the arrival there of seventy-five young ladies from an Elmira seminary, and their attendance on a hop in honor of their visit.

What an intellectual entertainment for these "daughters polished after the similitude of a palace." With medals of merit in philosophy and sheepskin and blue ribbon for general intellectual development and fitness for the high positions in society, they end a survey of works and objects of interest in Richmond at a shin-dig that ought to disgust an ignorant heathen. And such is the elevated height of education!

The weather is hot, but many are drunk—of course many are drunk, because it is Independence Day.

MORDECAI.

The Alexandria Democrat says General Harry T. Hays "is justly honored and revered as a true and faithful leader in the Lost Cause." The General delivered the annual address to the cadets.

"Admiral" Semmes was lately called to a professorship in the State Academy at Pineville, above alluded to, and was extolled to the skies by the faculty. Governor Warmoth will probably have something to say before long about this institution, which has only hoots and yells for loyal men, and fulsome praise for Confederate heroes like Hays and Semmes.

The Courier of the Teche says:

Fourteen men having a covering of white skin over their flesh have voted for the constitution in the parish of St. Martin. May they be pointed out with the finger of scorn by all honorable men! May they be despised and hated by every living creature. May their wives, if such creatures can have wives, remain barren, that their descendants may not rot in jails or die of exhaustion in houses of ill-fame!

White men of St. Martin, spot out those white, black, and yellow who have wished you infamy, ruin, and degradation by voting for the mongrel constitution. Let the Radicals and white negroes give them work and office. They have labored to dispossess you; they have concocted your shame; they have planned your social death. Will you continue to help them out, instead of letting them rot and starve as they deserve?

General Grant and his family, we believe, are Methodists. The General quietly gave $10,000 to the Metropolitan Methodist church to be erected in Washington city. He has generally worshiped at Wesley Chapel. Grant is a modest, temperate, honest, brave, clear-headed man. He is worthy the love and honor of the American people, and will receive it in spite of malignant slanders of any man or party.—Correspondent Rochester Democrat.

Views of Communion.

No name is to-day more illustrious in the Baptist denomination than that of Charles H. Spurgeon. His brilliant talent, extraordinary eloquence, fervent zeal, devoted piety, and wonderful success have won for him a world-wide reputation. His sermons have been published in this country, both in books and newspapers by hundreds of thousands. His is the largest Baptist church, we believe, in the world. The views of such a Baptist, therefore, on the subject of communion are of peculiar interest. It is well known that he is an advocate of open communion, and that such is the practice of his church. His views on the subject have been omitted from his sermons—we will not say with how much or how little dishonesty—by the close communion American Baptist publishers; but they are found freely expressed in the English editions.

In a sermon, for instance, on the text "These be they who separate themselves" (Jude 19), we find a very strong expression in favor of open communion. This in the American edition is one of the mutilated sermons: but the English edition, besides other pungent sentences, contains the following forcible and eloquent plea for unity at the Lord's table:

'There is not a Christian beneath the scope of God's heaven from whom I am separated. At the Lord's table I always invite all Christians to come and sit down and commune with us. If any man were to tell me that I am separate from the Episcopalian, the Presbyterian, or the Methodist, I would tell him he did not know me, for I love them with a pure heart fervently, and I am not separate from them. This bears rather hard on our strict communion Baptists. I should not like to say anything hard against them, for they are about the best people in the world; but they really do separate themselves from the great body of Christ's people. They separate themselves from the great universal Church. They say they will not commune with it, and if any one comes to their table who has not been baptized they turn him away. The pulse of Christ is communion; and woe to the Church that seeks to cure the ills of Christ's Church by stopping its pulse!

"I think it a sin to refuse to commune with any one who is a member of the Church of our Lord Jesus Christ. I should think myself grossly in fault if at the foot of these stairs I should meet a truly converted child of God, who called himself a Primitive Methodist, or a Wesleyan, or a Churchman, or an Independent, and I should say, 'No, sir, you do not agree with me on certain points. I believe you are a child of God, but I will have nothing to do with you.' I should then think the text would bear very hard on me: 'These be they who separate themselves, sensual, having not the Spirit."

We do not know, in all the range of Baptist literature a more terse and admirable plea for open communion. It turns the tables completely upon the close communionists. It makes close communion the sin—the sin of bigotry and schism! We scarcely wonder that such bold utterances should have been hushed by strict communion publishers. Too deadly thrusts does Spurgeon make at the idol of sectarianism to please in this the High Church Baptists. So they resort to the cowardly practice of striking from his sermons all such passages. The above quotation was sent to us by an English Baptist clergyman. We doubt if auy 'regular' Baptist newspaper would have the courage to publish it. Church Union.

A Mother's Words.

A youth of eighteen or nineteen years sat at an open window—a look of painful perplexity on his face, caused apparently by a letter he held in his hand. After sitting thus for some minutes he muttered to himself, "Yes, I must go; if I don't Brown and Smith will be laughing at me, and calling me righteous overmuch; and, after all, there's no great harm in it, for I'll go to church in the morning, and it's only to be a sail down the river, and spend the day in the country." Still, he pressed his hand on his forehead for an instant, then rising hastily he said, "There is no use bothering about it; I must go."

As he rose his eye lighted on the setting sun, and as he did so his whole expression changed; a sweet yet half-sad look played on his face—his thoughts were elsewhere—another scene was before his eyes, The dark street had disappeared, and in its stead a neat country cottage had risen. In thought he was there; once more he saw the hills that rose near that cottage home; once more the blue waters of the distant lake glistened before him; once more he sat in the cottage garden with his widowed mother, and watched the setting sun. Once more that mother's words sounded in his ears—"John, don't forget your God and he'll not forget you. 'Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy.' Though sinners entice thee to break it, consent thou not. O when you're tempted to do wrong don't forget to pray! Never let the sun go down on a prayerless day. May the God of the fatherless guide you; may the Lord Jesus be your Savior!"

Yes, six months had passed since he heard these words, and yet they seemed to sound in his ears. Tears filled his eyes, and rising he folded his hands and kneeled in prayer. Then taking up his pen he wrote thus:

"Thanks, Brown, for your invitation, but I can not accept it. My duty to God is to obey his commands; and he hath said, 'Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy.' Spending the day in idle pleasure is not doing this, and I wish you would think over the subject and not go yourself."

How great is the influence of a pious mother's words! How wonderful the answers to her earnest prayers!—Bible Class Magazine.

Oh, how blessed is the thought that I am going to live with God, where sorrow never comes, where heaven's own sun always shines with benignant beams, and where love, pure and perfect, flows on in one everlasting stream!

LITTLE JERRY, THE MILLER.

BY JOHN G. SAXE.

Beneath the hill you may see the mill
Of wasting wood and crumbling stone;
The wheel is dripping and clattering still,
But Jerry, the miller, is dead and gone.

Year after year, early and late,
Alike in summer and winter weather,
He pecked the stones and calked the gate,
And mill and miller grew old together.

"Little Jerry!" 'twas all the same—
They loved him well who called him so;
And whether he'd ever another name,
Nobody ever seemed to know.

'Twas "Little Jerry, come grind my rye;"
And "Little Jerry, come grind my wheat;"
And "Little Jerry" was the cry
From matron bold and maiden sweet.

'Twas "Little Jerry" on every tongue,
And thus the simple truth was told;
For Jerry was little when he was young,
And he was little when he was old.

But what in size he chanced to lack,
Jerry made up in being strong;
I've seen a sack upon his back
As thick as the miller and quite as long.

Always busy and always merry,
Always doing his very best;
A notable wag was little Jerry,
Who uttered well his standing jest:

"When will you grind my corn, I say?"
"Nay," quoth Jerry, "you needn't scold;
Just leave your grist for half a day,
And never fear, you'll be tolled."

How Jerry lived is known to fame,
But how he died there's none may know;
One autumn day the rumor came—
"The brook and Jerry are very low."

And then 'twas whispered mournfully,
The leech had come and he was dead;
And all the neighbors flocked to see;
"Poor little Jerry!" was all they said.

They laid him in his earthly bed—
His miller's coat his only shroud—
"Dust to dust," the parson said,
And all the people wept aloud.

For he had shunned the deadly sin,
And not a grain of over-toll
Had ever popped into his bin,
To weigh upon his parting soul.

Beneath the hill there stands the mill
Of wasting wood and crumbling stone;
The wheel is dripping and clattering still,
But Jerry, the miller, is dead and gone.

An Infant's Prayer.

A little child, being very weakly in body, was ordered a fresh egg every morning. On one occasion the supply of country eggs being exhausted, his mother said:

"There is no egg for Georgy this morning."

The little child paused, and looking up, said:

"Lord! Georgy; negg, negg. Amen."

The mother in astonishment said:

"Well, we shall surely have an egg to-day, no matter where it comes from."

No more was thought of the matter until the mother in the course of the day called at the butcher's to purchase some meat, not imagining for a moment that the prayer of her infant boy would be so markedly answered. The butcher said to her:

"Ma'am, would you be offended if I were to send up a lovely fresh egg for the baby? It is just laid: and I thought, as he is delicate, he might like it."

He had never done anything like this before, nor has he ever done it since: neither was he aware of the fact that the child really needed the egg. Did not the Lord put it into his heart to think on the child, in order that the infant's prayer might be answered, and the unbelief of the older hearts might be rebuked? Oh! for a more artless, childlike confidence in him who is the hearer, the answerer, and the lover of believing prayer. The flock is not so large that any one of his sheep can escape his notice. "He calleth his own sheep by name." Often those whom he has the least reason to love he thinks of the most. When the flock is all folded one lamb is missed, and the affectionate heart of the Good Shepherd knows no rest till he has gone into the wilderness and found that which was lost. And when he has found it he layeth it on his shoulders, rejoicing over it more than the ninety and nine which went not astray. No, my brother, you can not get so far from Christ as to be beyond his personal interest in your welfare, you can not live so near to him that you will be unnoticed in the countless throng that ceases not to exalt the Lamb. Christ loves you—loves you with a regard as true and particular as though all his redemptive work had been wrought for you alone.

Our fathers believed in special answers to prayer. They were not stumbled by the objection about the inflexibility of the laws of nature; because they had the idea that, when the Creator of the world promised to answer human prayers he probably understood the laws of nature as well as they did. At any rate, the laws of nature were his affair, and not theirs. They were men very apt, as the Duke of Wellington said, to "look to their marching orders:" which, being found to read "Be careful for nothing, but in everything by prayer and supplication with thanksgiving let your requests be made known unto God," they did it. "They looked unto him, and were lightened, and their faces were not ashamed."

Tight Lacing.

It is a trite but correct remark that as the human form has been molded by nature, the best shape is undoubtedly that which she has given it. To endeavor to render it more elegant by artificial means is to change it—to make it much smaller below and much larger above is to destroy its beauty; to keep it cased up in a kind of domestic cuirass is not only to deform it, but to expose the internal parts to serious injury. Under such compression as is commonly practiced by ladies, the development of the bones, which are still tender, does not take place conformably to the intention of nature, because nutrition is necessarily stopped, and they consequently become twisted and deformed. Those who wear these appliances of tight lacing often complain that they can not sit upright without them—are sometimes, indeed, compelled to wear them during all the twenty-four hours; a fact which proves to what an extent such articles weaken the muscles of the trunk. The injury does not fall merely on the internal structure of the body, but also on its beauty, and on the temper and feelings with which that beauty is associated. Beauty is in reality but another name for expression of countenance which is the index of sound health, intelligence, good feelings, and peace of mind. All are aware that uneasy feelings, existing habitually in the breast, speedily exhibit their signature on the countenance, and that bitter thoughts or a bad temper spoil the human expression of its comeliness and grace.

Need Shaking.

My watch stops; something is broken in it. I take it to the watch-maker, and he puts in a new main-spring. I do not know anything about it, except that he does it. And when it is repaired he lays it aside. Presently I go for my watch, and ask him if it is done. "Oh yes," he says, "but I do not know that it is going." And he takes it, and finding that it does not go, he winds it up, and then it does not go, perhaps; but he gives it a little shake, and it commences ticking and keeping time.

And I know many persons that have a main-spring in them, and that have been wound up, for that matter, but that have not been shaken yet! And there they are. If somebody would only take them up and whirl them round a few times, and say to them, "You are Christians; tick! tick!" they would commence keeping time. I have known persons that spent months and months, not only making no progress, but losing ground, just for want of knowledge of the fact that the office of the Lord Jesus Christ was to take people in order that they might be good, and that it was his nature, after he had taken them, to be patient with them, and help them, and bring all the power of his being to bear upon them to save them.—Henry Ward Beecher.

Arrangements are making for the construction of a bridge which shall unite the cities of New York and Brooklyn. It is to be a suspension bridge, and will cost nine or ten million dollars. When completed it will constitute one of the grandest works of art on the globe.

A boy while at play in the vicinity of Jackson, Tenn., discovered in the decayed stump of a tree promissory notes, mortgages, and other papers worth $40,000. They appear to be the property of Daniel Bell. There is no clue to the mystery of their discovery in so singular a hiding-place.

Spurgeon says: The bitterness of humility is a tonic to the spirit. To humiliate yourself is as necessary in this wicked world as it is for travelers through African jungles to take every now and then a draught of quinine.

A remarkable instance of success as a missionary is offered by the history of an English missionary, Mr. Tucker, in Tinnevelly. In twenty-one years he was instrumental in rescuing 3100 persons from heathenism and Romanism. He witnessed the voluntary destruction by the worshipers of forty pagan temples with the idols in them. He established sixty schools, and built sixty-six church edifices.

[From the Columbus (O.) Statesman.]

"The man who sets his heart upon a woman" hath a rough old time of it, especially if he marry her, and she proves to be a practical jokist. We have a case in point:

A few evenings since a young married gentleman of this city whose wife is as mischievous a little bit of femininity as ever graced the earth since Eve made such a failure in the fruit business, started to his residence after his day's labor was over, solacing himself with thinking of the loving heart awaiting his return, and the rich, ripe lips that should greet him at the threshold of his home. His heart was light, not a caremark was on his brow. He whistled as he walked, and thanked God that he was blessed with youth and love. He reached his abode and opened the door. Astonishment seized him. There was no wife to greet him on entering. The house was in confusion. The well-known trunks and dresses were gone from their accustomed places! What could it mean? He sees a note, evidently hastily written, and pinned to the counterpane. He seized it and read, "Before you have read these lines I will be far away!" No reason was given for the hasty flight. He knew of none. His big, manly heart felt like a stone, and tears of anguish forced themselves to his eyes. Gone. Gone! Gone from him who loved her so! Gone! Where? How? With whom? Nearly crazed he grasped his hat and was about rushing for the telegraph office, when—the door of an adjoining room was opened, and the mischievous little witch who had caused all this uneasiness placed a pair of plump little arms around his neck, and he was fairly smothered with kisses before he found out it was only a joke.

We would not advise our lady readers to play jokes of this sort too frequently. They might get in the way of it and carry the joke too far—say two or three hundred miles.

A Florida Senator.

General Thomas W. Osborne, admitted as Senator from Florida, is a native of Scotch Plains, in New Jersey, a brother of Rev. A. C. Osborne, D. D., of St. Louis. At the outbreak of the war he was reading law, but at once abandoned Blackstone for Hardee, and raised a company of artillery. This having soon afterward been attached to Hooker's fighting division, made itself felt everywhere on the peninsula. Before leaving there Captain Osborne became Hooker's Chief of Artillery, and distinguished himself for gallantry and good conduct generally. In the fall of 1863 he was ordered West with the Eleventh and Twelfth Army Corps, and subsequently, in the autumn of 1864, after the fall of Atlanta, when Sherman reorganized his army for his grand raid, Osborne became Chief of Artillery of the Army of Tennessee, General Howard commanding. He served throughout Sherman's great march, and up to the close of the war, when he was ordered down to Florida as Chief of the Freedmen's Bureau there. He conducted its affairs very creditably until some time in 1866 or 1867, when he retired from the army and was appointed United States Marshal for Florida, from which position he has just ascended to the United States Senate. He is about thirty-five years old. He was a Douglas Democrat, and is now a Republican.

Inauguration of the Governor of Arkansas.—The inauguration of Powell Clayton, Governor elect, took place at Little Rock, July second. About ten o'clock a procession was formed made up of the military, civil, and State officials, General Assembly, and a few citizens—about four hundred altogether. No negroes participated except members of the Legislature, which it is said caused some dissatisfaction. After a parade of two hours the procession halted at the capitol where the oath was administered to Mr. Clayton. In his address he said large numbers of the citizens of the State were not disposed to accept the results of the war, and that idle hours were spent in invectives against the new voters. The government erected at so much expense should be sustained. The constitution was spoken of as an admirable one. The ceremonies closed with a salute of fifteen guns.

WANTED AT THE CROSS ROADS.

I was in a hurry to reach home. No wonder, for it was the wildest night I had ever known in all my life, and the country over which I took my way as bad and dark as country roads in general. Consequently, I was walking at a great rate, with the collar of my rough coat over my ears, and a comforter tied over my soft hat and under my chin to keep it on and protect my ears, when suddenly a man stood full in my path and caught me by the arm.

"Hallo!" said he, "you're just in time; you are wanted at the cross roads to-night."

I fancied myself attacked by a highwayman.

I stood quite still and strove to show him by my manner that I was able to protect myself.

"What the deuce am I wanted at the cross roads for?" said I. "Unless I choose it would be a very hard matter to get me there."

But instead of producing a pistol and demanding my money or my life, the man answered in an altered tone:

"Beg pardon, I made a mistake. I thought it was my brother, and I wanted to frighten him. Bad night, sir."

"Very," said I.

"You don't know the time, sir?" he asked.

"It was seven when I left the train at L——," said I.

"Thank ye, sir," said the man. "Good night."

"Good night," said I.

If his object had been robbery, probably he had decided from my rough appearance that I was too poor a man to be worth the trouble.

But after all, I thought, probably he spoke the truth. A man may have such a voice without being a highwayman, no doubt.

So I went on homeward, and soon found myself under shelter, and partaking of a warm and savory supper.

My mother was there and my brother Ben. Ben was a great strapping fellow who could beat any other boy of his age for miles around, if it came to wrestling or boxing, and as good humored a boy as ever lived—a boy always to mother and me, though he had exercised his right to vote already in one Presidential election.

The moment Ben's head touched the pillow he always went to sleep. That night I followed his example.

But I did not sleep long without a dream—a dream in which I felt a rough grip on my arm, and was aroused by a cry in my ears:

It was so real, so palpable, that when I started broad awake I actually believed that some one was in the room; the man who had met me on the road perhaps, and who intended robbery or violence. But when I had arisen and lit my lamp the room was empty, except myself and Ben, who lay snoring on his pillow.

I went to the door; it was locked. I went to the window; the rush of rain against the panes was all I heard. I even went across the passage to my mother's room. She was awake; there had been no unusual sound she was sure.

Only a dream born of my meeting the strange man in the road, I felt had awakened me. I went to bed and fell asleep again. Again I was awakened by the same words, this time shrieked in my ear by an unearthly voice.

"Wake up, wake up. You are wanted at the cross roads."

I was on my feet once more, and caught Ben's hand as he came over toward my bed.

"What ails you?" he cried.

"Nothing," said I. "Did you hear a voice?"

"Yours," said Ben, "yelling wake up; you fairly frightened me."

"Ben," said I, "wait till I light a lamp; I heard another voice. There must be some one in the house or outside."

So I again lit the lamp, but we searched in vain.

"Nightmare," said Ben when I told him my story.

"Ben," said I, "what is there at the cross roads?"

"A house," said Ben. He had lived in the neighborhood a long while, and I not long.

"One little house, besides two oak trees, and a fence. An old man lives there—a rich man, and a bit of a miser, they say. His granddaughter keeps house for him."

"Ben, that fellow may have meant harm to them. I may be wanted at the cross roads."

"Brother," said Ben, "go to sleep. You had a nightmare," and Ben plunged in between the blankets, and was soon snoring again.

I also in ten minutes slept as soundly as before, but the awakening soon came again.

I opened my eyes to see a girl standing at the foot of my bed. A girl in white robes, with golden hair all about her shoulders, who rung her hands and cried, "Oh wake up, you are wanted at the cross roads."

This time I started out of bed, bathed in a cold perspiration. I trembled like a leaf. I had no doubt that I had received supernatural warning.

"Ben," I cried, "Ben, for the third time I have been told that I am wanted at the cross roads, and I am going."

And I began to dress myself as speedily as possible, listening the while to the storm raging wilder and wilder than at any other period since its commencement.

Ben remonstrated with me in vain. At last he also began to huddle on his clothes.

"If you have gone mad I must go with you and take care of you," he said.

"But fancy another man, going out in a storm like this to the cross roads, because a nightmare caused him to do so, and what would you think of him?"

"I said nothing. All I could have answered would have been:

"I am compelled to go; I must go. I dare not refuse, whatever may be thought of me."

In ten minutes we were splashing through the mud and rain along the road. It was perfectly dark; now and then a blazed red star in the distance told us that a lamp was beaming through the rain in some cottage window, but otherwise we would not have been conscious of our proximity to any habitation whatever. At last nearing the spot where the road from S—— crosses the road to P—— we were indeed in as solitary a place as can be imagined.

The house, which abutted on the very angle of the roads, called in familiar parlance the Cross Roads, was the only one for some distance in either direction, and certainly on such a night we were not likely to meet many travelers.

All was quiet as the grave. We stood quite still. In a moment Ben broke out in one of his wildest laughs.

"Well," he said, "how now? Will you go home now and have another nightmare?"

But hardly had the words escaped his lips when a shriek broke on the air, and a woman's voice plainly coming from the interior of the cottage, cried:

"Help! help! help!"

"Ben," said I, "we are wanted at the cross-roads;" and then understanding each other, without more words we made our way to a window through which a light shone. A muslin curtain draped the panes, but through it we saw an awful sight.

An old man lay on the floor, and over him bent a ruffian, clutching his throat, and holding a pistol to his ear, while another man grasped the shrieking girl by the arm—a girl in a floating night dress—with such long golden hair as belonged to the girl of my vision.

Not a moment was to be wasted.

Ben flung his weight against the slender lattice and crushed it in, and we had grappled the ruffians before they knew whence the attack came, or how many foes were upon them.

I do not intend to describe the struggle; indeed, I could not if I would. But we were strong men, and inspired by the cries of the helpless old man and the terrified girl, we soon had one of the villains bound, and the other lying prostrate on the floor.

Then Ben started for assistance, and before morning both were in jail, Ben admitting, as we shook each other by the hand, that "we were wanted at the cross roads."

The old man was not a miser, but he had saved some few thousand dollars for his old age, and living more plainly than he need have done, had given rise to the rumor, and so brought the burglars to the cross roads in the hope of booty.

The girl, a beautiful creature of seventeen, was his granddaughter, and as no story is acceptable to the lady readers without a flavor of romance, I will tell them that she became in after years not my wife but the wife of my darling brother Ben.

General Meade and A. J.

Reports are in circulation that the President is not very well satisfied with the official acts of General Meade, and Mr. Johnson finds one cause of complaint in a very curt general order lately issued by General Meade, wherein the President is really the principal person reprimanded. It appears that a Captain Hollister was tried, found guilty, and sentenced to be cashiered, and that Meade approved the same and sent the record to Mr. Johnson. And the following extract from the order referred to tells the story in General Meade's own language. "Captain Hollister was tried before a court martial of his peers, composed of officers mostly of other regiments, and was found guilty of absence without leave, drunkenness on duty, and conduct to the prejudice of good order and military discipline, and was sentenced by the court to be cashiered. After a careful examination of the proceedings of the court the Major General commanding deemed it his duty to approve the same and forward them for the approval of the President of the United States. The President having ordered a commutation of the sentence of the court to a reprimand in general orders by the General commanding the department, Captain Hollister is accordingly reprimanded, and on receipt of this order at the post at which he is serving, will return to duty."—Washington Chronicle

Daniel Burns, of Bay City, Michigan, has written a pamphlet upon boiler explosions. Its object is to give an exposition of the causes of these explosions, and the means by which they may be prevented, deduced from an examination of the chemical principles involved in the generation of steam. He advances a new theory, that explosions occur from the "passage of hydrogen gas through the boiler plate when heated to an improper degree, and when that gas comes in contact with the fire it will explode the iron, for the iron becomes highly charged with gas." Another class of explosions occur from the intense heat set free from the steam in the boiler. He proceeds to elucidate the whole theory of the formation of steam, and claims that electricity is produced by the operation, which, bringing the oxygen and hydrogen gases, set free by the heat, in contact with each other, causes an instantaneous union, and so produces an explosion. That seems to be the chief point of his theory, and he has so fortified himself by an army of authorities that he seems invulnerable.

A new locomotive car for street or steam railways is announced. It is said to solve a very difficult problem in railway mechanics. Driving wheels are dispensed with, motion being communicated direct from the piston in the cylinder to the wheels of the truck by means of "parallel rods." In case of the circular movement of the truck, boiler, engine, and all connected therewith, revolve. One of these cars has been running for nearly two years on the Stoughton branch of the Boston and Providence railroad. The cost of one capable of seating sixty persons, more or less, is $10,000. Among its other commendable qualities for street use, it is said that it will not frighten horses or make objectionable noise more than horse cars; that the machinery is out of view, there being no toothed gears, bell, or whistle, and no puffing noise or visible escape of the exhaust steam.

A man has just died in England from excessive bleeding of the gums, caused by a blow received in a quarrel. Surgeons tried to stop the hemorrhage, but it continued four days, when death ensued.

President General Robert E. Lee, of a college in Virginia, was a half-brother of the highly respectable and $300,000 colored Mr. Alfred Lee, who recently died in Georgetown, D. C.

The following, which we clip from an exchange, is not so awful bad after all:

A loving offer to marry
Is always a lawful trade,
For his is a legal tender,
And she is the tender made.

A fire-eating candidate for office in the South was asked his opinion on negro suffrage. "Oh, d—n the niggers. They should not be allowed to vote at all." "Yes, Colonel, but about five hundred of them in your district want to vote the Democratic ticket." "Oh, ah! Yes—yes—very well. That makes all the difference in the world."

There was once a consul at ——, who indicated his office hours by the legend on his door, "In from ten to one." An old sea captain, who kept coming for about a week, without finding the consul, at last furiously wrote, in terms of a wager, under this legend, "Ten to one you're out."

The Eastport (Maine) Sentinel says: "Men are hunting all over town to procure laborers, without success. From appearances we should judge there was much, and indeed more work going on here this spring than usual."

The young girl who was reported to have committed suicide from love, in Newark, New Jersey, lately, died from self-love rather than from the love of a young man. She was in the habit of taking arsenic to improve her complexion, and her last dose brought death.

The latest Yankee inventions are economic cheroots, which are twice the length of the ordinary, and herein is the economy. The government taxes cigars without regard to length, and the application of a knife will make one of these into two in an instant.

An eccentric miller in Proctorsville, Maine, has built his own monument of red sandstone, millstones being used as the base and cap of the second section. He has carved thereon this inscription: "Thou, I am dead yet speaketh for here is rest it has ever been my heart desire to do unto you as I would that ye should do unto me so cast the beam out of your own eye and let me lie in peace and sing my redeemers love come my sweet companion meet me here."

Rev. Morrill Allen, of Pembroke, Massachusetts, who is now ninety three years of age, does his gardening with his own hands, besides superintending the work of his large farm. He has until the past five years occasionally occupied the pulpit, and preached with vigor and effect. He often takes walks of from three to ten miles in preference to riding.

The New York World says:

If we can carry the election it makes little difference on what platform or with what candidate.

Let the Democrats, then, nominate General Grant and adopt the Chicago platform, and they will be certain of carrying the Presidential election.

A patriotic youth of Schenectady, New York, who was anticipating the Fourth, had his pocket filled promiscuously with candy and torpedoes. He meditated eating some of the candy, but by mistake got a torpedo in his mouth. The torpedo exploded, but luckily no greater harm was done than to give the lad a good scare, and to impress him with a dislike for that kind of toys.

"I won't die and I won't be blistered," said Sarah, doughty Duchess of Marlborough, when her physicians presented this alternative to her; and she didn't die. The Democratic party shows a similar obstinacy, but can hardly hope to exhibit a parallel vitality. Blustering can seldom accomplish the work of blistering; and when the latter is imperative, as in this case, the former will be found inefficient.

An Iowa paper intimates that the reason why Clay Dean does not wash himself is because he is afraid the Democratic party might lose ground.

Many men indorse the sentiments of Horace Binney Sargent, expressed at the Republican ratification meeting in Boston: "If secession is not whipped out of the nation we will elect a man who can whip it, and if it is we want to shake hands, make up, and go to work as a nation."

A lady in Prince Edward's Island sent to the International Convention at Detroit the motto, "Christ for all the world: all the world for Christ," which was suspended over the President's chair.

If half the efforts now making by the rebels to enlighten, educate, and encourage the black man had been made in favor of their own poor whites ten years ago, they never would have embarked in the bloody experiment of a civil war.

The bitter opposition to the new constitution of Mississippi is caused by the fact that it legalizes the marriage of all persons now cohabiting together as man and wife. This clause excites terrible opposition among the leaders of the rebel Democracy of that State, many of whom have long kept their colored concubines, and do not now relish being equally responsible for their black and tan progeny.—St. Louis Democrat.

The World seems to delight in its old custom of libeling our gallant soldiers. It charges them with being plunderers, pirates, thieves, and cut-throats. It has no word of censure for the rebel invaders of the North. The World can not hide its rebel sympathies.—New York Commercial.

Colonel Crogan, who bought the Mammoth Cave, explains himself thus: "I bought it for $4000, and it has been a grand purchase. I have been buying caves now this twenty years. The first one I owned was in Illinois, and I now own fifteen. People found I was fond of caves, and they brought them to me, and I bought them. They are curious things. I always was fond of caves."

One would suppose, in reading the Southern papers, that the rebels were the most innocent people on earth. Nobody, after perusing these interesting journals, would ever dream that these worthy gentlemen originated a war against a generous government, which cost half a million of innocent lives, and ended in a debt of four hundred thousand millions of dollars.

In one of the oldest and most reliable savings institutions of this city the question arose, shall we sell our government bonds? "No," said the President, the well-known and respected Judge of the United States Courts, who has set for nearly forty years upon the bench. "No; government bonds are a good security, and if Grant is elected they are sure for four years longer." So the other sober and steady men of the country say.—Wilmington (Del.) Commercial.

WE ARE NOT OUR OWN.

We are not our own, to live and die,
Catching at pleasures as they fly;
We are not our own, when a mighty crowd
Cries with an urgent voice and loud:
"We perish! we perish! oh, give us bread—
Fill us and feed us as you have been fed;"
When the pale shrunk lip, and the hollow eye,
Bespeak them fainting, and like to die;
When the widow groans in her wretchedness,
And the infant wails in its weak distress;
Turn not away from the sigh and the moan—
Remember, O man! thou art not thine own.
We are not our own in the eager strife
With truth and error, death and life;
There's a mission of mercy and love to fulfill—
Shall others be stirring, and we be still?
No! through the length and breadth of the land,
Let brothers go forward, hand in hand;
Give food to the famished, the fainting sustain;
Seek to strengthen the tempted, alleviate pain;
We dare not live to ourselves alone,
While there's aught to be done, we are not our own.

[American Odd Fellow.

LOCAL INTELLIGENCE.

Jealousy and Murder in the Fourth District.—Sunday evening about two o'clock the Garden District was shocked by one of the most horrible and deliberate murders that has been recorded for years, which appears to have resulted from a combination of insanity and jealousy. Some years ago John Clancy, keeper of a grocery at the corner of Adele and Rousseau streets, married, and having lived tolerably pleasantly with his spouse for two years or so she died. During the time a sister of the wife had been living in the family. After the death of his wife Clancy took up with the sister Ann, and without the formality of a marriage ceremony the two dwelt together until a short time ago, when legal ceremonies made the two one flesh. After this Ann had been arrested several times on a charge of insanity, and Special Officer Dumas informs us that on the occasion of her last incarceration she threatened, in a frenzy, to kill her husband as certain as life was spared her to accomplish the deed. Dumas hastened to inform Clancy of the intention of the wife, but he apparently took no heed of the warning, and even made light of the matter. On the date of her former arrest she wished to swear to an affidavit that her husband had murdered her three different times, and she was fearful that the fourth was pending. Ann was sent to the Insane Asylum for the third or fourth time, but the husband again got her released and took her home. At the time mentioned he was lying asleep on his bed, when the woman quietly and stealthily approached him, and with a grocery cheese-knife ten inches long deliberately forced the huge blade into his left side, between the ribs, the blade severing a lung, and of course awakening him to a terrible reality. He expired at ten o'clock last night, but previous to his death he informed those present of the woeful transaction as well as he could, and made his will, leaving considerable available property. Mr. Dumas found in the house several thousand dollars, which were properly disposed of, and the Coroner held an inquest. Soon after Clancy received his fatal wound he signified a wish to make his will, and Judge Jackson being sent for was present as a witness, also Mr. L. Von Zinken. The poor man was too near eternity to sign his name to his last testament. Officers Corbett and Willis arrested the woman and took her to the Fourth District stationhouse, where we conversed with her, and, in our judgment, she is not as insane as she pretends. Her maiden name was Fox. Only last week she was under arrest, but at the solicitation of her husband was released, he vouching in her behalf that he would be responsible for any crime she might commit, and now the voucher is in another world, sent there by the hand that he claimed as his own. Deceased related all the facts to Coroner Roche, as nearly as he could, and the verdict is made in accordance with those statements. The woman's tone of conversation in prison is a medley of love, jealousy, hatred, insanity, and of wrongs suffered and endured. There is nothing particularly noticeable in her personal appearance, more than that she has a lean and hungry look, not in the least crazed. She was remanded to prison by Recorder Jackson, and will be arraigned during the present week.

A Republican Fourth of July Festival at Carrollton.—The Fourth of July was duly celebrated near Carrollton by about 5000 people of both sexes and all ages, in accordance with previous arrangements.

About two o'clock the exercises commenced. Major McKay was called to the Chair, and the following gentlemen were named as Vice Presidents: Messrs. H. Gibbs, R. G. Gardiner, Mr. Evans, C. Perkins, C. Stamps, Sandy Packer. Mr. Meyllan was appointed Secretary.

After an opening prayer by Rev. Mr. Taylor, Mr. R. G. Gardiner read the Declaration of Independence, and then Captain Chapman was called upon for a speech in reply to the Declaration, which he delivered most happily and effectively, although under great disadvantage, for hardly had he got through his exordium before the rain began, and continued its pitiless pelting during his whole address, of which it is impossible in our limited space to give more than a synopsis.

Mr. Chapman said, in substance:

Ninety-two years ago this day there was assembled in a distant city a body of grave, wise men, delegates from the thirteen oppressed colonies about to throw off the galling yoke of Great Britain. The result of their deliberations was the Declaration of Independence just read. Seven years of bitter war and intense suffering followed before the purposes set forth in that Declaration were attained. Then the national heart rejoiced, for liberty was at last won, and all loss and suffering were forgotten in the proud acquisition. And yet how incomplete it was; how many of God's image remained in a bondage more galling than Great Britain ever inflicted upon her white subjects! The "Land of the free and the home of the brave!" What a cruel mockery to thousands in our land who were entitled equally with their white fellow men to "liberty and the pursuit of happiness."

To-day we can truly take our stand upon the principles of that glorious Declaration that all men are created free and equal. For another war of independence shorter indeed, but infinitely more destructive than the first, has freed the remainder of the nation, and cast off the shackles of the slave. But the work is not yet complete, and we can not yet afford to rest. We must secure what we have won. And to do this we must meet our foes on every issue. We must emulate the spirit of '76. We must remember what the fathers of the republic were willing to suffer for liberty—and the mothers, too, sharing equally in all the hardships necessary to gain the blessed end.

Go and do likewise, for your slavery is infinitely more galling: it was personal, not political servitude. The only battle you have now to fight is at the ballot-box, and when you think how Washington, with his suffering troops, ill-paid, ragged, and starved, leaving bloody tracks in the snow as they marched, still struggled on with unalterable determination, surely you will not falter in your easy duty.

The captain concluded by exhorting every man within the sound of his voice to act as if the future welfare of the country depended on him alone.

During Captain Chapman's address an incident occurred of a startling character. A man named Banks, noted in the neighborhood as a specimen of that curious hybrid, a "Democratic nigger," came on the ground, having evidently been sent to make a disturbance, and after vainly attempting to get into a difficulty, discharged his revolver in the midst of the crowd of colored people. He was at once arrested, and, as might be expected, there was great excitement at the atrocious act. Considering the danger to which all, including women and children, were exposed by this act, it was admirable to see how colored men restrained their tempers and forbore to inflict that punishment which Banks would certainly have received upon less provocation in any collection of white men.

After Captain Chapman's speech, the rain continuing, as many as could adjourned into a colored church in the vicinity, where addresses were delivered by Messrs. G. M. Wickliffe, H. C. Dibble, J. W. Menard, Major Allison, and C. Perkins. The speech of the last named gentleman was a model specimen of native eloquence, and the manner in which he depicted the former state of the colored man compared with his present condition was very happy. Most thrilling was the effect when describing an act of peculiar atrocity committed by an overseer of which he was witness. The speaker contrasting the scene of suffering with the present joyous occasion, called out, "Are you ready now at all times to thank God for mercies?"

After the formal ceremonies were concluded, the rain having ceased, short addresses were made by Messrs. Jackson, of Winn, Read, of Jackson, and Raymond, of Jefferson parish. During these addresses the young people dispersed over the wide extent of ground, and gamboled and frolicked to their full content.

Case for or of the Dark Ages.—The following singular statement was given as testimony in a civil court last winter, and as the case fell through there it was taken to the Fourth District Recorder's Court, where it is now pending. We are of the belief that the half has not yet been divulged, but this is sufficient for the present. When the reader has finished, he will lament with us that the fool killer either has not been this way for a long time, or has lost much of his ancient acuteness:

Frederika Kern, formerly Widow Rub, now wife of Charles Klar, residing on Fourth street, in the Fourth District, city of New Orleans, who, being duly sworn, deposed and said that one Frances Willis, alias ——, about the year 1862, obtained the confidence of deponent by her artfully representing herself as a pious woman, in direct converse with the Holy Ghost, and as showing the path to eternal salvation and to heaven; that deponent sometime after this, confiding in said Frances Willis, purchased in the cemetery No. 1, on Washington street, and contracted at the same time with the then sexton, Simpson, to erect a family tomb thereon for deponent, wherein afterward she caused to be deposited the remains of John Rub, her deceased husband, of Peter Rub, her son, and those of the deceased children of her daughter, wife of Dr. Kathman; that in part payment deponent gave said sexton a vault which she owned in said cemetery and whence she removed the remains of Rub to the new tomb; she further paid after effecting the contract to the sexton, Simpson, $300 in cash, with the bargain that at the completion of the tomb the balance of $260 should be paid. The price of the two lots (Nos. 267 and 268), with the tomb erected thereon, amounted to $600, and the vault given in payment was valued at $40. That when said balance became due your petitioner was very sick, and fully reposing confidence in the integrity of the before mentioned Frances Willis and in Mrs. Leidinger, sister of deponent, now deceased, she intrusted to said parties the sum of $260 to be paid to Simpson, the sexton aforesaid, to extinguish the debt incurred by the purchase of the lots aforesaid and for the tomb thereon.

That shortly after the said Frances Willis, who at that time had full control over deponent's mind, seriously informed deponent that it was the will of the Divine Spirit that the remains of a deceased husband of said Willis should be deposited in the tomb aforesaid, and thus obtained deponent's consent thereto.

That at the death of Peter Rub, deponent's son, which occurred November 8, 1863, the said Frances Willis by her art persuaded deponent that the Divine Spirit commanded her to hand over to her a gold watch of the estate of said deceased, to be for a young son of said Willis, who she said is predestined to become a great prophet, and thus said Frances Willis obtained said watch.

That in July, 1866, Mrs. Leidinger, on her death bed, knowing that she was about to die, to atone for her sins, openly confessed that Frances Willis and herself had committed gross frauds on deponent in regard to some property whereon deponent resides, and about the lots and tomb aforesaid, and commanded and exhorted her descendants not to attempt to take any advantage of the fraud, or to claim any ownership in the lots and tomb aforesaid, but to have the title corrected.

That in May, 1868, deponent with her husband examined the title-book of Cemetery No. 1 of Washington street and found that the lots and tomb aforesaid stand in the name of Frances Willis and Mrs. Leidinger as owners, and that by the fraud of said Frances Willis and the penitent deceased Leidinger, and that said Frances Willis persists in her fraud to the prejudice of deponent, who therefore charges said Frances Willis with embezzlement and with obtaining property under false pretenses, and with being accessory to the embezzlement and fraud confessed by the penitent Mrs. Leidinger aforesaid.

It is asserted that much other property, real estate, was obtained through the same spirit. Accused is a queer looking body, and if she can not call spirits from the vasty deep, can do some strange financiering.

The Restaurant Homicide.—Ex-Coroner Bradford has filed an affidavit against Quintero for killing Colonel Manney in Victor's Canal street restaurant on the twenty-fifth ultimo; also charging Colonel Luckett as accessory. Of the why and wherefore we have nothing to say. Colonel Luckett is on bond of $2000 to appear when wanted.

LATEST BY TELEGRAPH.

WASHINGTON, July 3.—The Finance Committee of the Senate have stricken from the tax bill the section taxing banks and bankers.

The President has to-day issued the following proclamation of general amnesty to the participators in the rebellion:

A PROCLAMATION

By the President of the United States:

WHEREAS, In the month of July, Anno Domini 1861, in accepting the condition of civil war which was brought about by insurrection and rebellion in several of the States which constitute the United States, the two Houses of Congress did solemnly declare that the war was not waged on the part of the government in any spirit of oppression, nor for any purpose of conquest or subjugation, nor for any purpose of overthrowing or interfering with the rights or established institutions of the States, but only to defend and maintain the supremacy of the Constitution of the United States, and to preserve the Union with all the dignity, equality, and rights of the several States unimpaired, and that so soon as these objects should be accomplished the war on the part of the government should cease; and,

Whereas, The President of the United States has heretofore in the spirit of that declaration and with the view of securing for it ultimate and complete effect set forth several proclamations offering amnesty and pardon to persons who had been or were concerned in the aforesaid rebellion, which proclamations, however, were attended with prudential reservations and exceptions then deemed necessary and proper, and which proclamations were respectively issued on the eighth day of December, 1863, on the twenty sixth day of March, 1864, on the twenty-ninth day of March, 1865, and on the seventh day of September, 1867; and

Whereas, The said lamentable civil war has long since altogether ceased with an acknowledgment by all the States of the supremacy of the federal constitution and the government thereunder, and there no longer exist any reasonable grounds to apprehend a renewal of the said civil war, or any foreign interference, or any unlawful resistance by any portion of the States to the people of any of the States to the constitution and laws of the United States; and

Whereas, It is desirable to reduce the standing army and to bring to a speedy termination military occupation, martial law, military tribunals, abridgment of the freedom of speech and of the press, suspension of the privilege of habeas corpus, and the right of trial by jury, such encroachments upon our free institutions in times of peace being dangerous to public liberty, incompatible with the individual rights of the citizen, contrary to the genius and spirit of our republican form of government, and exhaustive of the national resources; and,

Whereas, It is believed that amnesty and pardon will tend to secure a complete and universal establishment and prevalence of municipal law and order in conformity with the Constitution of the United States, and to remove all approaches or presumptions of a retaliatory or vindictive policy on the part of the government, attended by unnecessary disqualification, pains, penalties, confiscations, and disfranchisements, and on the contrary to promote and procure complete fraternal reconciliation among the whole people, with due submission to the Constitution and laws:

Now, therefore, be it known that I, Andrew Johnson, President of the United States, do, by virtue of the Constitution and in the name of the people of the United States, hereby proclaim and declare unconditionally and without reservation, to all and to any person who directly or indirectly participated in the late insurrection or rebellion, excepting such person or persons as may be under presentment or indictment in any court of the United States having competent jurisdiction upon a charge of treason or other felony, a full pardon and amnesty for the offenses of treason against the United States or of adhering to their enemies during the late civil war, with restoration of all rights of property except as to the slaves and except as to any property of which any person may have been legally divested under the laws of the United States.

In testimony whereof I have signed these presents with my hand and have caused the seal of the United States to be hereunto affixed.

Done at the city of Washington, the fourth day of July, in the year of our Lord, 1868, and of the independence of the United States of America the ninety-third year.

ANDREW JOHNSON.

By the President:
WM. H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

WASHINGTON, July 3.—Senate—A memorial was presented asking $15,000 for deepening St. John's river in Florida.

The tax bill was reported and made the special order for Monday and until completed.

A resolution to adjourn for the Fourth was adopted, ten Radicals voting nay.

Adjourned.

House—Democratic seats vacant.

The House considered appropriations in Committee of the Whole, and again rejected the amendment allowing clerks extra compensation; and after passing a bill furnishing the militia of each Congressional District with two thousand rifles and two batteries of artillery, adjourned to Monday.

WASHINGTON, July 4.—The Southern States are admitted to full rights in the National Democratic Convention.

The following seems well authenticated: Mr. Chase has written to John J. Cisco, of New York, in reply to certain queries concerning the platform which would be acceptable to him. In this letter Mr. Chase takes the ground that the subject of universal suffrage should be left where in his opinion the Constitution of the United States leaves it, and that the general government has nothing to do with it.

He is in favor of universal amnesty, and the removal of all disabilities on account of participation in the late rebellion, and believes it essentially necessary to the administration of good government in the late rebellious States, and to the full and satisfactory re-establishment of the practical relations of these States with the other States of the Union.

He strongly condemns military governments in time of peace as incompatible with the principles of civil liberty, and believes that a free people will never sanction them. He desires that taxes should be as light as possible, and that they should be so distributed as to bear upon the rich rather than on the poor.

He holds that while all the national obligations should be honestly fulfilled, no privileges should be granted to any classes of individuals or corporations.

Mr. Chase has always believed and now believes in the fundamental doctrine of Democracy, and this paragraph very faithfully defines his present position.

WASHINGTON, July 6.—The Committee on Commerce was directed to inquire into the expediency of repealing the law requiring locked safety valves on steamers, and a bill forbidding bridges over the Ohio being less than fifty feet above high water and five hundred feet span, excepting the bridge at Louisville.

North Carolina's adoption of the fourteenth article, and the credentials of her representatives were referred to the proper committee, and the representatives, named French, Dewees, and Jones sworn in. Adjourned.

Senate—After unimportant business, considered the tax bill to adjournment, and the amendments of the Finance Committee adopted about half through.

Senate ordered a night session and adjourned.

WASHINGTON, July 6.—The preamble of the Soldiers' and Sailors' Convention resolutions, alluding to the doings of Congress, contains this sentence: "It has placed a stigma upon the virtue and honor of the Union soldiers by imposing upon those who composed the late Confederate armies since their surrender conditions of degradation, in violation of the letter and spirit of the capitulation when a brave though misguided foe laid down their arms."

The following is Mr. Chase's letter: "Please say to your friend that he is entirely right as to my views of suffrage and State rights. What I desire for the South is peace and prosperity, with all disfranchisements and disabilities removed and all rights restored to all citizens, and it is my opinion that that end will be insured by according suffrage to all citizens. But the practical disposition of suffrage as well as all other domestic questions is for the people of the States themselves, not for outsiders. On this question I adhere to my old States rights doctrine," etc.

Judge Chase's friends are still confident. A strong movement in his behalf will be made on the tenth or eleventh ballot.

Mr. Hendricks is regarded as the only probable man among those now in nomination.

Politicians consider the contest between Messrs. Hendricks and Chase.

Warrants drawn on the treasury for the month of June amounted to $32,000,000.

The Foreign Committee reported adversely on Collector Smythe's nomination as Minister to Austria.

The Congressional Republican Committee have advices that the Democrats have carried Mississippi. Their correspondents charge frauds.

WASHINGTON, July 7.—Senate—After unimportant business the tax bill was resumed.

House—Mr. Stevens introduced impeachment articles, and asked for a committee. Consideration was postponed until Monday.

Adjourned.

NEW YORK, July 3.—The papers are full of speculations, and the streets are full of rumors, but there is no real change in the situation.

Pendleton's friends sanguine.

The hotels are swarming with politicians. Caucusing is active. The principal men now spoken of are Hendricks and Seymour.

Pendleton stock is declining. There is a general feeling, however, not loudly expressive that the nomination of Chase is necessary to save the party from defeat. The Southern delegates say they can carry their States by the time the election comes off, in spite of the general apprehension that the South will go for Grant.

All the Southern delegates meet to night to arrange concert of action.

A portion of the Southern and Eastern delegates met to-day to compare notes. Nothing definite was decided upon.

NEW YORK, July 4.—The crowds in the vicinity of Tammany Hall render the streets almost impassable. Over 50,000 applications have been made for admission to the convention. The Pendleton forces preserve their enthusiasm and confidence. The Johnson men are few in number, but very determined. General Hancock's supporters seem in bad temper. Rumors of Mr. Chase's letter bearing strongly on States rights excite attention.

The rules of the Democratic Convention of 1864 were adopted. The Territories are excluded from a voice in the convention.

The Committees on Resolutions and Permanent Organization were adopted, when, after reading the Declaration of Independence, the convention adjourned until Monday.

The weather is intensely hot.

General McClernand, of Illinois, temporary Chairman of the Soldiers' and Sailors' Convention, welcomed all true soldiers North and South. A resolution was proposed declaring the convention auxiliary to the National Democratic Convention. General W. B. Franklin, of Connecticut, was nominated for permanent President of the convention.

NEW YORK, July 4.—New Tammany Hall is admirably arranged for the convention, elegantly festooned with large American flags, and decorated with elaborately painted escutcheons of all the States. Accommodations for delegates are ample. Arrangements for the press are excellent, except that the committee in charge persistently refuse admission to accredited messengers to receive reports. Weather intensely hot, but the hall is perfectly ventilated. Among the spectators are many ladies; also Francis P. Blair, Senator Patterson, Ex-Senator Bayard, and many men prominent in Southern politics before the war.

The hall and galleries are densely crowded, and a great crowd is outside, vainly striving to gain admittance. A strong police force is at the doors and on the streets to keep the road open and preserve good order.

The convention was called to order at twenty minutes past twelve o'clock by August Belmont, chairman of the National Democratic Committee, saying: "The country looks to you, gentlemen, by means of the Democratic organization, to save the country."

Mr. Belmont nominated Hon. Henry S. Palmer, of Wisconsin, temporary chairman. Carried.

WASHINGTON, July 4.—The Navy Department issued orders yesterday in accordance with the eight-hour law. Work commences at seven and closes at four o'clock, with one hour's intermission for dinner.

The certificates of the disabled members in the House have been referred to a committee. Two colored doorkeepers have been elected in the House and one in the Senate.

Governor Holden delivers his inaugural to-morrow.

NEW YORK, July 6.—The police arrangements proved inadequate this morning to keep back the surging crowd which blocked up the avenue of approach to Tammany Hall, and delegates had great difficulty in entering.

At half-past ten the delegates generally were in their seats.

At a quarter before eleven the Convention was called to order. Prayer by William Quinn.

Reading of the journals of Saturday was dispensed with.

A delegation from the Working Men's Convention were invited to seats.

The Committee on Permanent Organization reported. For President Hon. Horatio Seymour, of New York, with a Vice-President and Secretary from each State.

They recommended the rules of the Democratic Convention of 1864 for the government of this convention.

The report was adopted and the committee discharged.

The Committee on Resolutions asked for permission to report at any time during the session of the convention. Agreed to.

The Chair appointed Bigler of Pennsylvania and Hammond of South Carolina a committee to conduct the permanent President to the chair.

He returned thanks for the honor conferred upon him, and counseled moderation, toleration, and harmony.

He said that most important questions were forced upon the consideration of the convention.

Some of these were forced upon it by resolutions of the late Chicago Convention.

He discussed briefly the Republican platform, and accused that party of violating its own declarations against repudiation and unequal taxation, and then asserted solicitude for soldiers, and soldiers' widows and orphans.

He accused the now dominant party of extravagance in wasting the public moneys, tainting the national credit, extirpating immigration by overburdening labor with taxation, and breaking down constitutional guarantees of Republican liberty.

He denied the assertion of the Republican Convention that the principles of the declaration of independence are now sacred on every inch of American soil, for in ten States of the Union military power suppresses civil law.

NEW YORK, July 7.—Convention.—The first ballot: Johnson—Alabama, 8; Florida, 3; Georgia, 9; Maryland, 2½; Michigan, 8; Missouri, ½; South Carolina, 6; Tennessee, 10; Texas, 6; Virginia, 10.

Pendleton—Maine, 4; Missouri, 5; Nebraska, 3; New Hampshire, 2; North Carolina, 9; Ohio, 21; Oregon, 3; West Virginia, 5.

Hancock—Louisiana, 7; Maine, 4½; Massachusetts, 11; Mississippi, 7; Missouri, 2½; New Hampshire, 2. The rest of the votes scattering, Arkansas voting for English.

The sixth ballot resulted: Pendleton, 122½; Parker, 13; Church, 33; Packer, 27; President Johnson, 21; Doolittle, 12; Hendricks, 30; Blair, 5.

NEW YORK, July 7.—The Convention adjourned at three o'clock until to-morrow morning, after balloting six times, Pendleton rising gradually from 105 on the first ballot to 122½ on the last.

North Carolina twice voted for Seymour, causing great cheering, but that gentleman peremptorily declined to permit the use of his name.

On the second ballot Texas changed from A. Johnson to Hancock and Virginia to Blair. On the third Virginia went for Pendleton. On the fifth Florida changed from Hancock to Doolittle, Michigan from Reverdy Johnson to Hendricks, North Carolina gave Hancock six and a half and Pendleton two and a half; South Carolina gave one for Adams, Georgia nine for Blair, Arkansas three for Pendleton.

The Indiana, Pennsylvania, and New York delegations each held consultation pending the third and last ballots, but there was no change in their action. It is believed that Pendleton has reached his full strength and will decline to-morrow.

Mr. Chase's name was not once mentioned to-day.

The following is the result of the six ballots:

|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| English | 16 | 12½ | 7½ | 7½ | 7 | 6 |
| Hancock | 33½ | 45 | 45½ | 43½ | 46 | 47 |
| Pendleton | 105 | 99½ | 119½ | 118½ | 109 | 122½ |
| Parker | 13 | 15 | 13 | 13 | 13 | 13 |
| Church | 33 | 33 | 33 | 33 | 33 | 33 |
| Packer | 16 | 26 | 26 | 26 | 27 | 27 |
| A. Johnson | 65 | 52 | 34½ | 32 | 24 | 21 |
| Doolittle | 13 | 12½ | 12 | 12 | 15 | 12 |
| R. Johnson | 8½ | 8 | 11 | 8 | 9½ | 30 |
| Hendricks | 2½ | 2 | 9½ | 11½ | 19½ | 5 |
| Blair | ½ | 10½ | 4 | 2 | 13½ | 0 |
| Ewing | 0 | 1½ | 1 | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Seymour | 0 | 0 | 0 | 9 | 0 | 0 |

The balloting during the day was merely skirmishing, and at the adjournment there was no indication of the final result. The convention meets at 10 A. M. to-morrow.

Mr. Seymour received nine votes on the third ballot, when he again positively declined. No mention of Chase has yet been made. Virginia voted for Pendleton on the third ballot. (Cheers.) On the fourth ballot Florida changed from Hancock to Doolittle. North Carolina gave Pendleton 2½, and Arkansas 3. Georgia voted for Blair.

NEW YORK, July 7.—Peter Cagger and John T. Devlin were thrown from a carriage to-day. Mr. Cagger was killed and Mr. Devlin seriously hurt.

Convention.—Resolutions from Hon Alexander H. Stevens were read, and referred. The name of Mr. Stevens was cheered.

The platform was unanimously adopted, amid immense cheering. Slavery and secession are regarded as dead issues; bonds payable in lawful money unless the face calls for coin; equal taxation on all property, including coin; one currency for all; economy; reduction of the army and navy; the abolition of the Freedmen's Bureau, and of inquisitorial modes for collecting the revenue; tariff for revenue; subordination of military to civil authority; restoration of all the States; amnesty for all political offenses, including the restoration of suffrage in all the States; the control of suffrage belongs exclusively to each State—Congress has usurped it in violation of the Constitution.

The convention then proceeded to nominations. The first ballot Pendleton received 105 votes, the Southerners nearly all voting for Johnson. Second ballot, Pendleton 99½, Packer 26, Johnson 52, others scattering.

JACKSON, July 3.—The committee of five appointed by the late convention have for several days been engaged eliciting testimony from negroes to prove fraudulent dealings in the late election. They sat with closed doors. To-day a number of new witnesses were introduced, and a delegation of citizens, consisting of Judge Sharkey, Judge Potter, Joshua Green, General Wharton, and Colonel Jones S. Hamilton called upon the committee and asked to hear testimony, which was refused. High words ensued, and the drawing of a pistol by an attache of the committee. The whole party were arrested and taken before the City Court; and while the trial was in progress a military order suspended civil proceedings, and the prisoners were ordered to report to the military mayor to-morrow.

The committee of five under an ordinance of the Convention appointed three commissioners in each county to supervise elections, who were to be paid six dollars per diem each. The accounts are being presented, and General McDowell orders the State Auditor to allow no such accounts, as the reconstruction fund will pay election expenses.

JACKSON, Miss., July 6.—Returns from all the counties but two give a Democratic majority of 11,400.

There have been fine rains for three days past, and the crop prospect is excellent.

ATLANTA, July 3.—In compliance with telegraphic orders from General Grant, General Meade issues orders appointing Mr. Bullock Governor of Georgia, vice General Ruger, removed, to take effect to-morrow on the assembling of the Legislature. Also William H. Smith Governor of Alabama, vice Patton, removed; and A. J. Applegate Lieutenant Governor, to take effect July 12.

ATLANTA, July 4.—By order of General Meade, and proclamation of the Governor elect, the Senate assembled in the City Hall at 12 M. to-day, and was called to order by Governor Bullock, who ascended the stand accompanied by General Meade, Judge Erskine, and J. R. Parrott. General Meade's order, the proclamation of the Governor elect, and the omnibus bill were read, when the roll was called, A. A. Bradley, a colored man, heading the list.

The oath was administered by Judge Erskine. Benjamin Conly, of Augusta, was elected President, and A. E. Marshall, of Atlanta, Secretary of the Senate.

After organization of the Senate the Governor elect, accompanied by General Meade, Judges Erskine and Parrott, proceeded to the hall of the House of Representatives, when the same routine was gone through with.

E. L. McWhorter, of Greene county, was elected Speaker. The house adjourned till Monday.

The city is crowded with strangers. The day passed off quietly. The testimony for the prosecution in the case of the Columbus prisoners closed to day.

ATLANTA, July 6.—The Senate and House finished organization to-day. In the Senate all the officers are Republican. In the House M. A. Harden, Clerk, and Jesse Oster, Messenger, are Democrats. Eleven new members were sworn in, giving the Democrats a majority. Messrs. Harris, Spear, and Chandler were appointed a committee to wait on Governor Bullock, to inform him that both Houses were organized, and ready to receive messages, and adjourned.

In the election of Speaker of the House yesterday McWhorter (Republican) received seventy-six votes and Price (Democrat) seventy-four, Price voting for McWhorter under the impression that the latter had cast his vote for Price. On learning the contrary, Price asked permission to withdraw his vote for McWhorter, which was granted by the Governor, who, however, decided McWhorter elected.

The defense for the Columbus prisoners commenced to-day. The main points are to prove alibis.

ATLANTA, July 7.—In the Senate to-day the President requested all unqualified members to come forward and take the prescribed oath.

Mr. Chandler objected to the administration of the oath by the President as unconstitutional, and likely to produce trouble in the future.

The objection was sustained, and the oath administered by Justice Dunning.

Mr. Minally offered a resolution requesting the adjournment of the special committee to investigate the case of A. Alforio Bradley, a negro, charged with felony. After considerable discussion the resolution passed.

In the House three new members were sworn in.

Both houses are fully organized, and a joint committee appointed to wait on Governor Bullock to inform him that the Legislature was ready to receive any communication he may wish to make.

The trial of the Columbus prisoners is still progressing. The testimony in their behalf shows that Duke was forty miles from Columbus on the night of the murder.

HAVANA, July 7.—The cholera is decreasing. Cases are mild.

Mexican advices represent the crops to be a failure. A famine is apprehended.

BOARD OF REGISTRATION.

STATE OF LOUISIANA, June 30, 1868.

At a regular meeting of the Board held on Tuesday, June 30, 1868, the following resolution was adopted:

Resolved, That the time for the final settlement of the Convention taxes by the Tax Collectors and Sheriffs throughout the State with the Auditor of Public Accounts be and is hereby extended to the first day of August, 1868.

By virtue of the foregoing resolution I hereby notify all Tax Collectors and Sheriffs throughout the State to continue to collect the Convention tax up to the first day of August, 1868. The Tax Collectors and Sheriffs are further instructed that they will be held responsible for a rigid enforcement of the ordinance adopted by the Convention January 4, 1868 (which is hereinafter published for the information of all concerned), exacting a penalty for non-payment of said tax.

The Convention remitted all penalties up to the twentieth day of March, 1868, and from that time the penalty will be exacted in all the parishes where the tax rolls were ready at that date, and thirty days after the tax rolls were completed in the other parishes the penalty will be exacted.

The attention of Tax Collectors is also called to the fact that the Commanding General refuses to allow the courts to grant injunctions restraining them from selling the property of delinquents to meet the payment of the Convention tax. The Tax Collectors will be held responsible by the Auditor in his settlement with them for the full amount of the penalty.

S. B. PACKARD, Chairman.

R. C. RICHARDSON, Secretary.

ORDINANCE.

SECTION 1. Be it ordained by the Constitutional Convention of the State of Louisiana, That the Sheriffs and Tax Collectors of the State, except of the city of New Orleans, Orleans Right Bank, and the parish of Jefferson, shall give notice to the taxpayers of their respective parishes to pay the tax of one mill per cent levied by ordinance of the twenty-fourth December, 1867, by this Convention; and thirty days after service of said notice those who shall not have paid the tax due by them shall be considered in default, and the Sheriffs and Tax Collectors shall exact an additional tax upon persons such of twenty-five per cent upon the sum due by them for the first default, and an additional tax of ten per cent to be computed on the original tax for every subsequent thirty days said persons shall continue to be in default, up to the date of the final settlement.

SEC. 2. Be it further ordained, That the Sheriffs and Tax Collectors of the city of New Orleans, Orleans right bank, and parish of Jefferson shall, by public notice in one newspaper published in their parish, call upon all taxpayers to pay the tax levied by the ordinance of December twenty four above mentioned, and all persons who shall not have paid the amounts due by them on account of said tax ten days after the publication of the above required notice shall pay an additional tax of twenty five per cent on the original tax, and an additional tax of two and a half per cent on the original tax of one mill per cent for every subsequent ten days said persons shall be in default.

SEC. 3. Be it further ordained, etc., That immediately after the taxpayers shall have been put in default by the expiration of the thirty or ten days, as the case may be, given in the notice required by the first and second sections of this ordinance, the Sheriffs and Tax Collectors throughout the State shall proceed to seize and sell, after ten days notice, property of the delinquent taxpayers, movable or immovable, sufficient to pay the original tax, all additional taxes herein levied, and costs.

Adopted in Convention at the city of New Orleans, this fourth day of January, Anno Domini eighteen hundred and sixty-eight.

A NEW GLEE BOOK, THE GREETING.

A collection of Glees, Quartets, Choruses, Part-Songs, etc. By L. O. Emerson, author of "The Jubilate," "Harp of Judah," "Golden Wreath," "Merry Chimes," etc.

The contents of this work are for the most part NEW. A large number of valuable pieces have been contributed by Mr. L. H. Southard, whose name is a sufficient guarantee of their excellence. The marked features of the collection are originality, brilliancy, and variety; and it will be found upon careful examination that there is no glee book now before the public that in every particular will prove so completely satisfactory to musical societies and conventions, conservatories, clubs, and amateur singers. Price $1 38. Mailed post-paid.

Carmina Collegensia:

A Complete Collection of the Songs of the American Colleges, with Pianoforte Accompaniments; to which is added a Compendium of College History, Collected and Edited by H. R. WAITE.

This is the most extensive Collection of Student Songs presented to the public. Every college in the United States having been solicited to contribute to its pages, nearly a thousand songs were received, from which great care was taken to select those most valuable in reference to quality, permanency, and general interest; only such being used as possessed intrinsic merit, or cast light upon some peculiar college custom.

Prices: In cloth, emblematically embossed, neat, and durable, $2 25. Superior edition, on extra paper, full cloth, emblematically embossed, gilt edge, $3.

Mailed, postpaid.

THE GERMANIA LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY, established in 1860, and based upon the most approved principles of Life Insurance security, presents its claims for consideration, believing that its solid foundation already secured by the faithful and efficient management of its officers and Board of Directors will give it the preference above all other similar institutions.

It is purely Mutual, as the net profits are distributed among the parties insured, the interest of the capital stock being only five per cent according to its charter.

It assumed the system of cash payments at the commencement of its existence, and maintained it faithfully until now, and promises the same for the future, thereby securing to policy holders the full amount for which they are insured. The advantage of this system over the half cash and half note system is patent to every careful observer, but will be more fully illustrated by the following statement and table:

If a person of thirty years of age insures his life for the amount of $1000 in one of the credit companies, and pays a premium of $28 30 per year, with a note for half of the premium, then by means of this note and interests thereon the amount will become less and less in the following proportions:

| | |
|---|---|
| After 10 years the $1000 will amount to | $887 44 |
| After 15 years the $1000 will amount to | 795 28 |
| After 20 years the $1000 will amount to | 666 02 |
| After 25 years the $1000 will amount to | 484 73 |
| After 30 years the $1000 will amount to | 230 47 |
| After 33 years the $1000 will amount to | 32 53 |
| After 34 years the $1000 will amount to | Nothing. |

So that after a lapse of 34 years the whole amount will be eaten up, notwithstanding the parties insured paid their money in good faith.

The large dividend of 40 per cent declared last January is evidence of the care and success with which the Managers have conducted the enlarged and rapidly increasing interests of the Company, and vouches for its future brilliant and permanent prosperity.

Parties contemplating an assurance on their lives will do well to examine the status of this Company, every facility for which will be given by the

"COME OVER."

BY LU BILLINGS SPALDING.

"Come over," they whispered, "our shores are shining,"
A beautiful maiden paused to hear:
"O no," she murmured, her bright face glowing,
"I can not come, for life is dear."

"Come over," they pleaded, "for life is fleeting,
"Its buds are folded o'er canker and woe;
O welcome the throb of my pale oars' beating,
And the gleam of my white sails' silver snow."

"I can not come; your calling chills me;
The hidden waters are wild and dark,
And only the weary and broken-hearted
Care to cross in thy shadowy bark."

* * * * * * *

"Come over" they whispered so low and tender,
When the old moon glistened on heath and moor;
And the dew bells wept 'neath their lids of silver,
And wind hands knocked at the bolted door.

Her long hair slid far over the pillow,
Pressed by a cheek like a star beam white,
And a young form lay in her night robe flowing,
And wearily moaned through the long dim night.

"Come over" they whispered so low and tender,
"Ready," she breathed on the shadowy air;
She heard the sigh of the death oars' dripping,

Opelousas District.

Number Eleven.

CORN AND COTTON—GOOD HOTEL—ELECTION FRAUDS—OUTRAGE UPON A PREACHER.

Bayou Bœuf was quite low, and the general complaint was dry weather. Still the corn looked well; in some fields even the fodder had been gathered, and the ears were drying upon the tall stalks. Cotton seems disposed this season to be again King. No worm yet appears, and the prospect is encouraging for a good crop. Usually it is planted with corn, so that the farmer has two strings to his bow.

Washington looks dull. Our friend Esquire Deems has removed: our worthy host Trainor had few mouths to feed; his bed and table were as usual excellent. The colored people are very poor and much discouraged.

It is said the elections were conducted unfairly; many cases of fraud and intimidation were related to me. One man was elected justice who keeps a low doggery, and men generally are in office who have little sympathy with the poor. Upon a false accusation our preacher was thrust into jail, and kept in its miserable cells over the Sabbath. There is no excuse for this outrage. A murderer would have been released on his own recognizance, or straw bail; but in this case involving ten dollars an extravagant security was demanded. The complainant and justice have both earned much infamy by their course.

QUARTERLY CONFERENCE—OPELOUSAS CHURCH. COLORED SCHOOLS—UNION IS STRENGTH.

The business of Conference was transacted in Opelousas. Complaint was made of one member for immorality. Six appointments were reported: two Sunday schools, twenty-five baptisms, four conversions. The meeting was poorly attended. Poverty, discouragement, persecution, have made havoc with the circuit. Two day schools were reported—a small one kept in Washington by the preacher's son, and one in Opelousas with over a hundred scholars, in charge of Mr. E. Bentley. The recitations and deportment in both schools were excellent, and the children are learning rapidly. The last named school is sustained by the Bureau. Arrangements were made for finishing both churches so as to give the schools and people proper accommodations. Major Chase has kindly given aid in completing the churches. In Opelousas we were hospitably cared for by a family of good friends, who made us welcome to the best they had.

In religion as in politics the colored people here lose much by divisions. They have a Baptist and an African meeting, besides our society. This course will work evil just as these political jealousies have done. The Democracy has had a triumph in this parish by the use of all means, but it will probably be short lived. As education and religion advance this party of the past must lose power.

LONG RIDE—ABOUT SUFFRAGE—MURDER IN LAFAYRTTE—GENERAL BUCHANAN.

It was far from pleasant to ride in an open sulky these three hundred and fifty miles, for although the roads were in good condition, the heat and dust were terrible. It was, however, encouraging to see the fields of corn, cotton, and cane everywhere giving promise of rich harvests.

The feeling among the people seemed to be feverish; threats are muttered by violent men against the freedmen for voting contrary to the counsel and commands of the planters; and a sense of wrong is felt by both. Many Southerners resolve deliberately not to abide by the decision of the war, or submit to impartial suffrage. Outrages are committed everywhere, which only stringent legislation wisely enforced will check. Cool heads are needed now, and bold hearts. God-fearing, man-loving patriots must guide the ship of State in these troubled waters.

In Lafayette we found that the murderers who had been arrested and tried for so brutally killing and mangling a colored man recently near Vermillionville had been discharged, the jury refusing to convict. Strange to say, when the facts were represented to General Buchanan, and he was asked to give them a military trial, his reply was that "a man could not be tried a second time for his life on the same complaint." The inference is that an assault or theft would be investigated by him, but murderers might go unpunished.

Letters on Temperance.

BY FREDERICK K. HYDE.

These are absolute duties. Not only instruct by precept but by example. Example is the most influential. Man from his mother's breast is an imitative being. If you be immoral, in vain may you preach up morality. If the tavern or grogshop be your rendezvous, and the intoxicating bowl your delight, in vain may you exhort to sobriety. Extol virtue and temperance, expose vice and intemperance; the former two are calculated to promote esteem and peace of mind, the two latter lead down to disgrace and misery. Early accustom them to industry. Industry is a most formidable adversary to those things which are most baneful to society. Idleness and intemperance are the grand sources of evil. While in their tenderness, give their minds a proper inclination. Says Pope: "Just as the twig is bent the tree is inclined;" and the wise king of Israel says: "Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it."

Those things if attended to at the proper period of life will produce effects beneficial to your posterity, to yourselves and to the community of which you form a part. They would produce another Saturnian age—days still more auspicious than those we now see. Then there would be fewer ambitious demagogues to separate the Union, and no salaried judges to utter in the temple of justice that "negroes have no rights that white men are bound to respect." The goddess Astrea would assume a more extensive reign, and her divinity be more universally adored. The number of bullies, thieves, and cut-throats would be diminished, and peace and plenty smile in every family.

Parents, I conjure you, I importune you, by your love of liberty, by your patriotism, by the respect due to hoary heads, by your happiness, and by the welfare of your children, to teach them to do justice, love mercy, walk humbly, and be temperate.

Young gentlemen, you who are about to embark in a wide and dangerous world to do for yourselves, I now appeal to you. You have acquired but little experimental knowledge. It will be prudence in you to gain instruction from the experience of others. "Happy is he," says one of the ancients, "whom another's dangers make cautious." Experience, we are told, keeps a dear school, and that those who will learn in no other fall completely under the character of fools. Similar causes invariably produce similar effects. How consigned to folly, how blind to their own interest must those be who will not shun the rocks upon which they have seen others made shipwreck. We have long since discovered that intemperance and falsehood in the merchant, the farmer, the mechanic, the editor, the physician, the teacher, the clerk, the laborer, or any other person, are serious injuries, and inimical to prosperity. Then let us avoid these evils. Temperance and punctuality are the mainsprings of business. Then let us be punctual and sober, and consider our promises as sacred. Dr. Blair says diligence, industry, and the proper improvement of time are material duties of the young. Then let us discharge those duties, young friends. A discharge of them can not fail to place us in easy circumstances, and conciliate the applause of the world. When the aged admonish and warn you of the evils of intemperance, do not slight their counsels or warnings. They intend your good. They will point out the rocks, the shoals, and quicksands, the Scyllas and Charybdes to which you in your passage may be exposed. They will give you notice of the shores where syrens of intemperance, with their captivating songs and smiles will charm you to destruction. Be always willing to learn, and always lay your breasts open to conviction. Happy, happy will it be for you if you can imbibe and cherish an emulation to excel each other in whatsoever is great and good in a virtuous and uniform behavior. Happy for you, indeed, if you will consider your ways and mutually provoke to love temperance and good works. Ladies, a word to you. You are able to accomplish much. Nature has given you extensive influence. She has formed you lovely; your charms are as irresistible as truth itself. You are beloved, adored, and men will form their manners and the whole routine of their conduct to correspond with your taste. Your displeasure is to them insupportable. If you reverence and cherish the virtues, men will be virtuous; they will espouse the cause of those luminous and happy qualities, temperance, justice, prudence, and fortitude. If you frown at intemperance and wickedness, you frown it into nonentity. Since then, ladies, your influence in forming the morals of men is so unbounded, it will be your duty, your indispensable duty, to study the laws of propriety, and enforce them by your approbation. Ladies, ye who are in the bloom of life; but have not entered the silken chains, teach the young men who would fain form the most tender yet indissoluble alliances with you that the temperate and meritorious alone shall receive the reward of your affection, that your smiles are reserved for the virtuous. Let your language and conduct speak such sentiments as these:

There is color in the wine glass,
There is fire beneath its crest;
There are sparkles in the goblet,
Gems of light made manifest;
But the hue is red, infernal,
Hot with food for mad desire;
Every sparkle is a demon,
Gladly leaping in the fire.
There is laughter where they revel
In their wild and drunken glee,
But 'tis cold, and false, and hollow,
Born for woe and misery;
Friendship formed by wine is fleeting,
Love abhors its unchaste light;
Nothing born of wine is lasting,
With its sparkles joy takes flight.

Then abhor the flashing goblet,
Hate and shun its deadly glare;
Read upon its scarlet record
Sin, and woe, and dark despair;
Homes made cold, and oh! how wretched,
None but victims e'er can tell;
Victims who, by thousands dying,
Woe's wild ocean yearly swell.

Minds of might and brilliant genius,
Which with light refulgent shone,
Now are dark, and lost, and shattered,
All their strength of power gone;
Forms of bright majestic beauty,
Which amid our circles trod,
Now beneath the ground are resting,
Lost to us and lost to God.

Then avoid the mocking sirens
Who would charm you to their side;
Think upon the sinking millions
Who are drifting down the tide;
Think of firesides now deserted,
Once so cheerful, bright, and gay—
Think 'twas caused by wine and revel,
And forever turn away.

O then, touch not, taste not—
Join the temperance throng.
Precious moments waste not,
List our temperance song.

When, my female friends, your indignation is established as one of the penalties of intemperance and vice, the world will assume a very different aspect, one that will attest before men and angels your influence in promoting and perpetuating whatsoever is great, good, and excellent.

Sons and Daughters of Temperance, Templars, Rechebites, Samaritans, editors, divines, mechanics, merchants, and friends of the cause of temperance, arouse from the ignoble supineness which encompasses you, awake from your lethargic state, cast from you that unworthy apathy which seems to make you indifferent to the fate of your fellow man. Arouse, awake, shake off the shackles of indolence, and once more march to battle against this monster intemperance. O friends of man! rest not till you have done all that may be done to save those around you from these very antechambers of death and vestibules to hell, and earth and heaven, time and eternity, mothers and daughters and wives and sisters shall join to bless you for it.

I say God speed any righteous power that seeks to battle with this great fiend-like foe, and speed, too, the happy day when the unholy traffic itself shall be swept from the land, and the nation shall be free from its curse.

It is to us that the subject now appeals. Let us give heed to the appeal and answer it, with a heart, mind, and hand single to the welfare of the land we love best, remembering how that welfare will conduce to the benefit of all human life.

But, Mr. Editor, I am wearying your patience; indulge me a few moments, and I shall finish. From what has been written let our minds be deeply and sensibly impressed concerning our duty in this matter. That we may be happy let us be temperate and virtuous; that we may be wise, let us be studious; that we may be opulent, let us be industrious and economical; and, finally, that we may experience the generosity of heaven let us repose an unshaken and religious confidence in that God who is awful in justice, but amiable in goodness. I add no more.

AN INTERESTING OCCASION

Presentation of Plate to Hon. Geo. W. Frost, of the Union Pacific Railway, by the Rocky Mountain Excursionists, Representing the late Methodist General Conference.

[From the Chicago Price Current.]

At the close of the late Methodist General Conference, the Hon. Geo. W. Frost, on the part of Oliver Ames, President, and Dr. Thomas C. Durant, Vice-President, extended an invitation to the delegates to make a trip to Laramie Station, the then extremity of the road; it was accepted by about forty, among whom were bishops, presiding elders, clergymen, editors, and professors of colleges. Several ladies accompanied their husbands. The invitation was peculiarly appropriate, coming through Mr. Frost, who in his earlier years was a traveling preacher in the connection, and who planned the excursion, attending personally to the carrying out of the details, and looking after the comfort and convenience of the party with unwearying assiduity.

The excursion, if we may credit the very vivid pictures of those who participated, was an event of unalloyed pleasure and enjoyment. The excursionists resolved themselves into a "Rocky Mountain Excursion Club," and on their return contributed to the purchase of a service of plate, commissioning their treasurer George S. Bowen, Esq. (who by special invitation was one of the party), to procure the best that money could buy, for presentation to Mr. Frost.

The presentation occurred at the residence of Mr. Bowen, 125 Michigan avenue, on Friday evening of last week. The service consisted of ten pieces of solid silver, made from Nevada ore by the Northwestern Silverware Manufacturing company of this city.

The presentation was made by Rev. Arthur Edwards, of the Northwestern Christian Advocate. The inscription on the plate is as follows:

"Presented to Hon. George W. Frost, from the Rocky Mountain Club, June 2-9, 1868."

Mr Edwards' remarks were as follows:

Hon. Geo. W. Frost: Before a rod of the Pacific railroad was realized, some poor fellow, who had, therefore, to foot it out to Nevada, found there a few choice nuggets of silver. Then Chicago's deft handiwork shaped the Nevada nuggets into these graceful outlines, and thus are associated the place where we stand to-night and that region whither you so kindly and so lately guided the Rocky Mountain excursionists. The fun was ours; these transformed nuggets are yours; and we trust that the happy memories shall be forever our common property.

We do not strictly know how, but you managed to make a half-hundred people perfect happy; and to-night, in the name of that party, I may safely defy you to repeat it, for such unalloyed jubilees never come but once in a long lifetime. We suspect that you had a secret purpose to so gratify us that we could never forget you. Conspirator, you succeeded, and now we faintly strive to imitate your success, for only fire or a burglar may rob you of these remaining nuggets, and bad luck to the thief or match that succeeds. The Pacific railroad deserves our gratitude; it is a marvel of enterprise, and matches the natural advantages through which it passes, if human enterprise can compete where "Nature tries her cannie hand." To celebrate these merits, as well as your personal and vicarious attentions, we, the excursionists, have organized an excursion club, whose great seal ornaments this service. Our trip was change, recreation, and blessed rest, aside from the grandeur to which you introduced us—no form, no stiffness, but a jolly, hearty, innocent good time. To-night we in the same way reciprocate, simply saying that these mementoes but dimly represent not only our gratitude, but love and continued remembrance.

May your one track soon reach Sacramento, and your personal other "Be as the shining light."

Mr. Frost made a brief reply, in which he said that there were certain periods in a life-time when words failed to express the feelings of the heart. He was in that condition now. If the trip to the Rocky Mountains had afforded the party great pleasure, he could truly say it had brought the same to him; in fact, the few days passed with them had been among the sunny ones of his life. He did not take to himself the credit of the excursion. It was the act of the Union Pacific railroad, authorized by their Vice-President and General Manager, Dr. Thomas C. Durant, who was in the city during the session of the General Conference, and who gave it as a compliment to the Conference and the million members represented by them. He regretted that only the officers and reporters could be invited, as another excursion, previously planned, passed over the road at the same time. It gave him great pleasure to know that the trip had been enjoyed by the distinguished gentlemen composing the party and the ladies who accompanied them. He thanked them heartily for the testimonial, and concluded by saying that as his name was engraved on the silver, so should the names of his dear friends of the excursion be enshrined in his memory forever.

Colonel James H. Bowen being called upon responded that it afforded him pleasure to join with others in expressions of the extreme fitness of the presentation to Mr. Frost, who, as the chosen representative of a railroad organization that is being constructed more rapidly, and in its completion will exert a greater influence upon the civilized world than any other ever built, had thoughtfully secured the presence, upon the occasion of the excursion, of talented and honored representatives from every portion of the United States, who had been gathered at the great national convocation of this most powerful and influential body at their fifteenth delegated conference at Chicago. Among the number of eminent divines who became members of this Rocky Mountain Excursion Club there were bishops and clergymen and editors who represented 6,000,000 of the Christian people of this country and prepare an issue of 150,000 copies of religious papers weekly, besides quarterly and monthly journals, and who are not only the religious guides but the teachers of the masses in all parts of the country. In this number also were missionaries from the distant parts of the world, all of whom take special pleasure in contemplating the effect of the construction of this great highway which is to give this country such prominence among the nations of the earth, and which will not only change the channels of trade and commerce, but afford direct and valuable aid in the education and evangelization of the dark and heatherish portion of the Old World. That this large delegation from the people of this and other lands should join in the trip, and learn and comprehend the vastness of the work and the immense benefits that will be opened up with the aid of easy, rapid communication, was an event of high importance; each one returned with enlarged comprehension and views with reference to this great work. They will diffuse their impressions and convictions among the many with whom they will mingle in their several localities. That these gentlemen should value such a trip, and give expression of such devout thankfulness for the safety of the journey of 2500 miles in five days is a most natural circumstance—such a realization they possibly never contemplated for themselves, that they should adopt this mode of expressing their gratitude to Mr. Frost, and through him to the managers of the Union Pacific railway, is eminently appropriate. Mr. Frost had known many of them for a long time personally and as friends and co-workers in the vineyard of the Lord. What wonder, then, that these substantial tokens of their love and high consideration toward him should be thus happily placed in his keeping?

He was confident great good will result from this excursion, and that this glorious nation will have aid in its great work of the next generation through the influence of the voices and pens of these gentlemen in the days that are to follow this festive presentation.

Henry M. Smith, of the hicago Republican, was called upon, and briefly responded. He said he supposed he was very well qualified to talk about the late excursion, precisely because he was not in the party. He had noticed the returned excursionists seemed oppressed with the pleasurable experiences, and lacked powers of description. He paid a neat tribute to the generous courtesy of Mr. Frost, which he said in this instance was very wisely extended to the representatives of a numerous and powerful denomination, who could see and tell of the marvelous agency of national development and progress to be realized in the completion of the Union Pacific railroad. It was a wise design of Providence that before this arch of our empire was thrown across the continent, its key stones were strongly laid in the great commonwealths on the two oceans. Of the future of the Pacific railroad it is not easy to speak too glowingly, and the benefit will fall very largely into the lap of Chicago, opening to us the nearest route from any of the American cities to the great markets of India.

The spacious parlors of Mr. Bowen's residence were filled with a brilliant company of ladies and gentlemen, who, previous to the presentation, inspected the material subject of the object of the gathering; afterwards a generous collation was served, when the company retired, delighted with the entertainment of the evening.

Letter from Texas.

DR. NEWMAN: Our immediate vicinity has recently been greatly revived by very refreshing rains after a month or six weeks drouth, at a time, too, when it very materially improved the crops.

Wheat this year has been an entire failure throughout the State. What remained after the grasshoppers and hard freezes yielded from one to two and a half bushels per acre.

The yield of corn will be average.

POLITICALLY

we are in a fair way to misconstruct. The so-called Conservative party are predetermined to oppose anything the Convention may do. While the true patriots are trying to restore the State to the Federal Union, the "Conservatives," ironically speaking, are organizing in the character of the Ku-Klux Klan to defeat their work. The programme is to intimidate the colored man, and make him afraid to vote, and in the case of failure, to be organized for another revolution on a grander scale than ever before. That the main and principal object of the "Klan" is the inauguration of another rebellion I candidly believe. In conversation with a man, and as I have reason to believe a Ku-Klux, some few weeks ago, I drew from him some facts probably not generally known to the public. He, supposing me to be "all right on the goose," talked very freely. He told me there were 300,000 of the Klan in Europe, besides the organization extending all over the North and South. He gave me to understand the Klan had for its aim two prime objects. First, the overthrow of our republican form of government, and the establishment of a monarchy. Secondly, the re-enslavement of the negro. You have been here, sir, in the South long enough to have perceived that there is a strong monarchial feeling pervading Southern society. It is with shame, as a native-born Southern man, I make this confession; but it is even so. Judge W. S. Oldham, who is now deceased, while Senator to the Confederate Congress at Richmond, told me that nine-tenths of the army officers at Richmond were in favor of making the Confederacy not a republic, but a monarchy. Such, sir, are the men that the Democrats of the North are co-operating with—such are the men that are commiserated and lionized by the Northern Copperhead.

We fear that unless prompt measures are taken the day is not far distant when Republicans will be called upon to contend and fight for their own as well as for the negroes' freedom.

We believe all this to be a Roman Catholic enterprise, of the Jesuitical type. It savors, it smells, it tastes of Rome. You recollect that there was no foreign power so favorable to the Jeff Davis government during the war as the Pope at Rome. Ever since then the people here have been highly faverable to Roman Catholics. They laud their charity, their unity, and their antiquity. Straws show which way the wind blows. Republicanism and Protestantism may be called upon to fight their battles over again.

we are in a fair way to succeed, if your missionaries can be protected from mobs and violence. A preacher will hardly ever be able to understand and appreciate all Paul says about being "persecuted," and "accounted the filth and offscourings of all things," and "dying daily," until he comes South as a missionary of the Methodist Episcopal Church. He will read these passages then with renewed interest, and bless God that he is in such good company.

Some three weeks ago we visited Austin, where we had the good fortune to meet Brothers Fayle and Welch. How refreshing it is to meet brethren who can sympathize with you, after having been thrown out for a long time among people who hate, insult, maltreat you, and impugn your every motive. As Paul was comforted by the "coming of Titus," so was I on that occasion. While here we had the pleasure of making the acquaintance of Revs. Messrs. Tunstell, Asbury, and Brock, the former two members of the Convention. These brethren live in Eastern and Northern Texas, and have identified themselves, I believe, with our Church. This will extend our work in that part of the State, where large white societies can be formed. May the great head of the Church send us many more such.

Yours in love, T. B. F.

Farmers Eat Too Much Pork.

EDITORS RURAL—The Jews were forbidden the use of swine's flesh. I have thought sometimes it was a useless injunction, for the very sight of the animal is enough to disgust the most inveterate meat eater. Our best physicians and physiologists, too, agree that trichinæ, scrofula, erysipelas, putrid sore throat, and a thousand other ills that flesh is heir to are engendered by the use of pork. There is no reason why farmers, who ought to live on the best the land produces, should eat so much salt pork—the most expensive of all meats. The same amount of food given to young calves or sheep, or even poultry, would, in my estimation, yield a greater amount of healthier food than if fed to swine. If a few farmers in each neighborhood during the summer months would club together and fatten and kill in rotation small animals, making an equal distribution of the meat, we farmers' wives would not be obliged to resort so often to the pork barrel. There would be no difficulty in keeping the meat any length of time during the hottest weather if put down according to the following directions. I speak what I know, and testify what I have seen:

Cut the meat in slices for frying. Pack in a jar in layers, seasoning each layer with just salt and pepper enough to make it palatable. Place a piece of writing paper over the top; cover with about one-half inch thickness of salt. Cover the jar closely, and whenever any is wanted it is ready. My neighbors and I have kept veal in this way for several weeks. Try it and see.

Do not Smoke.

We have poisons that accelerate the heart's action as much as nicotine, but none that afterward so depress it. The smoker forms and absorbs a certain amount of that insidious poison. Every smoker is a walking chimney, spreading round the deadly fumes, and compelling all within his reach to swallow them after they have ransacked and cleansed his mouth, and have been loaded with his saliva. His breath becomes so fetid and his clothes so offensive that when a regular consumer of the drug enters a clean house it takes four hours to clear away the abominable effluvia he leaves behind him. In consequence of impeding the circulation of the blood so much it greatly enfeebles a man, of necessity makes him lazy, exposes him to cold, and to congestion of the lungs and brain. Poison is no less deadly because it is invisible and secures its victim by silent steps. Nicotine has frequently produced cancer, both in the tongue and lips, as well as developed it elsewhere. In walking the hospitals of London such cases are daily seen. It not only attacks the membranes, but bones, involving all the tissues. A sailor lately had the toothache. He extracted a drop of nicotine, with which his pipe was saturated, and put it into the affected tooth. It paralyzed the nerve and freed him from pain, but in three months his entire jaw mortified, and was removed by Mr. Paget in St. Bartholomew's Hospital. The Lancet justly remarks:

The case well illustrates a source of danger which is not generally recognized. In the action of smoking the tip of the tongue ordinarily receives this deleterious fluid, and is very often blistered in consequence. Were it not for the tongue one can readily imagine that hollow teeth often would receive this fluid, with what amount of risk the case before us well shows. Yet men will be warned by neither medical counsel nor terrible results; an elevation of their moral principles will alone raise them above the filthy and injurious practice. W. Story, Esq., M. R. C. S., lately wrote to the Lancet to say that he was uniformly annoyed with headache after using coffee bought from a certain grocer. Several of his patients were similarly affected. He went to the shop—found the coffee (which is a powerful absorbent) in close proximity with tobacco—took no more such coffee, and had no more headache. These facts he has wisely turned to advantage in his practice. We have here a caution to merchants, and a warning to purchasers to choose their shop. Butcher-meat, bread, and groceries saturated with carbonic acid gas and nicotine from a dirty pipe can neither be savory nor wholesome.

The New York Tribune says:

With Seymour's friends burning negro orphan asylums, and Blair's friends dispersing the "State governments" of the South, we are promised lively times in the ever election of the Democratic candidates.

There will be preaching every Sabbath at 11 A. M. in Dr. Newman's church, corner of St. Charles and Calliope streets, and social meetings for conference and prayer every Sunday and Thursday evening from eight to nine o'clock in the lecture room. You are invited.

Dr. Newman.—The address of Rev. Dr. Newman, the editor of the Advocate, will, for a few weeks, be Albany, New York, care of S. R. Gray, 38 State street.

North New Orleans District.

Book Notices.

"Harper's Pictorial History of the Rebellion," Nos. 29, 30, 31, and 32; "History of a Mouthful of Bread," by John Mace; "The Servants of the Stomach," by John Mace; "Dead Sea Fruit," by M. E. Braddon; "Love, or Marriage," by William Black.

These works have been laid upon our table by Hull & Dickey, No. 106 Canal street, and we take pleasure in calling public attention to the good reading supplied for these sultry days by these enterprising dealers. The "Pictorial" opens with a fine picture of George H. Pendleton, the defeated candidate at the Democratic convention; Fremont's adieu to the army, and Sherman's preparation for his march to the sea. The siege of Petersburg is well narrated and illustrated. Sherman in Columbia and Charleston, Sheridan at the Five Forks, and the army before Richmond, finishes No. 34. It is a thrilling history. Buy it.

Mrs. Gatty has done us an excellent service in translating Jean Mace's physiological works for the young. Science is familiarized and made attractive to the non-professional public. They are books to travel with. Get this "Mouthful of Bread" and "Servants of the Stomach," and "know thyself."

"Dead Sea Fruit" and "Love, or Marriage" will serve to wile away the hours for those who enjoy light reading. And who does not?

Call at 106 Canal street, where Hull & Dickey will show you how to "empty your purse into your head," as you are advised by old Ben Franklin.

General S. L. Brown.

We have had with us for a few days our valued friend General Brown, the pioneer editor of the New Orleans Republican. He is as full of energy and good works as ever, and sanguine of success in his grand enterprise of internal improvement at Pascagoula.

Rev. W. C. Dandy, of Evanston Station, Rock river Conference, received the degree of D, D. last week from the Ohio Wesleyan University.

Rev. Richard S. Rust, D. D., has been unanimously re-elected corresponding secretary of the Freedman's Aid Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

Rev. T. M. Eddy, late editor of the Northwestern Advocate, goes to Baltimore by request of Bishop Ames as temporary supply for one of our largest churches in that city.

General Buchanan.

General Buchanan can not be supposed to read the Advocate, or indeed any professed Republican journal, else he would have seen in our columns frequent publications of outrages committed all over Louisiana, and reported to us by clergymen of our church, teachers of colored schools, and others, after themselves the victims. But he has known by the careful reports of the worthiest of his subordinates that in many of the parishes protection is not afforded to life and property; payment of wages and fulfillment of contracts are disregarded, and law is not enforced, where the sufferer or victim is a colored or white Republican.

Some of his most worthless agents and inspectors pander to his desire to have it go to the country that his district enjoys peace, and the people are happy; and when more faithful officers tell this Nero to his face the truth, their reward is contumely. His special order No. 154 declared that "Peace and quiet marked the late election." Let Caddo, Claiborne, St. Martin, St. Landry, Bienville, and other parishes declare what "softening influences" were employed to carry the election for the Democracy.

Such words are mockery. His administration has been a series of blunders and crimes. The blunders are his, but they have given impunity to crime; and to-day the blood of hundreds of innocent men, women, and children lie at his door, and the tears of widows and orphans appeal to Heaven against the man who, having been placed here by the United States government to assure them protection and enjoyment of life, liberty, and happiness under the glorious old flag, has pitilessly left them to the tender mercies of the cruel.

It may be that darker days are in store for us, that the fierce threats of violent men will be executed. The Herod of slavery may send out his fierce legions seeking to slay the new born freedom begotten in a travail of the blood of millions, and baptized with the tears of countless widows and orphan children.

The voice of the bereaved ones may again be heard as in Rama of old, but it will not be the hand of our appointed and sworn protector that smites us. Under another flag they fought, and for another cause than that of freedom.

But the play is over, the curtain has fallen, and we leave him and his equally unworthy predecessor to the mercy of Heaven and to the judgment of his countrymen.

Governor Warmoth's Inaugural.

We call attention to this able and comprehensive State document. Characteristically frank and outspoken, shirking none of the great distinctive principles upon which the battle of the last political canvass was fought and won, its moderate tone and magnanimity have extorted even the praise of his bitterest political enemies. It is faultless in style, conciliating in temper, but uncompromising in principle. We especially recommend to the careful consideration of the people of this State those passages which refer to the lawlessness and outrages which have characterized many of our interior parishes. The sentiment that peace must be preserved and order maintained will find a hearty response in the breasts of a large majority of our people. The axiom laid down that those communities which prefer not to enforce law and order in their midst must pay for their enforcement by superior means is a just one, and will be sustained by the people.

Governor Warmoth has signalized his inauguration by a plain statement of wholesome truths propounded in a sincere and persuasive manner, which reminds us more of the sinewy Saxon of President Lincoln than any State papers which we have perused since his death. He will endear himself forever to the people of Louisiana, and render his name immortal by a straightforward enforcement of the principles he has so eloquently enunciated. He has a most glorious future before him. There is not an honor in the gift of the American people to which he can not successfully aspire, if he carries out the programme laid down in his inaugural.

Lieutenant Governor Dunn's Address.

We print elsewhere this remarkable document. It is curious to see how facts compel our Democratic cotemporaries to print in one column a refutation of their slanders in another. For instance, we turn from an indignant howl in the Times against the barbarous and unchristian policy of conferring suffrage upon an ignorant vain, and incompetent class of people to another column in which it is compelled to praise the moderation, good taste, and wisdom of one of that very class, speaking from an official position. The whole stock in trade of the Democracy North for the next Presidential campaign consists in the cry of inhumanity and tyranny against Congress for compelling a proud and chivalrous people to submit to negro equality and supremacy. And now we hear these very chivalry commending the moderation and wisdom of the inaugural of the first colored Lieutenant Governor of the State.

We say to the people of the North that the weakness and flimsiness of all this outcry about negro equality and supremacy is made evident by the admissions of the very people who raise the cry.

The fact is, it is not the negro that they dread. It is the supremacy of the Union and of liberal principles through the negro vote of which they are afraid. Just print Governor Dunn's address in all your papers and the Times' and Picayune's comments thereon, and we are willing to offset these against any six Copperhead speeches, including Horatio's address to his "friends," the New York rioters, and risk the Presidential election upon the result.

Major Frank R. Chase.

We exceedingly regret to learn that the Freedmen's Bureau is likely to lose the services of its very efficient Superintendent of Education. Major Chase has done excellent service to the cause of education among the freedmen of our State, having missed no opportunity of carrying out his instructions, both in letter and in spirit. His unvarying courtesy, prompt business habits, and purity of character have won him the esteem of all good men. Our school teachers, preachers, and the colored people in general owe him a debt of gratitude. His sympathy with them and faithfulness in exposing the outrages to which they and their schools are so frequently subjected has met with no favor at headquarters, and an honorable self-respect has caused his resignation. We hope he may have an opportunity of resuming his educational work among us with more congenial surroundings.

Rev. George W. Honey.

We have had the pleasure of a brief visit from our friends Rev. George W. Honey and wife, on their way to their home in Galveston, Texas, after a short visit to their relations in the West. Brother Honey is a member of our Texas conference, and is struggling manfully to build up a loyal Methodist church in Galveston. We commend the enterprise to the consideration of those who are able and patriotic enough to help his people out of their financial difficulties.

McKendree College.

We have read with pleasure the admirable report in the Central Christian Advocate of the commencement exercises of the above named institution. The attendance was large, the addresses excellent, and the report of its condition cheering. We are glad to learn that the Board of Trustees have by a unanimous vote extended the privileges of the institution to women.

The degree of Doctor of Divinity was conferred on Rev. Reuben Andrus, A. M., of the Indiana Conference; Rev. Henry E. Whipple, A. M., Professor in Hinsdale College, Michigan.

Illinois Conference.

Bloomington.—The work of raising funds for our proposed new college building is progressing finely. About $3000 more only is needed to reach an amount which will enable the committee to commence the building. We hope to reach that amount by the meeting of the Board, June 16. The friends of the college, both at Bloomington and elsewhere, are doing nobly in aiding in this good work.

Earnest Appeal for Help.

Rev. J. M. Bryan, of St. Martinsville circuit writes to us, July 7:

Last Sabbath I spent in Lafayette, where we have great prospects of success, but no house can be found to hold half the people. Many don't come because they can not get in to hear the word, many others turn away because they can not find room even to stand. They want a house very much. From far and near they are calling upon us to gather them in. I do hope our Northern brethren will help us in our time of need. Two years' crops have failed, so there is no money to be had. In the morning at ten o'clock I preached; the spirit of God was with us, and burned in many hearts. At the close I baptized thirteen in the church, and then we marched four miles down to the water and baptized fifteen. Some lived so far and the roads were so muddy they could not come at this time. It is the first Protestant baptizing known in Lafayette. A place was then prepared for preaching and the Lord's supper under a large oak. Sixty five persons present took the communion. The number would have been larger but the rain broke up our meeting. One of our best sisters, living two miles from town, died happy in the Lord two weeks ago.

The crops are promising and the people are hoping to have plenty for the year to come.

A young child, says an exchange, lately got a piece of cracker in his windpipe, and, after many futile efforts to remove the obstruction, was laid on a bed, black and lifeless, when an old man, who had "raised sixteen children," suggested violent blowing in the child's nostrils. The experiment was tried, the cracker dislodged, and suspended animation restored.

He who in blessing others forgets himself will never be forgotten.

Editorial Correspondence.

MICHIGAN UNIVERSITY.

An invitation to deliver the annual sermon before the Young Men's Christian Association of the University of Michigan brought us to the beautiful town of Ann Arbor. We were the guests of President Haven, and shall long remember the attention received from him and his excellent lady. Under the Presidency of Dr. Haven the University has reached a degree of prosperity unknown in its past history, and its present condition is the promise of no mean future. With a campus of forty acres, delightfully located, with spacious buildings for lectures and recitations, with museums containing specimens of ornithology, ichthyology, physiology, geology, mineralogy, and many works of art; with a laboratory large and well arranged, with a corps of professors, whose scholarly reputation is national, and even European, and with not less than 1200 students in annual attendance, the University of Michigan is a power in the nation. Hitherto the State appropriations have been sufficient, but at present they are not equal to current demands. Twenty-five hundred dollars a year is a sum too small for the President of such a university, and especially for Michigan. Dr. Haven can command $5000 per annum in any one of a dozen positions in our own church, and what is true of him is also true of such eminent scholars as Wintchell, Watson, and Williams. But this world pays less for brains than for any other negotiable commodity.

It gives us great satisfaction to state that President Haven is held in very high esteem both by the regents, professors, and alumni of the university, and by the citizens of the State. The ripe scholar, the beautiful Christian, the eloquent orator, he is a chosen vessel in which is the excellency of power. He should be a bishop in our church. Associated with him is Professor Wintchell, whose reputation has crossed the ocean and gained for him a place among the great scholars of the old world.

When in 1864 the steamer Empress was fired into opposite Milliken's Bend he was on board, and the awful scene through which we then passed was recalled when we met him at Ann Arbor.

It was a temptation too great to resist to remain at Ann Arbor and enjoy the commencement exercises. Our Southern residence had deprived us of such privileges, and we gladly tarried. On Monday evening we heard Mr. Mayo on "Western Culture and Western Manhood," and on the following evening we listened with pleasure to Rev. Mr. Fisk on the "University of Michigan." On Wednesday the Methodist Church was crowded with those who came to witness the exercises on commencement day, and among the visitors were Major General Pope and staff. The graduating class was large, and the addresses were creditable and well received. With one or two exceptions, each subject was not only practical in itself but expressed in Saxon so severe as to be unpleasant to classical ears. There was even a homely plainness in some cases which does not necessarily flow from a university education. There were also some specimens of real eloquence. At the alumni dinner that followed there was delicious fare, social intercourse, and many good ten minutes speeches.

YOUNG MEN'S CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.

We arrived at Detroit in time to attend the thirteenth annual session of the International Convention, composed of delegates from the Young Men's Christian Associations of the United States and the British Provinces. The Convention was held in the Central Methodist Episcopal Church, which is among the most magnificent churches in America. Over 600 delegates were in attendance, and a finer body of young men we have never seen assembled. Pious, intelligent, and business-like men, they are at once the beauty and power of the Christian church. Mr. Thane Miller, of Cincinnati, Ohio, was chosen President, assisted by Mr. R. R. McBirney, of New York, as first Vice-President. As Mr. Miller is blind, Mr. McBirney was indispensable to him in the rapid discharge of his duties. Indeed, the latter was both eyes and brains to the former; and it was not a little interesting to witness the motions of these two gentlemen in presiding over the deliberations of so numerous and sprightly a body. The real objection to this is that the President elect is not the President presiding, but rather Mr. McBirney was the President. The Convention has honored Mr. Miller with an election for the third time, and in view of his blindness in hope he will have the good sense to decline a re-election, should the Convention unwisely confer upon him the compliment for the fourth time. We confess our admiration for the blind President; but it was generally complained that he spoke too often and too long. Mr. McBirney is certainly an able manager. For many years he has been identified with this movement, and is now Secretary of the New York association. His heart is in the good work, and his influence in the Convention was very great. We hope he will be its next President.

While engaged in this free criticism we may refer to other points which must undergo considerable modification. By a rule which the Convention foolishly adopted no resolution could be discussed unless by a suspension of the rules, or reported back to the Convention by the Business Committee to whom it had been referred. This method of procedure is circuitous, cumbersome, and anti-republican. No body of Americans should thus voluntarily surrender the right of free speech and of open discussion. If it is the better way to have a Business Committee to report what may and what may not be discussed in open Convention, then let one day be set apart for the offering and debate of resolutions. We consider it also a great drawback to the interests of the Convention to invite a dozen gentlemen to speak on the same evening, and limit them to five minutes each. It is not possible that any one subject is susceptible of being treated in twelve different ways, and hence repitition is inevitable; and were it not inevitable it were impossible for more than one out of twelve speakers to make a hit. More than once President Miller was compelled to apoligize for not putting twenty-four speakers on the programme for each evening, such was the demand that each delegation should be represented in public. This evil must be boldly met, and the Committee on Public Meetings should select three or four good speakers for the presentation of the subject in view.

The spirit of the Convention was admirable. The flower of the Christian army was there. We looked with pride upon those noble forms, and rejoiced in the heavenly light that beamed from those manly faces. The singing was delightful; the prayers fervent; the addresses earnest. When business and the excessive heat produced a momentary impatience, they engaged in prayer. When some grew heated in debate, and the way out was not clear, they either sang some sweet melody, or went to the throne of grace. The speaking was most animated. The discussion of lay preaching was the most sensible, appropriate, and powerful we ever heard. Each in his turn gave his experience on this important subject; and while all spoke with difference of the clergy, yet all impressed us that there was a work to do which ministers can't do. Prayer meetings were held in the morning from five to six, and from six to eight in the evenings; open air meetings were held to the edification of many. The piety and zeal manifested were refreshing, and more than once we wished that all the American pastors were present to behold the spirit there displayed, and catch the youthful fire.

From a small beginning this movement has grown to large proportions. There are now not less than 70,000 members of these associations in our country, with real estate for their use valued at $800,000. And if we may infer the future from the past another year will add 30,000 to the membership. This is indeed a great power to rise up in the midst of the American Church, and we may ask, what of the future? The tendency of all such organizations is separation and independence. The Wesleyans were such a body in the established Church, without a thought of a separate existence, but circumstances thrust them out, and they became a Church. If our pastors were even worldly wise, they would encourage these associations in their rightful and heavenly work, and thus control them. Opposition will not destroy them, but will increase the tendencies to secede. Some pastors are too jealous to be generous; too indolent to co-operate; hence, they either oppose or are indifferent. Rather, they should see in this, God's handiwork, "a wheel within a wheel," and recognizing the usefulness of such organizations, induce each young man in their congregations to join the association. For these young men constitute the real and efficient workers in God's Church, and are doing more for the immediate salvation of men than any other portion of the church. In this special work of lay preaching, they are the pastor's aid-de-camps. They are his helpers to bear the glad tidings to the lost, and, standing in the highways and hedges, to call those who never enter the house of the Lord.

Superstition, Prejudice, and Omen.

We are informed by a trustworthy gentleman that a certain esquire at St. Martinsville, ex-Confederate colonel, and now an inveterate persecutor of our colored school and its teachers, recently procured a mass to be said by the parish priest in order to prevent our excellent Governor and Lieutenant Governor from taking their seats as State officers. On his return from church this pious man had the misfortune to break one of the columns of his house, whereat, being a Free Mason, he was greatly disturbed. Members of the mystic craft will understand the omen.

Our Shreveport Churches.

The reign of terror in Shreveport inaugurated soon after the last Quarterly Conference having interrupted the work of union among the colored Methodists, Rev. J. M. Vance was sent up the Red river by the Presiding Elder to complete the consolidation. We are happy to announce that Brother Vance has faithfully and skillfully performed this duty, besides holding Quarterly Conference for the St. James and the Zion churches. He reports that the entire Zion membership voted for union with the old church, and of the official Board only one member dissented. Rev. Samuel Armisted deserves honorable mention for his services in the matter. A day of fasting and prayer was appointed that God might direct them. It was a solemn time. Some of those who were the most active on a former visit in promoting this union have left the Church and proved traitors to the cause. How much bribery or intimidation had to do with their course we can not say.

We have received an interesting letter from Rev. George Washington in reference to the country appointments. He reports four churches with a large body of members, and is doing a good work.

Rev. Samuel Armisted is left in charge of Zion Methodist Episcopal church, and Rev. John Boyd in charge of St. James Methodist Episcopal church. We bespeak the sympathy of our friends everywhere for these people; they are poor and persecuted, and deserve credit for their Christian patriotism, where union with us imperils life and property. May God protect and prosper them. D.

Intelligence from Our Mission Rooms.

Sweden.—A letter has just been received at the mission rooms from Rev. V. Witting, dated at Gottenburg, June 8, in which he gives an account of a blessed, indeed of a glorious work of grace in Sweden. It is like the dawnings of the work in the early days of Mr. Wesley's ministry. The work is spreading by the removal of the subjects of it from one place to another, and by the people forming themselves into classes and choosing leaders for themselves. These leaders begin to exhort, and the work spreads, and then they send for the Superintendent, Brother Witting, resident at Gottenburg. He goes to them, sees the work of grace, preaches to the crowds of people, and then makes the best arrangements in his power for the continuance of the work. But where are the men and the money? He places over the work such men as God puts into his hands, sets everybody at work, and looks to the Church at home for help. We must help, and that, too, without much delay. We repeat a deliberately formed opinion, and expressed upon our return from a visit to our Scandinavian missions, that Rev. O. Hedstrom, of New York, ought to be sent out as an evangelist every two or three years to Scandinavia to arouse the multitudes, and the missionaries will gather up and organize the precious fruit. In the letter alluded to from Brother Witting, he says:

"I have recently been to Stockholm and Carlskrona, and found the work in both these places in a very gratifying condition considering the disadvantages under which the brethren labor. In Carlskrona we have no regular mission; that is to say we have no missionary laboring there; but the friends have formed themselves into classes, and selected leaders, and these leaders hold meetings in different places every Sunday and exhort the people. They have hired a large meeting-house in the city, wherein they preach every Sunday, and a great many people regularly attend their meetings. There is also one class in the country, about ten English miles from the city, and one of the brethren from the city walks out there every Sunday, and exhorts the people. There are about fifty members in all, that is, in the city and country together. This work is the fruit of Pastor Hedstrom's preaching in that city when he last visited Sweden.

"Brother Kihlstrom takes charge of the work in Stockholm and vicinity; he is the brother who has preached there during several years, and who has been a Methodist in doctrine and experience unknowingly to himself. The very same day that I got your letter he was told that the manufactory wherein he worked should be closed, and now, not knowing what to do in order to support his family, he began to feel uneasy, when the call came, Give up your earthly pursuits and give yourself wholly to preach the Gospel. He was glad, and the friends were glad, and they thanked God heartily when they heard that the Board had appropriated means for his support. As he has a small family he can live comfortably on four hundred and fifty species (a "species" is $1 12 of our money) a year, and he is very thankful and satisfied with this. I have employed him from the first of June, and paid him one hundred and fifty species for the four months from the first of June to the first of October.

"The other brother, whom I spoke about in my letter of last winter, and whom I recommended to be employed as a helper in Stockholm, has moved away from there to a city about half way between Stockholm and Carlskrona, the old city of Calmar, and I must tell you something about this case. He has been there some time, and having considerable Methodist fire in his heart he could not keep still, but commenced to talk with some godly persons with whom he became acquainted about Christ and the power of godliness, and the consequence was that he was, before he was really aware of it, led to exhort and preach the gospel. They met in private houses, having no public place wherein to meet, and in gardens, and their number increased from time to time, and several souls have been awakened and some have found peace in believing. I got a letter from him yesterday asking me what to do, if he shall remain there or not. As he has no livelihood there he must leave, but he finds it hard to do so when there is such a hunger after the word of God. I hardly know what to do. It would be wrong to leave these new-born souls to themselves, and he must leave if he can not get some help to his support. I have laid the case before God, and have come to this conclusion; whether it is wrong or right I leave with you to say."

We have received at the Mission Rooms another letter from Rev. Victor Witting, dated at Gottenburg, May 11, in which he says: "We had a blessed time yesterday. Our hall was perfectly crowded last night, and is now altogether too small for our congregations. Souls are awakened and converted almost every week, and I feel much encouraged, thank God."

Good News from China.—Letters received at the Mission Rooms advise us of increasing prosperity in our China mission in the vicinity of Foochow. The success is remarkable and positive; indeed it is marvelous. The work is attested by divine power. Men and women are converted, and become "new creatures in Christ Jesus;" and they attest the reality of their conversion by godly lives and triumphant deaths. The work is spreading, and many are the subjects of it. Surely the pastors and people will turn again to the support of our foreign work as in former years. We have been holding our foreign work as best we can until our missionary interests at home could be brought to a settled, prosperous state. The time has come when we must give decided support to our foreign work, which is wonderfully prosperous in nearly every foreign mission. These remarks have been occasioned by a letter received at the Mission rooms, dated Foochow, China, April 20. Brother Maclay says:

"You will rejoice to learn that the work of God in this mission goes forward with increasing power. Brother Lowry and I have just returned from a tour through the Southern portion of our mission field. Seventy-one adults and five children were baptized during the trip, and the adults were all received into the Church. There is a good prospect of continued prosperity in this part of our work."

What the General Conference Did.

We condense from the Methodist the more important doings of general interest:

1. The Southern (colored) conferences, which had been organized since 1864, with restricted rights and privileges, were elevated to the rank of the regular Annual Conferences, with all the rights and privileges of the latter.

2. The Mission Conferences of Liberia, Germany, Switzerland, and India were raised to the same rank and made an integral part of the American Episcopal Methodist church. The bishops were requested to make at least one Episcopal visitation to each of the European and Asiatic missions during the next quadrennial period.

3. A new constitution of the Missionary Society was adopted, the chief change being in the object of the society, which is declared to be to diffuse the blessings of education and Christianity in this and foreign lands.

4. It was resolved to maintain the present official periodicals, and to add the New Orleans Advocate and the Charleston Advocate to the list, and to instruct the book agents to aid the Pacific Christian Advocate to the extent of $4000, or to order it suspended if such aid should be insufficient. The book agents were also authorized to start a weekly official paper in Knoxville, Atlanta, or Nashville; and a German theological and literary magazine, a German catechism, and a first-class children's illustrated magazine in Cincinnati, and to start a daily church paper if they shall deem it best.

5. The publishing interests of the church were placed under the supervision of one Book Committee, consisting of fifteen ministers.

6. A Board of Trustees was created, to hold in trust for the church all donations, bequests, grants, etc., made to the M. E. Church for benevolent purposes, and to administer the same in accordance with the terms of the donation or bequest.

7. A Board of Education was created to administer the Centenary Educational fund and the Sunday School Children's fund. It consists of six ministers and six laymen.

8. It was resolved to celebrate Sunday, April 4, 1869, as a missionary jubilee, it being the fifteenth anniversary of the Missionary Society, and that year being the hundredth anniversary of the arrival of Wesley's first missionaries, Richard Boardman and Joseph Pilmore, in this country.

9. A commission was appointed to treat with any Methodist church that may desire union with the Methodist Episcopal church.

10. A plan of lay representation was drawn up, which is to be submitted to the votes of the members, male and female, above twenty-one years of age, and subsequently to the votes of the Annual Conferences, the results to be reported to the next General Conference.

11. A constitution of the Church Extension Society was adopted, and a Board of Managers chosen, consisting of thirty-five ministers and thirty-five laymen.

12. A commission of ministers and laymen was appointed to consider the expediency of erecting a Central Publishing House in the city of New York.

At the commencement of Mount Union College, June 20, the degree of D. D. was conferred on Rev. S. M. Merrill, editor of the Western Christian Advocate. June 24 the Ohio Wesleyan University, Delaware, Ohio, and the Ohio University at Athens, Ohio, each conferred the same degree on the new editor.

Beautiful was the reply of a venerable man to the question, whether he was still in the land of the living? No, but I am almost there.

A GENTLE WORD.

A gentle word is never lost;
O never then refuse one—
It cheers the heart when sorrow-tost,
And lulls the cares that bruise one.
It scatters sunshine o'er our way,
It turns our thorns to roses,
It changes dreary night to day,
And hope and peace discloses.

A gentle word is never lost;
The fallen brother needs it:
How easy said, how small the cost,
With joy and comfort speeds it.
Then drive the shadow from thy brow,
A smile can well replace it.
Our voice is music when we speak
With gentle words to grace it!

TOO LATE.

Only a dreadful slumber,
But high has soared the sun;
Only a moment wasted,
Only a word unspoken,
(Was thine the blame, oh Fate?)
Only a promise broken,
Only an hour too late.
Only a half hushed whisper
Instead of laughter sweet:
Only a stranger shadow
Where once fell gentle feet.
Only the close-drawn curtains
Around a quiet bed;
Only the white hands folded,
Only the peaceful dead.

Harry's Prayer.

Little Harry C. had been folded into his warm crib. "And now, Harry," said his mother, seriously, "say your prayer." To her surprise the child refused.

"Harry," she asked, "who has taken care of you to-day?"

"Mamma, I s'pose."

"Can mother keep her little boy alive?"

"No, mamma; God does that."

"And yet my little boy will not thank him. When your father and mother are asleep, who will watch over you to-night?"

His blue eyes were full of thought, and tears gathered in them as he said, "I will ask God to take care of me to-night, for it will be all dark and still; but to-morrow Harry can take care of himself."

"Harry," said the mother, "you could not take care of yourself for a moment."

"Yes, mamma, in the daytime I could."

"If God saw fit to take your life could you prevent it?"

"No, mamma."

"If he should think it best to take away your father, or your mother, or anything you have, could you help it?"

"No, mamma."

"Yet you will not pray to that kind Father in heaven who gives you your life, your father, your mother, every thing you love or enjoy. No, you can take care of yourself."

"I can't, mamma, I can't." His eyes were full of tears, as, closing them, he folded his small hands and prayed: "Please, God, take care of me to-night and to-morrow. Please take care of poor Harry, for Jesus' sake, for he can never, never take care of himself."

A simple prayer, for Harry was but three years old. A true prayer, for it came from the heart. Harry will never be more truly wise than when thus feeling his entire dependence upon God.

Taking a Stand.

Tom ——— was invited to the room of a friend, where he found a party of young men.

"Will you smoke, Tom?" Tom did not smoke. He said he had given up smoking, and he meant to stick to it.

"A little hot punch, Tom?"

"No, sir," very decidedly.

"We are getting up a club, Tom, and want you, as a member of the old croquet club, to join the new one."

Tom still declined; and when asked why, he frankly told why. Members of the old croquet club occasionally drank whisky; and what assurance was there that they would not do the same thing again, or worse? In clubs or associations of any kind the bad habits of the few often drag the whole club down, and bring its members to disgrace. "So I must stay out," said Tom, "even at the cost of losing a friend."

"I was so glad to hear you say 'No,' Tom," cried the young man, who wanted to, but did not quite dare to take the lead.

A few nights since an old lady who had got upon the train for Chicago at Freeport, Illinois, was observed suddenly to throw up her arms, exclaiming, "I'm a wicked wretch, and am going to die!" She died soon after in convulsions. In her pocket was found a bottle labeled "poison."

An experiment made last year in Germany in planting potatoes showed that where the "eyes" had been first removed the yield was four times as great as where they were left in their place. It was found that when an old eye had been rubbed off, three or four new ones made their appearance.

A contented mind is a continual feast.

Lynch Law in West Tennessee.

The Nashville Press and Times has the following narration:

A few days since some ruffians from Randolph, Tennessee, passed over to the Arkansas shore and kidnapped a colored man, took him to the Tennessee shore and cowhided him till his back was cut up, and then covered him with turpentine. They charged him with having stolen a revolver from some one of them, of which, however, there was no proof whatever. He had no pistol, had not had any, and there was no trace of any in connection with him. The fact is he was cowhided and turpentined because he had preferred to work for a Yankee who was planting corn on the Arkansas shore, instead of some of those who tried to hire him. Whether this colored man so outraged by these Democrats will survive or not is very doubtful.

A colored man living near New Castle, in Fayette county, was taken out by six ruffians the other night and beaten almost to death. We believe he recognized two of the villains. Outrages of this character are frequent in that vicinity.

The Republicans of Maine met in Portland and unanimously renominated their popular Governor, J. L. Chamberlain. The Honorable S. P. Strickland and General George L. Beal were named as Presidential Electors at Large. Stirring speeches were made by the Honorable John A Bingham, General Daniel E. Sickles, and others.

The Best Fun.

"Now, boys, I'll tell you how we can have some fun," said Freddie R——— to his companions, who had assembled on a beautiful moonlight evening for sliding, snowballing, and fun generally.

"How?" "Where?" "What is it?" asked several eager voices all at once.

"I heard Widow M——— tell a man a little while ago," replied Freddie, "that she would go over and sit up with a sick child to-night. She said she would be over about eight o'clock. Now, as soon as she is gone let's go and make a big snow man on her door-step, so that when she comes back in the morning she can not get back into her house without first knocking him over."

"Capital," "First rate," "Hoora," shouted some of the boys.

"See here," said Charley N———, "I'll tell you the best fun."

"What is it?" again inquired several voices at once.

"Wait awhile," said Charley. "Who's got a wood saw?"

"I have." "So have I." "And I," answered three of the boys. "But what in the world do you want a wood saw for?"

"You shall see," replied Charlie. "It is almost eight o'clock now, so go and get your saws. You, Freddie, and Nathan, get each an ax, I will get a shovel. Let us all be back here in fifteen minutes, and then I'll show you the fun."

The boys separated to go on their several errands, each wondering what the fun could be, and what possible use could be made of wood saws and axes in their play. But Charlie was not only a great favorite with them all, but also an acknowledged leader, and they fully believed in him and his promise. Their curiosity gave elasticity to their steps, and they were soon assembled.

"Now," said Charlie, "Mrs. M——— is gone, for I met her when I was coming back; so let's be off at once."

"But what are you going to do?" inquired several impatient members of the party.

"You shall see directly," replied the leader, as they approached the humble residence of Mrs. M———.

"Now, boys," said Charlie, "you see that pile of wood; a man hauled it here this afternoon, and I heard Mrs. M——— tell him that unless she got some one to saw it to-night she should have hardly anything to make a fire of in the morning. Now, we can saw and split that pile of wood just about as easily as we could build a great snow man, and when Mrs. M——— comes home from her watching she will be as much surprised to find her wood sawed as she would to find a snow man on her doorstep, and a great deal more pleasantly surprised, too. What say you? Will you do it?

One or two of the boys rather demurred at first. They didn't like to saw wood, they said. But the majority were in favor of Charlie's project; so they finally joined in, and went to work with a will.

"I'll go around to the back of the shed," said Charlie, "and crawl through the window and unfasten the door. Then we'll take turns in sawing, splitting, and carrying in the wood; and I want to pile it up real nice, and to shovel all the snow away from the door, and a good wide path, too, from the door to the street. Won't it be fun when she comes home and sees it?"

It was not a long or wearisome job for seven robust and healthy boys to saw, split, and pile up the poor widow's half cord of wood, and to shovel a good path; and when it was done so great was their pleasure and satisfaction that one of the boys who objected to work at first proposed that they should go to a neighboring carpenter shop where plenty of shavings could be had for the carrying away, and each bring an armful of kindling wood. And next morning when the weary widow returned from watching by the sick bed and saw what was done she was surprised, and afterward when a neighbor who had unobserved witnessed the labors told how it was done, her fervent invocation—"God bless the boys," of itself was an abundant reward for their labors.

Ah, boys and girls, the best fun is always found in doing something that is kind and useful. This is the deliberate opinion of a grey-headed old man, but if you doubt it in the least try it for yourselves and be convinced.

Sabbath Desecration.

We volunteer a notice of the "Grand Catholic Festival of St. Joseph's Picnic Association on Sundays, July 12 and 19" in order to protest as one of the guardians of the public morals against this pious Sabbath day jollification with its horse races, mule races, scrub, foot, sack races, grand match of foot-ball, and its vile accompaniments of gambling and drinking. Last Sabbath week the day was made hideous by a sort of "mystic crew" procession through our streets. The grand festival people tell us that "the United States military band is employed for the occasion." Let us have our quiet American Sunday, one day at least for God and heaven.

Last Friday a delegation from Germany to the Sangerfest (singing festival), which is to be held shortly in Chicago, was introduced to the Mayor of this city, who treated them to a luncheon, and told them in the course of a speech of welcome, according to the report of the German papers; that "it was unavoidable to introduce and to spread in this country not only the social habits of the Germans, but even their peculiar mode of Sunday observance." He appealed for this opinion to the authority of one of the most influential clergymen of the city, and promised, should he remain in office, to address them next time in the German language, which he was now engaged in acquiring. His remarks were, of course, received "with the most hearty applause" by the Germans. We shall not discuss the propriety of this incidental attack on the American Sabbath, but we must most seriously protest in the name of the Christian public against the sentiment itself.

A few weeks ago the quiet of our Sabbath was disturbed by a German Catholic procession during the hours of worship parading through our streets with noisy music, military band, and banners, on one of which was Pius Ninth, surrounded by twelve horsemen on white chargers, and bearing the inscription in German, "Protector of the German Catholic Central Union in the United States of America." This outrage roused the indignation of the religious and orderly community, and found expression in the protest published in our last number. Next Sunday, we are informed, a similar procession is to take place at the corner-stone laying of the Catholic cathedral in Fifth avenue.

We are willing to adopt every good habit from abroad, but we mean to hold fast to our own institutions, and especially to our American Sabbath, as a day of rest for body and soul, a day of worship and charity. This is one of our most sacred characteristics, for which we are envied by the best men of Europe, who deplore the continental Sabbath desecration as the chief cause of the decay of public morals and religion. Our free institutions can only be maintained on the basis of self-government and piety; and there can be no Christianity without a Sabbath with its sacred associations and educational, ennobling, and elevating influences. Political tyrants like to tickle their people with Sunday and holiday amusements, that, like children at play, they may forget their civil rights and never attain to political manhood. Every patriotic as well as every religious and moral consideration calls upon us with every means in our power to resist the demoralizing influence of the continental Sunday.—New York Evangelist, June 18.

ANDERSONVILLE.

The Boston Medical and Surgical Journal has extracts from a section of the United States Sanitary Memoirs, which contains the report of a Confederate Surgeon, Joseph Jones, that confirms the worst accounts we have ever had of the treatment of the Federal prisoners at Andersonville. Professor Jones is, of course, an impartial witness, or rather his bias is toward the rebel side, and he endeavors to excuse the enormities to some extent. But the facts he gives are all that are needed to show that not one word has ever exaggerated the loathsome barbarities, fiendish neglect, and devilish cruelties of that vile area wherein starved, almost naked, and nearly destitute of shelter, a thousand suffering men were the average haggard population of a single acre. There were times when forty thousand captives occupied twenty-seven acres.

In his description of the topography of Andersonville, Dr. Jones thus describes the quality of the water, where it entered and when it left the stockade:

"The waters of the streams, wells, and springs within the stockade (Confederate States military prison) and the military prison hospital (federal) were also subjected to careful chemical examination, and were found in like manner to be of remarkable purity.

"The waters of the stream issuing from the stockade and hospitals are contaminated by the filth and offal of the Federal prisoners, and contain not only these matters and various salts resulting from their decomposition, but also numerous maggots, animalculæ, and cryptogamous plants.

As these waters, loaded with filth, flow sluggishly through the swamp below, filled with trees and reeds coated with a filthy deposit, they emit an intolerable and most sickening stench. Standing as I did over these waters in the middle of a hot day in September, as they rolled sluggishly forth from the stockade, after having received the filth of twenty thousand men, the stench was disgusting and overpowering; and if it was surpassed in unpleasantness by anything, it was only in the disgusting appearance of the filthy, almost stagnant waters moving slowly between the stumps and roots and fallen trunks of trees and thick branches of reeds, with innumerable long tailed large white maggots, swollen peas, and fermenting excrements, and fragments of bread and meat."

Even at this late day this corroborative testimony from a Confederate officer is valuable as rebutting the attempts of Copperheads to whitewash the blackest page in the history of the rebellion, and as proving that care should be taken in restoring to political influence and social regard the men who tolerated or countenanced or perpetrated the inhuman outrages. We give a single passage to prove that we have not put the case too strongly:

With regard to the condition of the sick, and the causes of disease, Dr. Jones says:

"The patients and attendants, near two thousand in number, are crowded into this confined space, and are but poorly supplied with old and ragged tents. Large numbers of them were without any bunks, and lay upon the ground, oftentimes without even a blanket—no beds or straw appear to have been furnished.

"The tents extend to within a few yards of the small stream, the eastern portion of which we have before said was used as a privy, and was loaded with excrements; and I observed a large pile of corn bread, bones, and filth of all kinds, thirty feet in diameter and several feet in height, swarming with myriads of flies, in a vacant space near the pots used for cooking.

"Millions of flies swarmed over everything, and covered the faces of the sleeping patients, and crawled down their open mouths and deposited their maggots in the gangrenous wounds of the living, and in the mouths of the dead. Myriads of mosquitos also infested the tents, and many of the patients were so stung by these pestiferous insects that they appeared as if they were suffering from a slight attack of measles.

"The police and hygiene of the hospital were defective in the extreme, as the attendants were selected from the prisoners; they not only robbed the sick of their clothing and rations, but also neglected their comfort and cleanliness in a most shameful manner. The sick were literally incrusted with dirt and covered with vermin.

"When a gangrenous wound needed washing the limb was thrust out a little from the blanket of board or rags upon which the patient was lying, and water poured over it, and all the putrescent matter allowed to soak into the ground floor of the tent.

"The supply of rags for dressing wounds was said to be very scant; and I saw the most filthy rags, which had been applied several times and imperfectly washed, used in dressing recent wounds. When hospital gangrene was prevailing it was impossible for any wound to escape contagion under these circumstances."

The Governor of New Hampshire has issued his first veto against the bill repealing the usury law, and the Legislature sustained it. He thinks it unfortunate to be introduced at the time when the State, counties, and towns owe an aggregate of $11,000,000, and pay an annual interest of $650,000.

A factory girl in Fall river returned a day or two ago a roll of bills amounting to nearly $300, which had been inadvertently done up in a package of goods she had purchased in a store in that city. She refused to accept any reward in money, but was prevailed upon to take a good dress pattern.

COMMISSIONS FROM THE GOVERNOR.

Parish Judges.—The following commissions have been sent to the office of the Secretary of State:

Troubles in Lafayette Parish.

A private letter, dated Vermillionville, Lafayette parish, July 13, says there is such a condition of disorder and lawlessness there as makes existence almost intolerable for Republicans, especially freedmen. Within a few days previous to writing the letter one man and one woman had been killed, and one man and two women badly wounded by armed parties who attacked the victims without provocation. An appeal has been made for justice and protection from the Governor, which, we hope, it will be in his power to respond to in an effectual manner. The letter is written by a gentleman well known to us.

The troops will not be withdrawn from Arkansas or any other restored State at present. The troops will, as in Tennesse, aid the civil authorities, but will not unless called upon by the Governor. It is the hope of General Grant that the people themselves will take such a course as will justify very little interference by the military. No orders have been issued to the commanders in the other States, and none will be given till the representatives are received in both Houses.

The family of General Grant consists of himself and Mrs. Grant; Frederick, a youth of eighteen, now a Cadet at West Point; Ulysses Jr., about fifteen years old; Nellie, an only daughter, and Jesse, the baby, who is named after the General's father. Miss Nellie is described as "a sunny dispositioned and merry young lady, whom everybody loves," and Jesse as "a bright lad who sometimes appears in Highland costume, the garb of his Gaelic ancestors."

MISCELLANEOUS ITEMS.

Fanny Fern having said that "the men of the present day were fast," Prentice replies that they have to be to catch the women."

An order for one million seven hundred and twenty-eight thousand cans of condensed milk has been received from China by a house in West Brookfield, Massachusetts.

Houston is to pay $40,000 to have its streets shelled. A number of Southern cities have had theirs "shelled" at a dearer rate than that.

An ex-city official in Troy, New York, lately corrected hs wife with an ax handle for a breach of etiquette in helping herself to butter at the tea table with her own knife.

The Fifth Avenue hotel during the Democratic convention presented a scene of rare disorder. One-half of the Democratic delegates had lost their carpet-bags, and a man with a clean shirt was considered out of order.

"Judge" Keckley, for many years a prominent caterer for St. Louis, and the husband of the Mrs. Keckley who was dressmaker to Mrs. Lincoln, and the author of a gossipy volume about her, died in Memphis on the seventh instant.

George Francis Train says he is restrained from writing his life because he is "naturally sensitive, constitutionally diffident, with a shrinking from public gaze, since his earliest infancy."

A fond mother in Cincinnati broke her arm while spanking a disobedient infant the other day. It is a pity that the infant was too young fully to enjoy the catastrophe.

The indefatigable Barnum is again in the field, and will visit Racine, Wisconsin, with the beautiful Circassians, the celebrated fat woman, a Pickwickian baby, and a giantess over eight feet high.

Southern lawyers who have settled in New York city are generally building up lucrative practices among the rebel sympathizers. Roger A. Pryor, for example, is represented to have a practice worth $15,000 a year.

An enterprising lady in Paris hires babies, which she rents out, handsomely dressed up, to members of the demi-monde, it being fashionable for the latter to drive out in the Bois de Boulogne with their little ones. Twenty francs an hour are charged for the poor worms thus rented out.

In dispatches from New York it is asserted that Seymour swears he will decline; "His honor is involved," and besides: "It is bad enough to run a losing race; but when you want me to back the Blair family I'll be——if I'll do it." Well, Seymour is a man of some sense.

Mr. Mackey, a recent lecturer in Washington, in describing the South Carolina sane-hillers, says that there are about twenty-eight thousand of them; that reading and writing are considered as among the "lost arts," and that so fond are they of eating snuff it is on record, in order to obtain an ounce, one has been even known to wash himself!

Cincinnati has 266 Brown families, 240 of the Jones, 200 Williams, 380 Millers, and 150 Schmidts.

Solomon advises the sluggard to go to the ant, but the shiftless in our day generally go to their uncle.

A gentleman who has been on the coast of Africa, all over the extreme Southern States, and in many other hot places, and who once sat down upon a hot stove, says he never suffered from the heat as he did in Boston on the Fourth.

A woman in Paris, keeping a matrimonial office, has added to her establishment a stereoscopic panorama, where portraits of the candidates for wedded bliss may be seen by all those who pay a fee of ten francs. Most of the portraits are believed to be bogus.

Mr. Stevens predicts the day when we can look down from the Rocky Mountains upon a hundred millions of happy people. Even then we will be far behind the Emperor of China, who can look down from any convenient mountain in his empire on four hundred millions of inhabitants.

Prince Alfred remarks concerning his visit to the colonies of the Southern hemisphere: "In Adelaide they robbed me, in Melbourne they mobbed me, in Sidney they shot me, but in Queensland they took me to Jondayon." Jondayon is a huge uninteresting plain where Alfred got "a second-rate feed" at an unseasonable hour, and slept in the railway station.

At one of the latest balls in Paris a lady, very beautiful, but the wife of an exceedingly jealous husband, asked a brave captain to dance with her. The gallant officer could not prevent an exclamation of astonishment. "What is the matter, Captain?" said the lady; "you know my husband is jealous, but so jealous that I am obliged to choose a partner who would not excite his favorite passion!"

A strange lady in New Haven, walking with an undergraduate of Yale, said: "How interesting and impressive are those memorial buildings; I have seen two or three; no windows—so still!" Student—"They are where the secret societies of college meet, I believe." "Why, I did not know that science had any secrets, since the sun so cheerfully lends his brightest rays to the photographer, and the ocean is not disturbed by the cable," the lady said. Student—"Ahem! Yes, ma-am."

An anchor dropped from the car of the balloon as it cut loose at New Bedford, Massachusetts, and striking a Taunton boy named Maltran, fractured his skull. It then caught in the clothing of two other boys, and carried them up about forty feet, when the aeronaut cut the line. They fell in some trees, and though taken up insensible will probably recover.

A paper hanger of Reubaix, France, fell a victim to his imprudence some short time back by going to his breakfast without first washing his hands after hadling some green papering. The inquest proved that death was caused by the introduction into the system of salts of copper, now so much used in the manufacture of green coloring ror paper.

A mirage was visible lately at Dover, England. The dome of the cathedral and Napoleon's Pillar at Boulogne were to be seen from the Crescent Walk by the naked eye, but with a telescope of ordinary power the entrance of the port, its lighthouse, its shipping, and the surrounding houses, the valley of the hill side of Capecure, and the little fishing village of Portel were distinctly visible; while on the eastern side the principal features of the country, the lighthouse of Cape Grinez, the adjacent windmill, numerous farms and villages, with their windows illuminated by the setting sun, stood out with extraordinary clearness. While these were under observation, a locomotive was seen to leave Boulogne and travel some miles in the Calais direction by its puffs and wreaths of white steam. Shortly after sunset the mirage subsided.

From Washington.

Washington, July 8.—The Senate Committee on Claims has reported in favor of allowing O. H. Cutler, of Hannibal, Missouri, $50,000 for cotton belonging to him and seized by General Grant at Lake Providence, Louisiana, in 1863, to be used in protecting boats that ran the blockade at Vicksburg. Cutler asked for $62,000.

The bill providing for the elections in Virginia, which passed the House unanimously this afternoon, was rendered necessary, because the time fixed by the late convention has gone by. The days fixed are the twelfth, fourteenth, and fifteenth of next month. General Stoneman and the Secretary of War, as well as General Grant, had recommended that provision be made for a separate vote on the stringent test oath in the new constitution, but the Reconstruction Committee did not see fit to adopt the suggestion. An effort will be made by the Senate to put this provision in the bill.

Washington, July 9.—The scene in the Senate late this afternoon, when Reverdy Johnson resigned, and took his leave preparatory to sailing for England, was quite touching. His last act was to carry through a bill giving $7000 for repairing Mount Vernon. He was so much affected when he rose to say farewell, that his colleague took the words and read them, after which Senators generally gathered around Mr. Johnson and bade him good bye.

Both Houses have passed a bill appropriating $47,000 to settle up the accounts of the late Isaac Newton, head of the Agriculture Bureau. He had bought seeds to this amount in excess of his appropriation, and one or two business firms would have been ruined but for the passage of this bill.

SMILE AND NEVER HEED ME.

BY CHARLES SWAIN.

Though, when other maids stand by,
I may deign thee no reply,
Turn not then away, and sigh—
Smile, and never heed me!
If our love, indeed, be such
As must thrill at every touch,
Why should others learn as much?
Smile, and never heed me!

Where's the use that they should know
If one's heart beat fast or slow?
Deepest love avoideth show—
Smile, and never heed me!
Let our hearts, like stars of night,
Snunning day's intrusive light,
Live but for each other's sight—
Smile, and never heed me!

Even if, with maiden pride,
I should bid thee quit my side,
Take this lesson for thy guide—
Smile, and never heed me!
But when stars and twilight meet,
And the dew is falling sweet,
And thou hears't my coming feet—
Then—thou then—mayst heed me.

LOCAL INTELLIGENCE.

Crops in Louisiana—Fatal Mule Epidemic.—On Sunday last this reporter visited the locality on the New Orleans and Jackson Railroad known as the pine woods. A short drive through the country in the vicinity of Amite City, soon revealed the situation. From Pontchatoula to Amite, a distance of twenty miles, the crops are suffering for want of rain. There has been no rain there worth mentioning for the period of about six weeks. The principal crops this season are corn and sweet potatoes. The latter is yet uninjured; but in many places the former is entirely parched, and will make nothing. There is some cotton to be seen along the line of railroad. It looks well, is kept clean, and there are no fears of the worm, as it is now too far advanced. The freedmen work well, and although we conversed with several rabid, fire-eating rebels, not one word was spoken at all derogatory of the fidelity and industry of the colored population. On the contrary, the general testimony is that the freed people conduct themselves well, and far beyond the expectations of their former masters. The colored man will work, the rebel press to the contrary notwithstanding, if he has any kind of inducement or prospect for fair dealing on the part of employers.

In addition to the discouraging crop prospects in the above mentioned locality, a more serious and much to be regretted calamity has befallen nearly every planter in St. Helena and Livingston parishes. A disease pronounced by experts as charbonne has broken out among the mules, horses, and cattle, which sweeps them off at a fearful rate. Scarcely any warning does this disease give, as a mule is never known to refuse food up to the moment of its death. Death ensues from strangulation caused by a swelling of the tonsils, which impedes respiration, and the animal often drops dead while feeding in the pasture. Seventy-one mules and about as many head of cattle have died within the past two weeks of this epidemic.

Deaths Last Week.—Dr. George W. Dirmeyer, Secretary of the Board of Health, reports that the whole number of interments in this city for the week ending Sunday morning were 89, of which 1 was drowned, 4 died of smallpox, 4 heart dis ease, 1 congestion of the brain, 1 intemperance, 1 rheumatism, 11 consumption, 4 pneumonia, 2 brain fever, 1 congestive fever, 1 scarlet fever, 2 typhoid fever, 1 common fever, 1 old age, and the balance various ordinary diseases. Forty-eight were males, 39 females, and 2 infants. Sixty-three were whites, 13 blacks, 6 mulattoes, and 7 not classified. Nineteen were under 1 year, 19 between 1 and 5, 3 between 5 and 10, 2 between 15 and 20, 12 between 20 and 30, 8 between 30 and 40, 10 between 40 and 50, 8 between 50 and 60, 3 between 60 and 70, 1 between 70 and 80, 2 between 80 and 90, 1 upward of 100, and 1 whose age was not reported.

Meeting of the New Board of Police Commissioners.—The Board was called to order by M. A. Southworth, President, at fifteen minutes before eight o'clock, all the members present. The President made the following report:

Gentlemen—I have the honor to inform you that since my last interview, about three o'clock Friday evening, with his honor Mayor Conway, he informed me that after a careful examination he was satisfied that the new police law was constitutional, and that the law was binding, and in force. He also stated that he recognized us as the successors of the former Board of Police Commissioners, and would to-morrow (Saturday) transfer to us the books and papers belonging to that Board, and that to-morrow (Saturday) he would give us a room for our meetings in the City Hall.

It was resolved that a committee of two be appointed to attend to the printing of 500 blank commissions.

It was resolved that the President be instructed to consult with the Attorney General of this State as to the duties and proceedings of this Board.

To the Honorable Board of Police Commissioners, City of New Orleans:

Gentlemen—I have the honor to report that there are eleven vacancies on the city police and one on the river police force.

Very respectfully,
J. J. WILLIAMSON, Chief of Police.

On recommendation of the Chief, the following supernumeraries were appointed to regular numbers: Matthew Bowles, Owen Collins, Darias Marshal.

The following persons were appointed supernumeraries: John Kline to the Fourth District; William L. Duperu to the First District; François Dede to the Second District; John T. Harris to the First District.

The Board then adjourned to meet this morning at ten o'clock.

Juvenile Sport—An Embarrassing Predicament.—Some boys yesterday on Camp street indulged in the popular and ancient amusement of attaching a tin pan to the caudal appendage of one of the canine species, which ran up the street at a fearful rate of speed, and in endeavoring to turn a street corner encountered, oh, horror! an elegantly-dressed lady, around whose understandings the string attached to the pan quickly wound. The lady screamed, the dog howled, and just as a witness to the scene, a small boy, was about to separate the parties, the dog broke loose, and made quick time down Poydras street. It would be difficult to determine which was the most alarmed party, the lady or the dog.

Death of Lieutenant G. W. Drake.—The city police has lost one of its best officers in the death of this gentleman. For about a year he has been on the force, but previous to that time he held a commission in the Corps d'Afrique as a lieutenant, although his title was brevet major, and was among the most efficient officers in the corps. He was of fine personal appearance, and a man of excellent habits, and had made many friends in this city. Being a member of the S. W. M., he was buried by that association. In the funeral cortege was a number of policemen and citizens, who mourn the demise of a soldier, an officer, and a citizen.

The Second Case of Yellow Fever.—We are indebted to Dr. George W. Dirmeyer, Secretary of the Board of Health, for the subjoined details of the second case of yellow fever in New Orleans this season. The death of this patient was reported on the fifth instant:

Jean Baeres, a native of France, aged nineteen years, and a resident of this city for the last six months, was taken ill with vomiting and fever on Sunday evening, the twenty-eighth ultimo, in a dairy on Carrollton avenue, and at seven o'clock P. M. on the following Tuesday was admitted to the asylum of the French Association. The attending physician, Dr. Fouatre, saw him at half past seven o'clock, and states in his report that he found him suffering with intense congestion of the brain and coma. His speech was difficult, and he could furnish him no information concerning himself. He had a high fever; pulse 120; respiration 34; gums engorged; tongue furred, red border; skin hot, with slight moisture. At eleven o'clock P. M. he vomited a black fluid, containing a substance resembling coffee grounds. On the following morning his symptoms were worse; pulse 150; coma; subsultus of the tendons; his extremities were cyanosed; suppression of urine. He catheterized the patient, and drew off a glassful of urine, which, with nitric acid, yielded a large coagulum of albumen. He died at three o'clock on Wednesday. His skin presented a light yellow tint.

New Orleans in Slices—A Barracks Street Dance Hall.—Most of those who visit New Orleans have probably heard of Barracks street—its gambling hells, its houses of prostitution, its assignation houses and dance halls. It was in front of one of the last named places that this reporter found himself a night or two since, whither he had wandered in search of information. From the outward appearance it is simply suggestive to a stranger of an ordinary coffeehouse or beer saloon, and it is only after entering a small door, which opens through a partition in the rear, that the character of the place becomes apparent to the visitor.

It was through this door that the reporter looked, and was about to step in, when he was pulled in by a couple of beings in human shape, who, from the dress alone, he judged were females, their appearance being simply obscene and vulgar in the extreme. Being naturally a little diffident, the reporter was somewhat embarrassed for the moment, but concentrating all his energies he gave a smile, and then a look of scorn, thinking, perhaps, one or the other might have the desired effect of causing his release from the clutches of the repulsive beings that surrounded him. But it was of no use. They had commenced to quarrel over him, and from the desperate pullings and tuggings this persecuted reporter was for a while subjected to he feared nothing less than a dislocated shoulder, or an arm pulled entirely off.

By a severe struggle and stoutly assuming the defensive he was freed at length from the embarrassing and disagreeable position. After being released from the grasp of these ferocious creatures the first thing he done was to beat a hasty retreat, and secure a position where he could look on undisturbed and unmolested. This was quite a difficult task, yet obtaining a seat in the bar-room within full view of the interior of the dance house, he began his observations.

The room was rudely and roughly furnished, the furniture consisting of four long yellow pine dining tables, three small round tables, four or five ordinary benches, capable of seating perhaps a dozen persons each, half a dozen chairs, and fifteen Amazonians, known as "Barracks street nymphs," the latter, of course, completing the embellishments and being the chief attraction to the customers of the establishment, who are principally sailors, vagrants, loafers, pimps, gamblers and thieves.

Seated on benches, chairs and tables were most of these courtezans. Others were lying down and some walking about, all indulging in the vilest and most disgusting language which the mind can conceive of, and such as can not well be repeated anywhere, certainly not in print. The various positions of these unfortunate women transcends description. Some were hugging and kissing men; others blackguarding, swearing, smoking, chewing, laughing, quarreling. Some were lying on benches, with an utter disregard of modesty, while their male companions were quite as immodestly bending over them. One woman was carrying around a small baby, and in answer to an inquiry of one of the men as to who its mother was, answered "A woman," and then commenced singing a vulgar song. Another female was quarreling loudly with a man about the drinks, resulting in a physical contest, in which neither party was materially damaged. Another woman was sitting on a chair with her feet crossed on a high table. Picture No. 2 was a woman lying flat on her back on a table with her knees elevated. She was dead drunk.

About nine o'clock dancing and drinking commenced, and after the manner of a country shindig, those who danced had to pay the fiddler. Between dances is a drink, and between drinks is a dance. They dance and drink and drink and dance until both parties are so drunk they can dance no more, and then they adjourn to another apartment to sleep off the drunk. If the man is without money he is turned into the street and shortly finds himself in the station-house. As long as a man once there has money he can not leave until he is bankrupt in purse as well as in morals. If he does not then leave voluntarily a fight is inevitable, and he is pitched out.

These dancehouses present as near as can be conceived pandemonium, the appearance of which can not be described in all its hideous aspects. These dens of iniqity should no longer be tolerated in our city.

"Vice is a monster of such hideous mien,
That to be hated needs but to be seen."

Dissatisfied Democrats.—We have been informed that considerable squealing has been heard for several days past among some German Democrats who are flatly and loudly dissatisfied because the new Street Commissioner has neglected to appoint any of their nationality on his pay rolls. We have been requested to say something concerning this "outrage," but as the funeral is none of ours, we prefer to be a silent looker-on, and think of the verse—

"When hungry Democrats stoop to folly,
And find too late," etc.

A Paris correspondent writes: "What would you say were I to tell you we have in a village near Paris a woman who has a daughter twenty years older than she is, and a grand-daughter twelve months older than she is? I will tell you how it came to pass. She is nineteen years old. She is the second wife of a man who is sixty-five, who had by his first spouse a daughter now forty, a wife, and the mother of a young girl in her twentieth year."

LATEST BY TELEGRAPH.

WASHINGTON, July 11.—The Secretary of the Treasury has issued an order enforcing the eight hour law in the department.

Hon. Reverdy Johnson has received his instructions, and leaves Baltimore by the next Bremen steamer.

Internal revenue receipts for the week $3,500,000.

The President has issued a proclamation that papers have been received from Florida and North Carolina announcing the adoption of the fourteenth article of the Constitution.

After quoting the law and circumstances, the proclamation announces the ratification by the Legislature of North Carolina in the manner set forth in the preamble.

NEW YORK, July 11.—The following is Governor Seymour's response to the committee of the National Democratic Convention:

Mr. Chairman and Gentlemen of the Committee—I thank you for the courteous terms in which you have communicated to me the action of the Democratic National Convention. I have no words adequate to express my gratitude for the good will and kindness which that body has shown to me. Its nomination was unsought and unexpected. It was my ambition to take an active part, from which I am now excluded, in the great struggle going on for the restoration of good government, of peace and prosperity to our country.

But I have been caught up by the whelming tide that is bearing us on to a great political change, and I find myself unable to resist its pressure. You have also given to me a copy of the resolutions put forth by the convention, showing its position upon all the great questions which now agitate the country. As the presiding officer of that convention I am familiar with their scope and import, and as one of its members I am a party to their terms. They are in accord with my views, and I stand upon them in the contest upon which we are now entering, and I shall strive to carry them out in the future wherever I may be placed in public or private life. I congratulate you, and all Conservative men who seek to restore order, peace, prosperity, and good government to our land, upon the evidences everywhere shown that we are to triumph at the next election.

Those who are politically opposed to us flattered themselves that there would be discord in our councils. They mistook the uncertainties of our views as to the best methods of carrying out our purposes for differences of opinion with regard to those purposes. They mistook an intense anxiety to do no act which should not be wise and judicious for a spirit of discord. But during the lengthened proceedings and earnest discussions of the convention, there has prevailed an entire harmony of intercourse, a patient forbearance, and a self-sacrificing spirit which are the same tokens of a coming victory. Accept for youselves, gentlemen, my wishes for your future welfare and happiness. In a few days I will answer the communication you have just handed me by letter, as is the customary form.

I accept the platform of resolutions passed by the late Democratic Convention, and I accept their nomination with feelings of the most profound gratitude. And, sir, I thank you for the very kind manner in which you have conveyed to me the decision of the Democratic National Convention. I accept the nomination with the feeling that your nomination for the Presidency is one which will carry us to certain victory, and because I believe that that nomination is the most appropriate nomination that could have been made by the Democratic Convention.

The contest which we wage is for the restoration of Constitutional government, and it is appropriate that we should make the contest under the lead of one who has given his life to the maintenance of Constitutional government. We make this contest for the restoration of those great principles of government, which belong to our race, and my fellow-citizens, it is most proper that we should select for our leader a man not from military life, but one who has devoted himself to civil pursuits; one who has given himself to the study, to the understanding of our constitution and its maintenance, with all the force of reason and judgment.

My fellow-citizens: I have said that the contest before us was one for the restoration of our government; it is also for the restoration of our race. It is to prevent the people of one race from being exiled from their homes—exiled from the government which they formed and created for themselves and their children, and to prevent them from being driven out in exile, or trodden under foot by an inferior and a semibarbarous race. In this contest we shall have the sympathies of every man who is worthy to belong to the white race.

What civilized people on earth would refuse to associate with themselves in all the rights, and honors, and dignities of their country such men as Lee and Johnson? What civilized country on earth would fail to do honor to those who fighting for an erroneous cause, yet distingushed themselves by a gallantry never surpassed? In that contest for which they are sought to be disfranchised and to be exiled from their homes, they proved themselves worthy to be our peers. [At this point there was ominous silence, followed by repressed clapping of hands and faint cheers.]

My fellow citizens, it is not my purpose to make any lengthened address, but simply to express my gratitude for the great and distinguished honor which has been conferred upon me, and now from my heart I reiterate the words of thanks that fell from my lips when I arose.

LONDON, July 11.—The comments of the press are generally unfavorable regarding the Democratic nominations.

HAVANA, July 11.—Mexican news of the fourth instant has been received.

Gutierez has been sentenced to ten years imprisonment.

Angel, a brother of Miramon, with papers favoring reactionists, had been captured near Puebla, and has been executed.

Cepeda has been installed as Governor of Yucatan.

POTTSVILLE, Pa., July 11.—A fight between the strikers and the authorities seems inevitable.

CINCINNATI, July 11.—J. B. Woodruff, news editor of the Cincinnati Times, died instantly to-day from sun stroke.

WASHINGTON, July 11.—The Senate passed Mr. Edmunds' bill regulating the electoral college.

The House has adopted amendments to the military bill, forbidding brevets during peace and reducing the number of major generals to three, to be selected by General Grant, the rest to be mustered out by January.

WASHINGTON, July 13.—House—Under the regular Monday call the following bills were introduced:

Allowing citizens to bring suits against railroad companies in Federal courts.

Constructing a railroad from Washington to Cincinnati.

The Freedmen's Bureau bill passed by the Senate making General Howard's commissionership independent, passed with an amendment making discontinuance of the Bureau absolute in the represented States on the first of January, 1869, except as regards education. The bill goes to the Senate for concurrence.

The House went into Committee of the Whole on the tariff bill by a vote of 84 to 57, which was regarded as a test vote, and indicating the intention of a majority to modify the tariff.

Two hours debate ensued, when the House adjourned to seven o'clock this evening.

Senate—Fifteen petitions from different army officers asking an increase of pay were presented.

The funding bill was resumed, and discussed at great length.

Mr. Morton, of Indiana, and Mr. Sherman, of Ohio, favored payment of the bonds, unless otherwise stipulated, in legal tenders.

The question elicited much bitterness, and the discussion continued to adjournment.

WASHINGTON, July 13.—Judge Fisher, from Mississippi, reports to the Republican committee that Mississippi has gone Democratic by seven thousand, but he claims that he can prove that 15,000 votes were obtained by fraud.

There is a Radical committee here from Virginia urging changes in the recently passed election bill as that will open registration. A bill according with their views will probably be introduced in the Senate.

Commander James F. Miller, for forty-two years in the service, is dead.

A delegation from Atlanta has arrived to urge Congress to remove political disabilities from Radical members of the Georgia Legislature.

There is considerable talk and some positive assertion of a third party candidate for the Presidency. General Fremont, General Cary, and John Quincy Adams are prominently named. Chief Justice Chase declines to co-operate with the movement.

WASHINGTON, July 13.—The Senate had a brief executive session to-day; did nothing.

In the House to-day Mr. Washburne, of Illinois, favored paying the bonds in greenbacks. Mr. Eliot, of Massachusetts, spoke in favor of taxing the bonds.

Nearly all the white men connected with the Fire Department have resigned in consequence of negroes being appointed in the companies. In consequence of this action the rates of insurance have advanced twenty-five per cent, and some agents refuse risks until hearing from main offices. The old superintendent of the fire alarm left the office in good order this morning, but his successor soon got the wires out of order.

RICHMOND, July 13.—General Stoneman has appointed James S. Tipton judge of the fifteenth circuit, vice Fulton, resigned.

ATLANTA, July 13.—O'Neal's resolution to investigate the eligibility of each member is the only business now before the House. The investigating committee were in session the entire afternoon. Questions asked: "Did you hold office prior to the war, taking an oath to support the Constitution of the United States?" "Did you give aid and comfort to the rebellion?" "Have your disabilities been removed?" No Senators excluded so far.

CHARLESTON, July 13.—General Canby issued an order to-day directing the military officers in the State to cease exercising any civil authority when the President issues his proclamation of the adoption of the constitutional amendment, at which time the prisoners under their charge will be turned over to the civil authorities. All prisoners serving out sentences will be held. Writs of habeas corpus from United States courts are to be responded to, but to writs from State courts reply is to be made that the prisoner is held under authority of the laws of the United States, and jurisdiction is exclusively in United States courts.

COLUMBIA, July 13.—Legislature.—A bill passed its second reading validating the laws of the provisional government of the State.

A bill was introduced for the preservation of homesteads.

The election of United States Senators will take place to-morrow.

MONTGOMERY, July 13.—Another of the Congressional governments was set on foot to-day.

The Senate met at 12 M., and elected officers.

The fourteenth amendment was ratified, and the Senate adjourned until to-morrow.

In the House officers were elected and the fourteenth amendment ratified.

About five o'clock, in pursuance of orders from General Shepperd, two pieces of artillery were brought to the Capitol Hill, and salutes fired in honor of the ratification of the fourteenth article.

The bill temporarily supplying vacancies in the executive department passed.

The bill authorizing a temporary loan on three per cent certificates came up, leading to another wild discussion on the finances, Mr. Trumbull favoring keeping the gold in the treasury down to forty millions, Mr. Morton favoring investing the gold in redemption of legal tenders as an important step toward the resumption of specie payments. Mr. Morton's amendment to this effect was lost 7 to 30. Bill postponed, and the funding bill resumed.

House—After local business affecting the District of Columbia the House resumed the Alaska appropriation, which passed by 114 to 42, with a rider declaring the right of the House to participate in making treaties.

The bill authorizing temporary executive appointments passed, when, after further District business, the House adjourned.

WASHINGTON, July 14.—General Meade has transferred Florida to the civil authority.

It is stated that General Howard is preparing to reduce the number of employes of the Freedmen's Bureau.

A full cabinet meeting was held to-day, and an unusual number of persons visited the White House.

Vallandigham visited the House to-day.

The Senate had a brief executive session, but nothing of importance was done.

Both Houses are in session to-night.

The Committee on Reconstruction is called for to-morrow to hear the Mississippi Radical delegation regarding the alleged election frauds.

Senator Doolittle has written a letter strongly discouraging the third party movement.

Well informed parties think there is no real base for the third party rumors.

WASHINGTON, July 14.—Chief Justice Chase declared to-day to a Western friend that while he could not accord personally with the resolution against the reconstruction acts, and believed that the present constitutions ought to stand till changed by the people of each State all voting, yet he was a Democrat, a States rights Democrat, and in full sympathy with the Democratic party. He also spoke very highly of Horatio Seymour.

The President has recognized August Reichard Consul of Mecklenburg, Schwerin.

The thermometer rose to 103 to-day, and horses were sunstruck.

Mr. Vallandigham attracted great attention at his hotel and in the House.

NEW YORK, July 14.—It is estimated that twenty to thirty deaths from sunstroke occurred here and in Brooklyn to-day. Fourteen deaths from sunstroke were reported by the police between twelve last night and eleven this morning. Numbers of persons prostrated by the heat were taken to their homes. Since noon to-day twelve cases occurred, of which two were immediately fatal. Yesterday was the hottest thirteenth of July for ten years. To-day the thermometer was lower, the highest point being ninety-seven.

COLUMBIA, S. C., July 14.—The Legislature to-day elected Thos. J. Robertson, United States Senator, for the short term ending 1871. The Senate on fifth ballot, elected T. H. Sawyer, Collector of Internal Revenue at Charleston, Senator for the long term, the result in the House is as yet undecided.

The Lieutenant Governor was inaugurated to-day.

RALEIGH, July 14.—The General Assembly legislative proceedings to-day were unimportant.

According to a caucus resolution of last night, the Assembly to-day elected John Pool, of Pasquotank, Senator for the long term, and General J. C. Abbott, of New Hampshire, for the short term. The contest in caucus between General Abbott and Mr. Dockery made the matter for some time doubtful. Both Senators are from the East.

Governor Holden yesterday, without notice, appointed a new board of commissioners for this city, thus supplanting without law the municipal authorities. They believing that the Governor had transcended his powers, referred the case to able counsel, Messrs. B. F. Moore, Col. E. Haywood, and Judge Merriman of this city, who were unanimously of the opinion that the Governor was acting without law or authority, upon which the city authorities notified the new Board that they should not give place to them until they were legally elected or appointed.

It is rumored that Governor Holden has called on General Canby for military support to enforce his order.

No one is disposed to resist lawful authority, but Governor Holden is doing several things for which the people believe he has no authority. It is with them a question of duty whether to submit longer to what is not law, or to test the question of unlawful authority, no matter by whom assumed.

MONTGOMERY, Ala., July 14.—The Legislature of Alabama, that met by order of General Meade yesterday, contains about thirty colored members. The Senate doorkeeper, and the doorkeeper, Sergeant-at-Arms and Chaplain of the House, are colored men.

To-day Governor Smith was inaugurated in the presence of the two Houses. He sent in a message which is in the main more conservative than was expected. He recommends in strong language the removal of all disabilities from the people of the State, and is bitterly opposed to any disfranchisement except for crime.

LONDON, July 14.—The son of King Theodore has arrived in England.

Mr. Bancroft has opened negotiations at Carlsruhe.

The Queen has signed the Scotch and Irish reform and boundary bill.

At a review in Madrid the troops were warned against making any demonstrations. The country is quiet.

WASHINGTON, July 15—Senate.—The bill amending various bills relating to the navy and marine corps passed without amendment.

A bill reducing the military to a peace establishment was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The appropriation bill was resumed.

The Conference Committee's report on the tax bill was adopted.

Executive session. Adjourned.

House—A committee of five was appointed to investigate how the House contingent fund of 1867 was expended.

Mr. Heaton, representative from North Carolina, was seated.

The bill removing disabilities from certain parties, as amended by the Senate passed.

The Conference Committee's report on the tax bill was adopted. The Senate having previously adopted it, it goes to the President. The committee struck out all relating to banks. Storekeepers are to be paid by the United States. Special agents are limited to twenty-five. Mineral oils are on the same footing with other manufactures. Spirits must be removed from bond within nine months. Wholesale liquor dealers pay one per cent. In other respects the bill remains as passed by the House. Recess.

WASHINGTON, July 15.—William M. Evarts has been confirmed as Attorney General.

George W. Summers has been nominated as postmaster at Augusta, Georgia.

Secretary Seward reports that twenty-three States have ratified the fourteenth article, from which Ohio and New Jersey have receded. He also reports that Arkansas, North Carolina, and Florida have given notice of ratification by alleged Legislatures of those States.

Mr. Schenck estimates the loss by removing the tax on mineral oils at $2,000,000. Provisions in the tax bill will dispense with about 1700 inspectors.

Internal revenue receipts to-day $558,000.

The third party movement is assuming small proportions. Eleven persons only are actively interesting themselves in the matter, none of whom were delegates. It is stated, however, that the President was approached by a small delegation, who demanded whether the President would support Seymour. The President quietly asked whether Seymour would support the administration.

The President complains to personal friends that had the Democratic party given him cordial support he was prepared at any time to drive the Radicals to the wall most effectually, but he is now and has heretofore been left to work comparatively alone. There is no doubt in well informed circles that the President discourages the third party phantom and will cordially support Seymour and Blair—in his own way, however.

Fifteen Radical Mississippians appeared before the reconstruction committee to-day demanding the exclusion of Rankin, Chickasaw, Marshall, Carroll, and DeSoto counties from count, thereby carrying the constitution and electing a Radical State ticket and Congressmen.

Heat increasing.

ATLANTA, July 15.—Resolutions passed in the Senate to inquire into the eligibility of officers of the Senate.

Mr. Candler offered a resolution requesting the Governor to furnish the Senate such papers or documents affecting the eligibility of Senators as he may have in his possession.

This resolution was strongly opposed by the Republicans as disrespectful to the Governor. The Democrats disclaimed any intention of disrespect.

A disposition to delay matters was apparent. The resolution was adopted, when the Senate adjourned till Friday.

The trial of the Columbus prisoners was resumed to-day, Hon. A. H. Stephens having recovered sufficiently to attend to the duties as leading counsel on the part of the defense. Dr. Styles, of Merriweather county, and brother of the former minister to Austria, was sworn. He testified that at 5 or 6 P. M. on the day of Ashburn's death he met William Duke at the residence of his father, about forty miles northeast of Columbus.

AUGUSTA, July 15.—This is the hottest day of the season. Thermometer ninety-eight degrees in the shade.

The Democrats anticipate that a sufficient number of their party will be ejected from the Legislature to give a majority in each House for the Radicals.

There is much indignation and denunciation of Bullock and Meade by the Democratic press in consequence of their recommending the Legislature to purge itself of members ineligible under the third section of the fourteenth article. It is believed Congress will remove disabilities from all Radical members.

COLUMBIA, July 15.—There were five ballots by the Legislature to-day for United States Senator for the long term. No result. The vote stands: Mackey 62; Sawyer 50; French 24; Campbell (Democrat) 16. Necessary to a choice 76.

The Governor has canceled the bond of the Republican Treasurer, because it was found insufficient.

POTTSVILLE, Pa., July 15.—A number of the strikers have arrived, stopped seven works, and are in line marching for others.

JACKSON, Miss., July 15.—Major Tyler, of General Gillem's staff, left here this morning for Washington, taking with him the official returns of the recent Mississippi election.

PHILADELPHIA, July 15.—Laborers generally have suspended work on account of the heat.

LONDON, July 15.—The House of Commons reported favorably on purchasing a suitable Irish residence for the Prince of Wales.

HAVANA, July 15.—The cholera is disappearing.

WASHINGTON, July 11—Senate.—An additional Freedmen's Bureau bill has been introduced, continuing Gen. Howard in office. In case of death or resignation the Secretary of War may nominate, and the President appoint a successor, with the advice and consent of the Senate. A vacancy occurring during the recess of the Senate shall be filled by temporary appointment. Functionaries of the Bureau shall be appointed by the Secretary of War on Gen. Howard's nomination.

The Senate resumed the funding bill.

The electoral college bill amendment was concurred in, and goes to the President.

Adjourned.

House—The army reduction bill was resumed and amended, reducing the number of major generals to three and brigadier generals to six, to take effect March 31; selections to be made by the President after March 4, regardless of seniority. Quartermaster, adjutant, and surgeon generals to be reduced to the rank of colonel of cavalry. All staff officers of departments to be reduced one grade of rank and numbers reduced one-half; selections to be made by the Commanding General.

The bill regulating the electoral college passed with an amendment and goes back to the Senate.

Adjourned

A NEW GLEE BOOK.

THE GREETING.

A collection of Glees, Quartets, Choruses, Part-Songs, etc. By L. O. Emerson, author of "The Jubilate," "Harp of Judah," "Golden Wreath," "Merry Chimes," etc.

The contents of this work are for the most part NEW. A large number of valuable pieces have been contributed by Mr. L. H. Southard, whose name is a sufficient guarantee of their excellence. The marked features of the collection are originality, brilliancy, and variety; and it will be found upon careful examination that there is no glee book now before the public that in every particular will prove so completely satisfactory to musical societies and conventions, conservatories, clubs, and amateur singers. Price $1 38. Mailed post-paid.

Carmina Collegensia:

A Complete Collection of the Songs of the American Colleges, with Pianoforte Accompaniments; to which is added a Compendium of College History, Collected and Edited by H. R. WAITE.

This is the most extensive Collection of Student Songs presented to the public. Every college in the United States having been solicited to contribute to its pages, nearly a thousand songs were received, from which great care was taken to select those most valuable in reference to quality, permanency, and general interest; only such being used as possessed intrinsic merit, or cast light upon some peculiar college custom.

Prices: In cloth, emblematically embossed, neat, and durable, $2 25. Superior edition, on extra paper, full cloth, emblematically embossed, gilt edge, $3.

Mailed, postpaid.

THE GERMANIA LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY, established in 1860, and based upon the most approved principles of Life Insurance security, presents its claims for consideration, believing that its solid foundation already secured by the faithful and efficient management of its officers and Board of Directors will give it the preference above all other similar institutions.

It is purely Mutual, as the net profits are distributed among the parties insured, the interest of the capital stock being only five per cent according to its charter.

It assumed the system of cash payments at the commencement of its existence, and maintained it faithfully until now, and promises the same for the future, thereby securing to policy holders the full amount for which they are insured. The advantage of this system over the half cash and half note system is patent to every careful observer, but will be more fully illustrated by the following statement and table:

If a person of thirty years of age insures his life for the amount of $1000 in one of the credit companies, and pays a premium of $28 30 per year, with a note for half of the premium, then by means of this note and interests thereon the amount will become less and less in the following proportions:

| | |
|---|---|
| After 10 years the $1000 will amount to | $887 44 |
| After 15 years the $1000 will amount to | 795 28 |
| After 20 years the $1000 will amount to | 666 02 |
| After 25 years the $1000 will amount to | 484 73 |
| After 30 years the $1000 will amount to | 250 47 |
| After 33 years the $1000 will amount to | 32 53 |
| After 34 years the $1000 will amount to | Nothing. |

So that after a lapse of 34 years the whole amount will be eaten up, notwithstanding the parties insured paid their money in good faith.

The large dividend of 40 per cent declared last January is evidence of the care and success with which the Managers have conducted the enlarged and rapidly increasing interests of the Company, and vouches for its future brilliant and permanent prosperity.

Parties contemplating an assurance on their lives will do well to examine the status of this Company, every facility for which will be given by the

A CHANGE OF THE MOON.

A plain clever man is my neighbor Gray,
And we often take counsel together,
He lives in a farm-house over the way,
And is wise in respect to the weather;
He watches all signs, night, morning, and noon,
But pins his great faith on a change in the moon.

In the dull drizzly May, when the signs were all bad,
And day after day it kept raining,
When the farmers were sad, and the women were mad,
And all the wide world were complaining;
Farmer Gray went on piping the very same tune:
"It will never clear off till a change of the moon."

From icebergs and isles of the ocean,
The moon had changed thrice, while the storm kept along,
But my neighbor still stuck to his notion:
At length it cleared up, near the coming of June,
Two days and a half from a change of the moon!

In the long summer drought, when the springs run dry,
Not a sign of a rain-cloud appearing,
Neighbor Gray, who knew the wherefore and why,
Spoke out, and his accents were cheering,
"We are bound to have different weather soon,
For to-morrow, you know, there's a change of the moon."

I sit by his fire, on a sharp winter night,
When the glass below zero is ranging,
My neighbor instructs me with honest delight,
(For his faith in the moon is unchanged),
That a thaw will set in by Saturday noon,
For just at that time comes a change in the moon.

Heat and cold, wet and dry, or whatever the grief,
Under which our poor earth may be lying,
Neighbor Gray knows the source whence must come relief;
No use of this groaning and sighing:
He tells all he meets that the change will come soon,
"We must wait my dear friends, till a change of the moon."

And passes their doings unheeded,
Still he holds by the old philosophical rule,
To name no more causes than needed;
And as one is enough, the rest let us prune,

Correspondence from Washington City.

The Young Men's Christian Association held its late anniversary in Detroit. To invest the occasion with all possible religious interest an arrangement was proposed to celebrate the "Lord's Supper," but it failed as an item in the programme, as the "Baptist Brethren" were largely represented, who, it was presumed, could not partake of the Eucharist in a mixed assembly. It is not our purpose to hold the brethren above named responsible for the exclusion of these solemnities from the anniversary services, for it does not appear that they had been consulted; we only remark upon it as one of the anomalies of the occasion. But could any feature in the arrangement have been more appropriate? The hallowed symbols of atonement of faith in its power and efficacy to be received by members of different denominations who profess to be all "one in Christ the Savior of all" would indeed have answered the description "how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity." At the Lord's table the Lord's people should assemble; where can denominational distinction be forgotten so appropriately as beneath the gory wounds of the "Lord of glory who gave his life a ransom for all." The object of this associa is to bring the thoughtless worldling to the cross where his burden shall fall, and he receive a new name and new life; and for this grand end different religious persuasions unite and labor. What a burlesque on the Christian name to carry the Shiboleth of party into such an association.

There may have been another barrier to the arrangement under review. A High Church Protestant Episcopalian may have stood ready to object to mingling with unordained ministers. The Baptist retorts, You have not been baptized! But here comes the Unitarian knocking at the door of the aasociation, and is denied admission. He will receive the elements of the Eucharist, but they are denied to him because his faith does not embrace all the attributes of the Redeemer, as understood by orthodox churches. He accepts the Scriptures as a divine revelation, and adores Christ as therein revealed according to his understanding; he proposes to labor to accomplish the objects of the association, acknowledging in universal brotherhood in the Savior. Now on what ground is he rejected? On account of doctrine? If so, is his doctrine more repugnant to Christian unity than the other two, both of whom deny the image of God by denying the brotherhood of Christ, except as united to him by themselves.

We simply state the case, but do not defend it. The object of the association is union of Christian effort to secure Christian practice. The use of the sacrament of the supper is a part of christian practice, but according to the spirit of the arrangement under review, the practice must not obtain in the association. When "shall the watchmen see eye to eye!"

The camp meeting proposed to be held as a union between the churches of Washington and Baltimore has not received from the latter city the support hoped for, but the meeting will be held about the middle of August, and will no doubt be large enough to command respect, and we earnestly hope to secure success. The conversion of sinners to God is the only proper measure of success attending a camp meeting. This was the original object, and should be held sacredly in view. Still we may defend them on other reasonable grounds. They are better health restorers than the vast majority of watering places, so generally the resort as well as the annoyance of invalids. I have attended from one to eight per annum for forty-four years, and have never known but one or two deaths to occur at those meetings, which were attended by thousands. MORDECAI.

P. S.—In last week's letter Mr. Senator Fessenden was unwittingly misrepresented by being classed with those who, prior to impeachment, voted with the majority on those questions on which impeachment was based. Mr. Fessenden voted with the minority, and hence the inconsistency implied in the letter does not apply to him. M.

Prejudice.

NEW ORLEANS, July 19, 1868.

MR. EDITOR:

Prejudging -- judging beforehand, judging before one knows anything about the object, person, or opinion. Judging of a thing by one of its qualities, of a person by the style or texture of the dress, of an opinion by a partial view, or, perhaps, no view at all of the subject—this is prejudice.

There are some people who gain knowledge by slow degrees and constant application; and others who were born wise, who never learned anything simply because they knew it all before; who never wish to investigate any new idea, because their mind is already "made up."

Now this prejudice, which generally belongs to the last mentioned class, is like a five rail fence across their path to advancement, and what is worse, the rails are all wedged into the posts, and a man must stand with the ax of truth and make a great many hard knocks before he can start the wedges so as to get a bar down and let a new idea into such souls. And woe betide them if too great a rush of ideas comes in at once; they will either put up the bars indignantly and reject the whole, or like a forest tree, when its fellows are all cut away from it, be uprooted by a slight wind.

Their old ideas are driven out, and the soil of their minds, from long neglect of plow and harrow, and a want of rotation of crops, has become too much exhausted to sustain the new truths of universal education and liberty, and germinate and bring to maturity a fruitful crop of loyalty to the Union. Hence they are unable to digest the new ideas, and apply the truth contained therein to practical life.

In this age of steam and lightning, when the mental and moral world, like the physical one, is covered with a network of railways and telegraphs—when progress, liberty, and universal education are the watchwords printed on every wrapper, labeled on every bottle, stamped into every cake of soap, pasted onto every urchin's tattered banner, and emblazoned on every flag which flaps its folds from mast or tower, when progress and justice to all men irrespective of nation or color is the sum total of every thought and action, would it not be well for opponents of progress to postpone their decisions, and when this train of liberty, universal education, and justice comes rolling in to meet it at the freight depot with the sieve of investigation?

'Tis quite time we had a mental customhouse, and reasonable duties imposed on some of the freight.

Reason, conscience, and justice are excellent customhouse officers, especially if they have been well used. They are not afraid to "overhaul" packages and trunks. If a box comes marked education, equality before the law, universal suffrage irrespective of race or color, they open it as soon as if marked, "This is a white man's government, slavery, no education for the negro, no rights for the negro that white men are bound to respect," and apply the test of investigation.

'Tis a great mistake that investigation will make men all fools or knaves.

Respectfully,
FREDERICK K. HYDE.

The Love of Christ.

BY REV. E. DAVIES.

It Constraineth us, because we thus judge that if one died for all then were all dead. The love of Christ! A sea without bottom or shore, a river without beginning or end. This love shed abroad in the hearts of the apostles constrained them. That is, actuated, incited, inspired, or impelled them to labor for the salvation of souls, to brave all dangers, make all sacrifices, run all risks, and count not their lives dear unto them. By the power of this love they were able to turn the world upside down, and fill not only Jerusalem and Judea, but all the world with their doctrine. Without temples, without wealth, without secular or political power they went on from conquering to conquer till they numbered their converts not only in Rome, but in the palace of Cesar. This love inspired the hearts of the reformers and martyrs, and led them to do, to dare, and to die for the souls of men.

This love of Christ sustains the missionary of the cross in his self-sacrificing toil. See the sainted Judson and his three devoted wives, actuated by this love, with their awful sufferings among the wilds of India. An Indian missionary said: "I could bear to be torn limb from limb if I could only hear one Indian cry out, 'God be merciful to me a sinner.'" Such was the love of Christ in the hearts of the Moravian missionaries when they were about to start for Greenland, that when told that they could find no wood there to build houses with they replied. "Then we will dig in the ground and live there." This is the burning love that every minister of Christ should have to give him the right temper for the study, for the pulpit, and for pastoral work. Then he can plead with men publicly, and from house to house. What is learning in a minister without love? it is like coals without fire, or like gunpowder without the spark. The learned John Smith said: "I am resolved to lay aside all other studies, and to travail in the salvation of men."

Eloquence can never take the place of love. The devoted Summerfield, the flaming Payson, would have failed without this love. So it would be with the popular ministers of this day, such as Spurgeon, Punshon, Beecher, or Simpson. This love helps the minister to melt down the opposition of the human heart, and will not rest without success. The author of "Allen's Claim" was infinitely and insatiably greedy for the conviction and the salvation of sinners, and to this end he poured out his very heart and soul in prayer and preaching. Bunyan said: "In my preaching I could not be satisfied unless some fruit did appear in my work." Matthew Henry said: "I would think it greater happiness to gain one soul to Christ than mountains of gold and silver to myself." Dr. Doddridge wrote to a friend: "I long for the conversion of souls more sensibly than for anything else. Methinks I could not only labor but die for it with pleasnre."

This love of souls would cure many of the toils and hardships of the itinerancy, and make us sympathize with the afflictions of Christ, and partake of the same, so we could carry out the great work of redemption.

This would mightily help the local preachers, class leaders, Sabbath school teachers, and other laborers for God and souls. Who could say:

"The love of Christ doth me constrain
To seek the wandering souls of men,
With cries, entreaties, tears to save,
And snatch them from a gaping grave."

Dear reader, hast thou this love burning in thy heart? If not, be much in prayer, for God will fill thy soul, and fit thee for usefulness here and for glory hereafter.

"Not Lost, but Gone Before."

The sun shone softly down upon the Hillside cemetery, where Mr. Bell and his children were standing amid the fresh clover, strewing a new made grave with roses and violets from their garden. It was only a little mound, and the weeping mother sat at its head, mourning for her youngest born.

"Papa," said Arthur, "where is heaven that my little brother has gone to? It is not up in the sky, for I can't see anything there." The little boy looked sorrowfully up into the far-off blue, and then turned to his father for a reply.

"Heaven is not in sight, Arthur," answered his father. "We can not tell where it is. It might be very near without our being able too see it with our eyes.

"But, papa," said Helen, "if heaven is near isn't it strange that Willie can not come back just one minute to tell us he is happy?"

"Yes, dear," said Mr. Bell, "it is all strange to us. We can only trust our Father in heaven about it, and wait till we go to him. If we love him here we shall be where he is hereafter, and with dear little Willie, too, I think."

They lingered a while beside the precious grave, and then turned homeward through the pleasant cemetery grounds. As they passed a little pond fringed with flowering shrubs Mr. Bell said to his wife, "Anna, let us sit down beside this pond while I tell the children that parable of Mrs. Gatty's which sister Alice read to us—'Not lost, but gone before.'"

"O yes, said their mother, "I should like to have you."

Mr. Bell placed his wife upon a rustic seat and sat down by her side, with Arthur on his knee and Helen at his feet.

"This parable," said he, "tries to teach us how near heaven may be to earth, and how the holy people may remember us and know where we are, and yet not be able to return or speak to us. I will tell you all I can remember of it.

"Once there was a beautiful pond in the centre of a wood. Trees and flowers were growing about it, birds sang and insects hummed about it. Under the water, too, there was a little world of beings. Fishes and little creatures that live in water filled it full of busy life. Among them was the grub of a dragon fly, with a large family of brothers and sisters."

"What is a dragon fly?" interrupted Arthur.

"It's just a darning needle," said Helen.

"Yes, you children call it a darning needle," said their father; "that beautiful swift creature, with a long glittering blue and green body and brilliant gauzy wings. Now, before he became a dragon fly, darting through the air and flashing back the sunshine, he was a dark scaly grub, and lived down in the forest pond. He and his family were born there, and knew no other world. They spent their time in roving in and out among the plants at the bottom of the water in search of food.

"But one day this grub began to talk among his mates about the frog. 'Every little while,'' said he, 'the frog goes to the side of the water and disappears. What becomes of him when he leaves this world? What can there be beyond?'

"'You idle fellow,' replied another grub, 'attend to the world you are in and leave the "beyond" to those that are there!' So said all his relations, and the curious grub tried to forget his questionings. But he could not do it; so one day when he heard a heavy splash in the water and saw a great yellow frog swim to the bottom, he screwed up his courage to ask the frog himself.

"'Honored frog,' said he, approaching that dignified personage as meekly as possible, 'permit me to inquire what there is beyond the world?'

"'What world do you mean?' said the frog, rolling his goggle eyes.

"'This world, of course; our world,' answered the grub.

"'This pond, you mean,' remarked the frog, with a sneer.

"'I mean the place we live in; I call it the world,' cried the grub with spirit.

"'Do you, indeed!' rejoined the frog. 'Then what is the place you don't live in; the "beyond" the world, eh?'

"'That is just what I want you to tell me,' replied the grub, briskly.

"'Well, then,' said froggy, 'it is dry land.'

"'Can one swim about there?' asked the grub.

"'Dry land is not water, little fellow,' chuckled the frog; 'that is just what it is not.'

"'But tell me what it is,' persisted the grub.

"'Well, then, you troublesome creature,' cried the frog, 'dry land is something like the bottom of this pond, only it is not wet, because there is no water.'

"'Really,' said the grub; 'what is there, then?'

"'They call it air,' replied the frog. 'It is the nearest approach to nothing.'

"Finding that he could not make the grub understand, the good-natured frog offered to take him on his back up to the dry land, where the grub might see for himself. The grub was delighted. He dropped himself down upon the frog's back and clung closely to him while he swam up to the rushes at the water's edge. But the moment he emerged into the air the grub fell reeling back into the water, panting and struggling for life. 'Horrible!' cried he, as soon as he had rallied a little; 'there is nothing but death beyond this world. The frog deceived me. I can not go there, at any rate.'

"Then the grub told his story to his friends, and they talked a great deal about the mystery, but could arrive at no explanation.

"That evening the yellow frog appeared at the bottom of the pond.

"'You here!' cried the startled grub. 'You never left this world at all, I suppose.'

"'Clumsy creature,' replied the frog, 'why did you not cling to my back? When I landed on the grass you were gone.'

"The grub related his death-like struggle, and added: 'Since there is nothing but death beyond this world, all your stories about going there must be false.'

"'I forgive your offensive remarks,' said the frog, gravely, 'because I have learned to-day the reason of your tiresome curiosity. As I was hopping about in the grass on the edge of the pond I saw one of your race slowly climbing up the stalk of a reed. Suddenly there appeared a rent in his scaly coat, and after many struggles there came out of it one of those radiant dragon flies that float in the air I told you of. He lifted his wings out of the carcass he was leaving, and when they had dried in the sunshine he flew glittering away. I conclude that you grubs will do the same thing by and by.'

"The grub listened with astonishment and distrust, and swam off to tell his friends. They decided that it was impossible, nonsense, and the grub said he would think no more about it. He hurried restlessly about in the water, hunting for prey and trying to forget. But not long after he began to be sick, and a feeling he could not resist impelled him to go upward. He called to his relations and said:

"'I must leave you, I know not why. If the frog's story of another world is true, I solemnly promise to return and tell you.'

"His friends accompanied him to the water's edge, where he vanished from their sight, for their eyes were fitted to see only in water. All day they watched and waited for his return, but he came no more.

"One of his brothers soon felt the same irresistible impulse upward, and he also promised the sorrowing family that if he should indeed be changed into that glorious creature of which they had heard, he would return and tell them. 'But,' said one, 'perhaps you might not be able to come back.' 'A creature so exalted could certainly do anything,' replied the departing grub. But he also came not again. 'He has forgotten us,' said one; 'he is dead,' said another; 'there is no other world.'

"And now a third brother felt the same inward necessity driving him upward. He bade his friends farewell saying, 'I dare not promise to return. If possible I will; but do not fear in me an altered or a forgetful heart. If that world exists we may not understand its nature.'

"His companions lingered near the spot where he disappeared, but there was neither sight nor sound of his return. Only the dreary sense of bereavement reminded them that he had lived. Some feared the future, some disbelieved, some hoped and looked forward still. Ah, if the poor things could only have seen into the pure air above their watery world they would have beheld their departed friends often returning to its borders. But into the world of waters they could never more enter. The least touch upon its surface, as the dragon-fly skimmed over it with the purpose of descending to his friends, brought on a deadly shock, such as he had felt when, as a water-grub, he had tried to come upward into the air. His new wings instantly bore him back.

"And thus divided, yet near—parted, yet united by love—he often hovered about the barrier that separated him from his early companions, watching till they, too, should come forth into the better life. Sweet it was to each new-comer to find himself not alone in his joyous existence, but welcomed into it by those who had gone before. Sweet also to know that even in their ignorant life below gleams from the wings of the lost ones they had lamented were shining down into their dark abode. O if they had known, they would neither have feared nor sorrowed so much."

Mr. Bell sat in silence a few moments after finishing this parable, and then said:

"Do you see how the other world may be out of our sight and hearing, though very real and near?"

"Yes, father, I do," replied Helen. "It makes it seem as if Willie might be close beside us."—Household Reading.

Terrible Achievement.

The church of St. Peter and St. Paul is remarkable for its spire, the loftiest of St. Petersburg. An anecdote connected with the church, and not known, I believe, out of Russia, is too remarkable to be omitted. The spire which rises and is probably represented in the engraving as fading away almost into a point in the sky, is, in reality, terminated by a globe of considerable dimensions, on which an angel stands, supporting a large cross. This angel fell into disrepair; and some suspicions were entertained that he designed visiting, uninvoked, the surface of the earth. The affair caused some uneasiness, and the government at length became perplexed. To raise scaffolding to such height would cost more money than all the angels out of heaven were worth; and in meditating fruitlessly on these circumstances, without being able to resolve how to act, a considerable time was suffered to elapse.

—Lofty, light, and small—

Among the crowd of gazers below who daily turned their eyes and their thoughts toward the angel was a mijik called Telouchkine. This man was a roofer of houses (a slater as he would be called in countries where slates were used), and his speculations by degrees assumed a more practical character than the idle wonders and conjectures of the rest of the crowd. The spire was entirely covered with sheets of gilded copper, and presented to the eye a surface as smooth as if it had been one mass of burnished gold. But Telouchine knew that the sheets of copper were not even uniformly closed upon each other; and, above all, that there were large nails used to fasten them, which projected from the side of the spire.

Having meditated upon these circumstances until his mind was made up, the mijik went to the government and offered to repair the angel without scaffolding and without assistance, on condition of being reasonably paid for the time expended in the labor. The offer was accepted, for it was made in Russia, and by a Russian.

On the day fixed for the adventure Telouchkine provided with nothing more than a coil of ropes ascended the spire in the interior to the last window. Here he looked down at the concourse of people below, and at the glittering "needle," as it is called, tapering far above his head. But his heart did not fail him, and stepping gravely out upon the window, he set about his task.

He cut a portion of the cord in the form of two large stirrups, with a loop at each end. The upper loops he fastened upon two of the projecting nails above his head, and placed his foot in the others. Then digging the fingers of one hand into the interstices of the sheets of copper, he raised up one of the stirrups with the other hand, so as to make it catch a nail higher up. The same operation he performed on behalf of the other leg, and so on alternately. And thus he climbed nail by nail, step by step, and stirrup by stirrup, until his starting point was undistinguished from the golden surface, and the spire had dwindled in his embrace till he could clasp it all round.

So far so well. But he now reached the ball—a globe of between nine and ten feet in circumference. The angel, the object of this visit, was above this ball, and concealed from his view by its smooth, round, and glittering expanse. Only fancy the wretch at that moment, turning up his grave eyes and graver beard to an obstacle that seemed to defy the daring and intrepidity of man!

But Telouchkine was not dismayed. He was prepared for the difficulty; and the means by which he essayed to surmount it exhibited the same prodigious simplicity as the rest of the feat.

Suspending himself in his stirrups, he girded the needle with a cord, the ends of which he fastened around his waist; and, so supported, he leaned gradually back, till the soles of his feet were planted against the spire. In this position he threw, a strong effort, a coil of cord over the ball; and so coolly and accurately was the aim taken, that at the first trial it fell in the required direction, and he saw the end hang down on the opposite side.

To draw himself into his original position, to fasten the cord firmly around the globe, and with the assistance of this auxiliary to climb to the summit, were now an easy part of his task; and in a few minutes more Telouchkine stood by the side of the angel, and listened to the shout that burst like sudden thunder from the concourse below, yet came to his ear only like a faint and hollow murmur.

The cord, which he had an opportunity of fastening properly, enabled him to descend with comparative facility; and the next day he carried up with him a ladder of ropes, by means of which he found it easy to effect the necessary repairs.

The prejudices of rebel generals still exist:

Wade Hampton on his way South made a speech at a Democratic meeting in Baltimore, where he made his special acknowledgments to the rebel soldiers from Maryland, thanking them for having swept across the line, and stood shoulder to shoulder with South Carolina in a great contest for liberty. He advised them to now stand firm for the Union and Constitution, which they could do by voting for Seymour and Blair.

Trampling the Flag.

Spain is absolutely under the control of the priesthood; the power of the Queen is literally obliged to succumb to the power of the church. But the ambitious clergy are not satisfied to have their power act as an undercurrent, away from the eyes of the political world, but their supremacy must be shown in certain ceremonies and performances that may inspire the lower class of the laity with awe, though they excite the ridicule and scorn of the neighboring powers of Europe. While spending the summer months among the vine-clad hills of Corunna and Gallicia we had the pleasure of witnessing one of these ceremonies, which greatly interested and disgusted the spirit of "Young America."

On entering the streets of Ferrol early one morning we were surprised to see the senoritas—who seldom are seen in the streets by daylight—promenading up and down the walks in groups and couples, their long, black, glossy hair blowing out behind from under their mantillas, and the long trails of their dresses sweeping the streets and keeping them in a fine condition for a day of public parade. Bands of music were playing at all the prominent corners; squads of soldiers lined the sides of the narrow steeets, and the red and yellow flag of Spain was flung to the breeze from all the public buildings. It was a beautiful day, and the crowds of peasants clattering along in their wooden shoes, mingling with the fairest of the higher class, formed a picturesque picture. Such was the day that the "Shepherds of the Flock" had chosen for the display of their temporary power. God grant that indeed it may be a temporary power! The pageantry was grand, and calculated to inspire the empty minds of the ignorant masses with reverence; but that the educated, intelligent class of inhabitants could offer such homage to a mere show was beyond our comprehension.

The long lines of priests with shaved heads, black, bushy eyebrows and dark, sparkling, wicked looking eyes, clad in their sombre gowns, chanted solemnly and impressively in the Latin tongue, while they filled the air with the smoke of incense rising from silver censers. Gold and silver images of all the saints and virgins that ever lived or were imagined to have lived, costly beyond description, were borne aloft for the worship of the poor, deformed, starving beggars from whom the immense sums were wrung. Truly it was a solemn sight to see this vast concourse of people bow themselves to the earth in homage to these men in the garb of priests of God, and yet we have seen the devotees spurned by the feet of the passing clergy. It was a sight that made us shudder for the future of such a country, when we saw riches enough to feed the begging, starving populace for days, yes, weeks, all expended by the pitiless church in senseless images for their worship.

But the most impressive part of the service was to come, and it was to witness this that the inhabitants of the city and neighboring towns had assembled. Up on the front of the General's palace were unfurled the national colors of Spain. As the procession drew nigh the populace parted and the colors were run down to the public street and spread across the road in the dust. On either side of this the great body of the priests formed themselves, seemingly as a guard. With uncovered heads the great mass of people bowed to the ground, and the chief priest of the city, an ugly, repulsively featured man, who we subsequently heard was the most licentious hypocrite in the city, marching forward with the monstrance raised before his face, amid profound silence, during which the birds even seemed too frightened to sing, walked across the flag, trampling the national emblem in the dust. Not a word of remonstrance from the representatives of the nobility standing around, not a murmur of disapproval from the crowded street was heard. The flag was raised from its degraded position, to be purified by the free air of heaven, and the pageantry moved on. O what despotism! O what hypocrisy! What must be the situation of that people who are so degraded, so debased that the flag that should be the emblem of all that is dear to them on earth is disgraced before their very eyes, by these wolves in sheep's clothing who minister to them in sacred things! May God hasten the day when the flag and religion of every nation may go hand in hand, and the darkened minds of this deceived people be enlightened with the light of a true religion.

W. A. C.

A singular accident occurred to a man named James Fitzpatrick while he was engaged in setting up a fire escape in New York. He was pouring molten lead into a hole in the brick wall to secure the bracket supporting the escape, when a terrible explosion followed, caused probably by the rapid exhaustion of the air in the cavity. A quantity of the molten lead was thrown into Fitzpatrick's face and eyes. He was removed to Bellevue hospital, where it was found that the sight of both eyes was destroyed.

The Boston Traveller says: "The eldest son of one of our wealthiest manufacturers, whose father has one of the most splendid residences in this city, has gone into one of the factories at Lawrence as an operator, falling right into line and doing duty and working as hard as any of them, to obtain a perfect practical knowledge of the business in all its parts."

Ames Methodist Episcopal Church.

There will be preaching every Sabbath at 11 A. M. in Dr. Newman's church, corner of St. Charles and Calliope streets, and social meetings for conference and prayer every Sunday and Thursday evening from eight to nine o'clock in the lecture room. You are invited.

Lay Representation.

We are sorry to crowd from our inside an excellent article from the Methodist on this important subject, in connection with the General Conference action. It will be found on our first page. We shall have more to say anon about the adoption by the Church of the plan submitted to its godly consideration. We can only say now that its adoption will take away our reproach, and we heartily believe will add greatly to the Christian and social power of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

Southwestern Bible Society.

By the kindness of Rev. Dr. Doremus, the General Agent in this city, we have the last "Bible Society Record" and the "Addresses at the Forty-Second Anniversary of the American Bible Society" in New York. We are glad to learn that the parent society has remitted all the back dues of this auxiliary, and made large donations of books to meet the great demand of the Southwest. We gratefully acknowledge receiving through Dr. Doremus ample supplies for our preachers and people throughout Louisiana during the past half-year. The preachers are invited by the General Agent to make applications directly to the depositories in their neighborhood in case of further needs and report to Rev. Mr. Mims and other traveling agents. We hope the Conference collections will prove that our preachers and people value the Bible work and will sustain it.

The Record gives us interesting accounts of Bible distribution in Italy, Egypt, Spain, Portugal, Mexico, and our own country. During the two years preceding this report, 1,201,605 families were visited by the agents and 101,300 were without Bibles.

The following extract is made from the report of proceedings:

On motion of Rev. J. E. C. Doremus, D. D., of New Orleans, seconded by Mr. Francis T. King, of Baltimore:

Resolved, That the benefactions of the American Bible Society to the people of the South and Southwest should be recognized as strengthening the bonds of amity and Christian union, especially when manifested in their day of suffering and sorrow.

Editorial Correspondence.

HORATIO SEYMOUR.

Doubtless the people of Louisiana desire to know what the people of the North think of Horatio Seymour, the Democratic candidate for the next Presidency, and in reflecting Northern sentiment I do so from the conversation of every day life rather than from any formal demonstration. With the Albany regency, the Tammany Democrats, and the unclean Democracy of New York city Mr. Seymour is popular, but with the moneyed men of New York, and especially the Jews, he is righteously damned from Monday till Saturday. Mr. Chase was the choice of our American financiers, who judged rightly that the author of our system of currency is the man to carry that system to its consummation. General Hancock was preferred by the delegates from the South, as no other Union General had so signally favored the "lost cause" as the man who sought to undo all that the gallant Sheridan had done in Louisiana, and to place traitors again in power. G. H. Pendleton was the idol of the Simon-pure Democracy of the West, who with him believe that Democratic ultraism is the only remedy for Republican radicalism. With the North thus divided it is interesting to inquire how the unanimous vote of the convention was secured for Mr. Seymour. We shall in vain search the history of politics for an instance of more adroit political trickery than the plan adopted for his nomination. It was the settled purpose of the New York delegation to put their favorite forward, and to do so was only a question of management. Neither a great man nor a popular leader, it was clear that the convention would not of choice accept him as their standard-bearer. Mr. Seymour is not a national man. His friends can point to no deed in his life as a citizen, or in his career as a politician, or in his administration as Governor of New York, which deserves a nation's gratitude. As a man he is cold-blooded, selfish, and grasping; as a politician he is mean and tricky, and scruples not to employ the basest measures, believing with the Jesuits that the end sanctifies the means; as a Democrat he favors State sovereignty, domestic slavery, the reopening of the slave trade, establishing of slavery in every State in the Union, North and South, opposed the war for the Union, and at the Chicago convention of 1864 declared the war a failure. He is now in favor of the forcible overthrow of the new State governments of the Southern States, the disfranchisement of the blacks, and their re-enslavement. It was not possible for even a Democratic convention ts put forward of choice such a man as their standard-bearer. He was saddled upon the convention as Balaam was saddled upon his ass. And he is the Balaam of the campaign. Sent to curse the Republicans—God-chosen people—he rather will be constrained to say: "How goodly are thy tents, O Jacob, and thy tabernacles, O Israel." Both the New York Herald and Post expose the trickery by which Mr. Seymour was nominated, whose articles we give in another column. For the present it is only necessary to say that the Democrats are gloomy, and it is generally conceded that Grant will achieve an easy victory.

In Memoriam.

GABRIEL P. DISOSWAY.

My personal and well beloved friend is dead. A Christian gentleman, a scholar, a genial companion, his death is the shadow of a great sorrow upon my life-path. I knew him as a friend affectionate, true, and serviceable. No guest was more welcome to my house than he, and none came more frequently. A close observer of men, possessed of a wonderful local memory, gifted with rare conversational powers, familiar with almost everybody of prominence in Church and State, a lover of a good story, and himself a capital humorist, he would entertain us for hours, and melt us to tears or set the "board in a roar" by the recital of some new experience, or the narration of some fresh incident. Although we knew him in the last decade of his life—from sixty to seventy—yet he retained that beautiful freshness and youthful buoyancy that add such a charm to social life. Of Huguenot descent, he had in a large degree the suavity of the French. His was an unaffected urbanity, a native politeness. Such was the ease of his address that he not only appeared on all occasions without embarrassment, but made others feel at home in his presence. In social gatherings and on festive occasions he was joyous and genial, a smile for each, a kind word for all. His prayers at the family altar were simple, confiding, beautiful; the desire was clearly expressed, the words fitly chosen. There was a filial reliance, a child's confidence in a Divine Father. In serious conversation he was mature in his reflections, learned in his allusions, and developed marvelous resources of mind and scholarship. It is in the relation of a friend that I now write of Mr. Disosway. Other and abler pens will do justice to his scholarship, his literary labors, his public addresses, and Christian character. I loved him as a friend, and now that he is dead would recall that kindliness of nature, that geniality of soul which endeared him to me and mine. But he is not. His reverent head has bowed to the summons of death. Requiescat in pace! Up into the serene heavens his spirit has ascended, and there I hope to rejoin my friend.

Church Extension.

Our self-denying preachers and their impoverished people are eagerly and hopefully looking to this society, as the means of establishing our beloved Church permanently in the South. We are thronged by the multitudes hungry for our ministrations; but now, for lack of shelter, scattered like sheep upon the mountains, or worse, driven to cane sheds, old sugar mills or dilapidated shanties. No more promising field for Christian effort ever opened before the great Apostle of the Gentiles that the South now presents to the Itinerants of the M. E. Church. "Come over and help us" sounds from every quarter.

Our brethren will be glad to learn that Rev. Dr. Newman, the able pioneer of our Church in the south-west, is appointed by the bishops to represent our interests in the General Committee. He well knows the field, its capabilities and necessities, having sent out in 1864 and 1865 the first missionaries, Small, Kennedy, Ryan, and others, and he will not fail earnestly to plead our cause. His district comprises the Kentucky, Holston, Tennessee, Georgia, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, and Texas Conferences.

Scores of churches could be prepared for the accommodation of multitudes, by Christmas, in the Louisiana and Texas Conferences alone, if two or three hundred dollars could be granted in aid of each society, be it as a loan or gift. The experience of a presiding elder, recorded below is the counterpart of every other one; our preachers are willing to suffer and labor, but let us have help to build our churches.

It is encouraging to see that the officers of this society are busily and skillfully pushing its work. We gladly make room for the following circular from their office:

From the Office of the Society, No. 1018 Arch street, Philadelphia.

Second District.—Newark, New Jersey, Philadelphia, Wilmington, Delaware, Washington, Baltimore, Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina—J. H. C. Dosh, No. 308 East Baltimore street, Baltimore, Maryland.

Fifth District—Rock River, Illinois, Central Illinois, Southern Illinois, Wisconsin, West Wisconsin, Minnesota, Upper Iowa, Iowa, Des Moines, Northwestern German—A. B. Morrison, Flora, Illinois.

Sixth District—Kentucky, Holston, Tennessee, Georgia, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Texas—J. P. Newman, New Orleans, Louisiana.

OUR SOUTHERN WORK.

"The pressing need of our work in the South is Church Extension. Missionary appropriations to sustain our ministers are of course essential at many points, but without churches the results of such expenditure perish with the close of each year. To have a permanent flock a fold must be prepared. The South has always been deficient in both churches and schoolhouses, and the want of places in which to collect the people has always operated against religious efforts. This want is keenly felt by those who are laboring for the religious reconstruction of the South. Even what few churches and schoolhouses there are are generally closed against those who are in sympathy with the government. The chief obstacle now to the success of our cause is the lack of houses in which to collect and organize our membership. There are preachers enough, though not the most cultivated, and people enough to hear them, and to give them a moderate support if we only had suitable places in which they could assemble. The very best missionary appropriation that could be made to such a people is to aid them in building churches. My experience leads me to the conclusion that limited appropriations for the support of our colored ministers will suffice, but that we should dot this whole land with churches; and I am persuaded that for every church, judiciously located, we can find a minister, and fill the house with hearers who will willingly undertake his support. Viewed in the light of these facts it is manifest that the chief agency for evangelizing the South is to fill it with churches. If we can make adequate provisions of this kind the whole colored Methodism of the South will gravitate to us. Nor will the movement be confined to them. The necessities of the loyal white population are even more pressing than those of the blacks. They have neither churches nor ministry in sympathy with them, and are looking and sighing and wishing, but scarcely hoping for help.

There are points in my own district to which I have urgent invitations—points that would actually undertake the support of a minister if they had places in which to meet. I am assured that in a few adjoining counties that might be organized into circuits, there are three hundred members waiting for us, and earnestly longing for a home in the old church where they may have sympathy and fellowship instead of proscription on account of their loyalty to the old flag. But they will need help in building and securing churches. There are also a number of towns that could be named having from two hundred to three thousand inhabitants where we could organize societies of colored members of from twenty-five to a hundred or more if we could only aid them to erect churches. There is also a case in the best built city of the State in which we could sell property inconveniently located and secure a splendid church centrally located by obtaining a loan of from fifteen hundred to two thousand dollars for a few years.

The loan feature that you have introduced strikes me as being a happy provision. A loan will often secure a church as surely as a donation, with this great advantage, that after obtaintaining for us one church it can be made to repeat its benefits in other localities. Thus, the loan of three hundred dollars you have given us—a loan we could not obtain here—secures the immediate completion of our church, and the rent of the church to the Bureau for school purposes, when completed, will in one year return to you the money which could next year be used in a similar way, thus repeating its blessings almost every year. Many instances will occur in which both a donation and a loan will be necessary—a donation to encourage the commencement of a church, and a loan to complete it.

In view of all these facts, I am fully satisfied that the Church Extension Society is of incalculable importance to our Southern work, and may be made the mightiest of all the agencies employed. Increased prominence should be given to it, and the collections for its support should be greatly enlarged.

Colored Methodists.

Rev. Brother Merrill, the new editor of the Western Christian Advocate, has been doubly dubbed D. D. His honors are well deserved; still from our standpoint we judge that a little more doctoring would do him no harm. He fears disaster to the Church from lay delegation, and writes strangely about "colored Methodists." Hear what he says:

Had we the right under our ecclesiastical law to transfer members from our jurisdiction to another, we would rather give up all the members we have, and let the colored Methodist Church have the membership, the ground, and all the means we can spare to aid in their work, than to have them divided as they are. Or, if they are willing to come into our Church, and adopt our discipline and accept our assistance as a part of our own denomination, we are ready to accord to them the right to have their churches, their ministry, and conferences on terms of equality. We see but little difference whether they become one with us organically or not, so they are one with themselves, and so fraternally related to us that we can co-operate with them and help them with our means, and do what we wish to do for their race through their organization and instrumentalities.

With his honest heart and wise head surely time and experience will cure these maladies of the mind. His editorial position will, in this connection, be of the greatest value: already we observe that the reading of his Southern exchanges has greatly shaken his conservatism. Hear him on the Southern Press:

Since coming into the editorial office of the Western several things have astonished us a little, but nothing more than the activity and earnestness of the press of the Methodist Episcopal Church South.

We were surprised at the number of papers published in the interest of that Church, and at the zeal they manifest in maintaining their unenviable position in regard to the great questions that stir the hearts of the people all over the land. To say they are intensely loyal to the South, that they bitterly regret the downfall of the Confederacy and the overthrow of slavery, is but expressing what is apparent to all who have any acquaintance with their history, and to find them full of hatred to the Methodist Episcopal Church is just what we would look for; but to find them guilty of downright misrepresentations of our history, polity, and expressed purposes is something we did not expect. There are some exceptions, of course, the smaller papers being the most venomous; but we regret the temper of the most dignified among them, and think the time will come when the editors actuated by such inveterate opposition to the progressive ideas of Northern Christians, will themselves lament their folly and blindness.

* * * * * * *

We would suggest that if, instead of fostering these old hatreds, they will accept the condition of things surrounding them, and devote their energies to building up the waste places in Zion, and fostering the sentiments of freedom and progress that begin to take root in their soil, they can yet command the confidence and esteem of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and all other Evangelical denominations, and be recognized as co-workers in the vineyard of the common Master.

We Radicals scarcely exceed this in plainness of speech. There is hope for our brother. As to our colored brethren, we assure them that Brother Merrill does not represent the Church on the subject of caste. He is far behind the age. We are not prepared to turn them over to Africanism, or to favor a Church for their or any other race, for we are all one in Christ.

Dr. Newman.—The address of Rev. Dr. Newman, the editor of the Advocate, will, for a few weeks, be Albany, New York, care of S. R. Gray, 38 State street.

College Commencements.

Our Western and Northwestern church papers come to us richly laden with accounts of these anniversaries. We clip from the Central Christian Advocate a notice of the exercises at the Michigan University, in which the senior editor of our paper participated, very modestly omitted by him in his "Editorial Correspondence" of last week:

Michigan University.—The twenty-fourth commencement exercises were opened by the Baccalaureate sermon, by President E. O. Haven, on the twenty-first ultimo. The sermon on the same evening, by Rev. J. P. Newman, is highly complimented. Commencement day was celebrated on the twenty-fourth ultimo. Fifty-four graduates received diplomas.

Among the institutions named we observe the Northwestern, the Ohio, and the Indiana Asbury Universities, the Alleghany College, the McKendree, the Albion, and other colleges.

Such seasons are joyous to more than those immediately engaged in their delightful exercises. They cheer us with high hopes for humanity and the Church. These college halls are thronged with many thousands of young men, the brain of our country, who are destined to be leaders among the people, in the pulpit, on the platform, in business, in Church and State, to mold the nation by pen and voice for God and freedom. Well has one said "The whole fabric of society, all that is valuable in social and national life, rests with its whole weight on the virtue of its young men. Numbers of these students are from Christian homes; are fresh from the altars of our churches. A goodly proportion are sons of ministers, than whom no class of young men prove so valuable to their country, or do more noble work for God, spite of the oft-repeated slanders against them. Dr. Sprague, in his late work, says: "Of the sons of one hundred ministers, taken at random from those of whose lives we have any account, over one hundred and ten became gospel ministers, and of the remainder, by far the larger proportion rose to eminence as honorable and successful men in business or in the learned professions." Can this be said of any other class? Most of these institutions report favorably upon their general and financial condition; the swell of the centennary year carried many of them out of their embarrassments; a high standard is being reached by them intellectually and morally; and if proper means are employed to preserve the students from the vices heretofore common to college life, we may expect most happy results. The time is not far distant when our own section will take her part in these educational jubilees; help is coming. We can well afford for a season to bear the scoffs of deluded men in the South who vainly hope by vituperation and violence to hinder our work. Public opinion will be largely directed by the graduates of these colleges, who are taught the doctrines of Wesley, that "slavery is the sum of all villainies," and that the Church's mission is to "spread holiness all over these lands." We can then therefore confidently bid our brethern of every class and color, who are struggling to secure and maintain their footing in the South, to be of good cheer, there is no step backward, and reinforcements are being sent to the front. Hold your ground, men, every inch.

Letters from the Country.

We publish the following letter to indicate some of the difficulties we meet in our work. The writer is a local preacher of the M. E. Church in Louisiana: his experience is no uncommon one:

Dear Brother—I was glad to receive your kind favor, fearing you had lost sight of me. I was very sick when those books and papers reached here, and am not much better now; but the Lord has been good to me. Circumstances which I much regret have prevented me from seeing you. I am a poor man, with a family of eight persons. I am glad to see that the Orphans' Home meets great consideration; and other Church interests are doing well. I live in a hot bed of rebels, and have had great trouble because I dare to be a friend of the freedmen. I was the only one that had the hardihood to vote for the Republican party, for which here is a copy of a letter sent to me by some one, I know not who:

"Leave at once, or you are in danger. Take timely warning.

"C. C. K. K. K."

And not only this. That company has sent me word two or three times that if I did not leave the parish, or desist and leave the freedman and his cause in other hands they would take my life. Yet none of those things frightened me. I only say this to let you know that I stand alone for these people.

If you could send a colored man, who is educated and a good preacher, I think he might do some good among them; and if you can appoint any work for me to do, let me know.

Yours, R.

We also publish the following extract from an old planter in Alabama:

Dear Sir—I have decided to become a subscriber to the Advocate, for which purpose I inclose five dollars. I very much wish your Church organization could be extended to this part of the country. I am a member of the Church South, but was always opposed to the division and the cause of it. I love the old Methodist Church, and would gladly see it prevail all through the country. I have settled two families of freedmen on farms under a lease for a term of years. They appear to be doing extremely well, but my course has excited great animosity against me. I want to settle a number more families next year. What think you, Mr. Editor, of my plan. I would like to see something on the subject in your paper.

Rev. A. L. Scott writes us from Pointe Coupee, Louisiana:

I wish you would publish in the Advocate something about our Church and the people of Pointe Coupee. Our progress has been great for the last two weeks, receiving converts and probationers. We have established three different societies in the parish. All we need is help—laborers in the vineyard of the Lord. We expect to build two churches if help can be obtained. The people are willing to subscribe, and some have done so already, both white and black. Much favor is shown here to the old Church. We have in the Church record one hundred members and forty-eight probationers. I hope our God will smile upon the missionary everywhere till the Gospel takes the wings of the morning and flies to the utmost bounds of the sea. I will start in eight days for Tennessee.

I remain your friend,
A. L. SCOTT.

Notices of Periodicals.

The Methodist Quarterly for July contains:

I. Greek Text of the New Testament. By Rev. D. A. Whedon, A. M. Bristol, R. I.

II. The Methodist Episcopal Church in Canada. By Rev. T. Webster, Newberry, C. W.

III. Guizot on the State of Religion in France. By Rev. J. P. Lacroix, Professor in Ohio Wesleyan University, Delaware, O.

IV. The Reformation of Criminals. By Rev. B. K. Peirce, A. M., Chaplain of House of Refuge, Randall's Island, N. Y.

V. Motley's United Netherlands. By Rev. H. M. Baird, Ph. D., University of the city of New York.

VI. The Decline of Romanism. By Rev. H. Mattison, D. D., Corresponding Secretary of American and Foreign Christian Union.

Foreign religious intelligence, foreign literary intelligence, synopsis of the quarterlies, Quarterly book table.

It is a valuable number. Without wishing to be invidious, we would especially commend to notice the papers on "The Greek Text," "Religion in France," and Motley's remarkable work. Every minister and student should carefully read this review. Much information is given under the "Foreign Intelligence" heading, and in its judicious book notices. All lovers of good reading will be pleased with the Quarterly.

The "Galaxy," an admirably gotten up monthly, contains reading for lovers, politicians, physicians, ministers, and others. An interesting history of the fifteen great diamonds of the world, valued at some $15,000,000. A talk about the nerves. Our national prospects. The Church of the future. The writer tells us that in numbers and wealth the Methodist Church exceeds the Roman Catholic, and that it is safe to say the members of the Methodist Church surpass in individual wealth the Catholic, and possibly every other sect save the Episcopal and Unitarian; that while the Methodist has richer subjects, it has nothing like that thorough system of taxation which enables its great rival to do such miracles. A sketch of John Wright is good. Of Margaret Fuller, closing with miscellany, notices, and poetry, making an excellent magazine.

"Harper's Bazar," beautiful as ever, requiring a woman's pen to do it justice. Has a timely article on trunks and other traveling conveniences; one on outside show. The illustrations are fairly bewildering. The ladies who have nothing to wear will here find comfort.

"Harper's Weekly" illustrates the Democratic convention and the German festival, sheep shearing, and the strange Chinese embassy. The editorials are, as usual, excellent; probably no journal in the country is doing more for the good of the nation than by its wise and careful utterances is being done by this weekly.

"College Courant" comes to us from old Yale as the organ and representative of the learned, yet not confined to college matters. Its first paper on military education, by President Fairchild, treats of the introduction of military drill into all colleges as a daily exercise, a project entertained by the War Department as preferable to an exclusively military school.

He suggests modifications as likely to be of value: A brief college course previous to entering the military institution; a two years instead of a four years course, and the instruction confined to science and practice.

2. "Our National Schools of Sciences," with a list of agricultural, scientific, and industrial colleges. "Early History of Yale Notices of Various Colleges," with an account of our friend John Baldwin's enterprise on the Teche, Thomson University.

In the "Yale Personal" we read "J. H. Trumbull, of Connecticut, is said to be the only living person who can read Eliot's Indian Bible." An excellent article on "Education," another "Our Common School System," both taking wise and advanced ground on these subjects. They are doubly valuable from such a source. We shall always be glad to see the "Courant."

The Church Union, the Standard, and the Household are valued exchanges, all welcome to our table.

College Degrees.

The editor of Zion's Herald publishes the names of some of the favored recipients of these honors. Among them we find the the Rev. Dr. Haven himself. He well deserves the distinction, and will be sure to wear it fittingly. The shock to his modesty is gotten over, by the following bit of humor:

The dog days bring college degrees. Every dog has its day in dog days, if not this year, why, next. So be contented disappointed D. D., which stands for dog day as well as for ding dong or any other dignified dullness. There is a good time coming, wait a little longer.

LIST:

Rutger's College, New Jersey—The degree of D. D. was conferred on the Rev. Hugh Hamill, of Lawrenceville, New Jersey; the Rev. R. B. Welch, Professor of English Literature in Union College; the Rev. John A. Todd, of Tarrytown, New York; the Rev. Theodore Romeyn, of Hackensack, New Jersey. The degree of L.L. D. was conferred on the Hon. Ezra Cornell, the founder of the Cornell University at Ithaca, New York.

University of New York City—The degree of LL. D. was conferred on Rev. Joseph Thomson and Mr. George H. Moore; that of D. D. on Rev. Francis N. Zabriskie, of Claverack; Prof. Ransom B. Welsh, of Union College; John Logan Aikman, of the United Presbyterian Church of Glasgow, Scotland, and Mr. Aaron L. Lindsloy, of South Salem, New York.

Hampden Sydney—The degree of D. D. was conferred on the Rev. J. Halstead Carroll, of New Haven, Connecticut, and also upon the Rev. Mr. Johnson, of New York.

Columbia College—LL. D., Rev. John Henry Hill, D. D., for forty years missionary of the Protestant Episcopal Church, and teacher at Athens, Greece.

Ingham University—The honorary degree of D. D. was conferred on Rev. E. B. Wallsworth, President of the Pacific Female College.

The Cheerful Giver.

BY M. ANNESLEY.

Some people do their good deeds in such a beautiful manner that we hardly know which most to admire; the Providence that meets the necessity, or the steward used for the purpose.

We heard a pretty thing in this way which is too good to be buried in silence. A church was burnt down in one of the country towns East, and the society having done all in their power to rebuild it, they found their most self-denying efforts fell short of the accomplishment of their desires. One evening a prominent man of their number sat down to think over the affairs of the unfinished church, and came to the conclusion that help must be sought from abroad, or among those not of their communion. Some of his old schoolfellows came up before him who had amassed large fortunes. So he made a list of a few names.

When he came up to the city he called upon one worth two or three hundred thousand and presented his case, and received five dollars.

That was too pitiful a sum to head a list, but he put it in his pocket with some feeling of indignation. He stepped into the office of another old friend, one with whom he had often spoken about the salvation of his soul, not a professor of religion. They still continued on the old familiar terms of schoolboys, and as he entered his friend's office, he said:

"Frank, the Lord has prospered you abundantly."

"I know it, Tom."

"You know our church was burnt down last year."

"Yes, I remember it was so."

"And we are trying to rebuild it, but come far short."

Frank asked if he had a subscription paper, and was answered "No." Then he stepped up to his desk and filled a check for five hundred dollars, and handed it to his friend, whose heart sung another song of praise for the new church.

A few days after the same friends met in the street, and Frank asked:

"Well, Tom, how does the new church get along?"

"Pretty well; but my daughter used to play the organ in the old one, and she says we must have a new one."

"How much will it cost?"

"I suppose about five hundred dollars."

"Oh, you want a better one than that; you go to the organ builder and give the size of your church, and ask him what will be the cost of one suitable for the house, and how long it will take to build it."

The organ builder was called upon, and the report returned to his friend was that the organ would cost one thousand eight hundred dollars, and require three months for its completion.

"Go and order it, and when finished send me the bill."

About ten days after a letter was dispatched to his friend Tom, inclosing the whole amount for the organ, and that day two months that liberal, thoughtful friend was buried.

"Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with all thy might; for there is no work nor device nor knowledge nor wisdom in the grave whither thou goest."

"The Catholic Messenger."

This journal in its issue of last week, replying to a city daily, made a lame attempt to defend its "grand Catholic scrub and horse races," of Sunday the twelfth and nineteenth. Plymouth Rock came in for a blessing; the gist of its article is this: "The Church is infallible and has a right to say what the Sabbath is," and "we are the Church." It was rather hard, neighbor, to be thus rebuked by a secular paper, but we will remind you that this is no question of Churches. but of public morality.

We take it that our Roman Catholic brother is rather unsound politically; for in an article on "The Fourth of July," he says: "The doctrine that 'all governments are exclusively for the benefit of the governed' is a fallacy," and "the ruler may have a vested right to rule of which it would be unjust and dishonest to deprive him." The same journal acknowledges "Papal subscriptions" to date of $505 95, and gives us the following condition of the work being done by him in free America, toward enslaving the Roman people.

SUBSCRIPTION FOR THE PONTIFICAL ARMY.—We have forwarded this week an eighth remittance of one thousand francs for the Pontifical army. These eight thousand francs are equivalent in currency to two thousand one hundred and eighty-six dollars and nineteen cents. The sum received by both Catholic papers up to date, taking into account the difference in exchange between gold or silver and paper, is equivalent to two thousand two hundred and fifty-four dollars and eighty cents: leaving on hand toward a new installment sixty-eight dollars and sixty cents. N. J. PERCHE.

To all of which we thank God that this is not Italy, and repeat, "Let us cling to our American principles and our American Sabbath."

Warned Out.

M. ANNESLEY.

"Far fairer is the land we seek,
A land without a tomb,
An everlasting resting place,
A sure and quite home."

A dear good woman was talking over her affairs with a friend, and said: "See, there is Mrs. Leary, she has everything heart can wish in her palace home—and I am just abounding in straits and trials."

"Yes, but Mrs. Leary is warned that she must soon leave her elegant house, and I do not know that she has another to put her head in—she is this very moment more destitute than you are in all your wants." "Why, what do you mean? Is Mr. Leary so involved that they'll be obliged to leave that home in which they have bestowed so much expense and labor? How will she bear it to have others walk over her soft carpets and enjoy all her conveniences?"

"I'll tell you how it is. Poor woman, she has an inward disease, that is incurable, and she is liable to sudden death at any time, and she has no title to a mansion in the skies. She endures as much worldly excitement as is possible to keep her thoughts from herself and the future, thinking it will be time enough to turn to the Lord, when she will be shut up in her room, for she will not believe that she may die suddenly, and the other day she said she intended to enjoy the world as long as she could."

"Now, do you not think her fine things very transient?"

"Oh yes. Welcome all my trials with my title good to a mansion in the skies."

"This is not my place of resting,
Mine's a city yet to come;
Onward to it I am hasting—
On to my eternal home."

"The rich man also died, and was buried, and in hell he lifted up his eyes, being in torment."

Outrage at Grand Ecore.

We clip the following from the Red River News, and take occasion to proffer our earnest sympathy in her recent bereavement and in this dastardly outrage to one whose kind hospitality has been often enjoyed by the tired itinerant:

Atrocious Outrage.—Last week the residence of Mrs. Sausser, Grand Ecore, was entered during the night by three young men disguised with masks, to carry out their base and brutal design of nearly beating to death her colored servant Valcour, who, from being a Radical, has rendered himself hostile to the Democratic party. After entering the house they proceeded to beat the poor boy, and probably would have killed him only his cries aroused Mrs. Sausser, sleeping in the next room. The boy in his terror ran into the bedroom of Mrs. Sausser, followed by his inhuman assailants, still beating him all the time, whom even the presence of a lady did not restrain, till she recognized one of the party, and subsequently the others. It is only feelings of regard and pity for the parents of these young men that prevent us publishing their names. We consider they should have known better, and stigmatize their conduct as barbarous in the extreme. Mrs. Sausser has made an affidavit before Judge Bullard, and we trust for the sake of the public peace and security those implicated will be speedily and summarily dealt with, as they well deserve to be.

DEBATE IN THE SENATE.

The Thirtieth July Massacre.

The following debate occurred in the State Senate on Monday, July 17, upon a joint resolution introduced by Senator Campbell to appoint a committee of three Senators to investigate the circumstances connected with the massacre of the thirtieth of July, 1866, and the disposition made of the dead and wounded by the municipal authorities:

Mr. Campbell—Mr. President: Without wishing to take up the time of the Senate, or to impede its business, I desire to say that this resolution as well as the previous one is introduced by me in full view of what I consider my responsibilities to my constituents and the Republicans of this State, and I wish to say to Senators who are disposed to shirk this matter now that the Republicans of this State, and especially those who belong to that class who were the principal victims of that massacre, will hold you to a responsibility and to the pledges you have made.

Mr. President, it was a source of grievous complaint for months after that riot that there were no steps taken to vindicate the right of those who suffered and redress their wrongs.

They were poor men, it is true, but they were the only men who sustained the cause which has brought us here, and which has caused the principles of right and justice to triumph, and, sir, I would rather see my right hand wither and be doomed to eternal scorn and contempt, than prove recreant to the duty I owe them, and I say to Senators, and especially to men of my own party, the people of the State will mark your record upon this matter. Sir, it was a massacre which stands second to but one upon the record of history (that of Saint Bartholomew,) and second to that only in the number of its dead; but excelling it far in the depth of its infamy, and the outrages which marked its commission. The massacre of Saint Bartholomew was brought about by that strongest of sentiments known to the human mind, religious enthusiasm; this was brought about by nothing but a difference in political sentiments.

No danger to the rights or the liberties or the interests of any class was incurred by the meeting of that convention, and although I do not agree with the motives and opinions of those who were concerned in calling it together, yet I maintain for them the inalienable right to peaceably assemble and perform the duty intrusted to them as one of the most sacred which belongs to this or any other State.

When, sir, I see the Representatives of these people refuse to take the proper steps for the punishment of these wrongs, I hope their course and conduct will go fairly and squarely upon the record, and that men who dare shirk their responsibilities because, forsooth, it will hurt the feelings of some fastidious taste, it will not be hid from their constituents. Sir, it was the blood which was spilled upon that day in this street and which stained the doors of this hall which cried aloud to Heaven—which aroused the people from the gulf to the lakes to stand aghast with horror, and to take those measures to vindicate the rights of men which have resulted in our assembling here to-day.

I walked this street, sir, on that day, and from Canal street to Common it was strewn with the bodies of the slain. I saw policemen pointing their revolvers to the hearts of inoffensive men whom they had captured for no cause whatever, and shooting them down without mercy.

I saw them abusing and insulting with kicks and blows harmless men bearing the garb of humanity; and I then and there, sir, registered a solemn vow with the scornful and malignant glances of desperadoes of this city fixed upon me, that if I should ever be chosen by the votes of these people for a responsible position I would make it my first duty to see that their wrongs were known and redressed and their rights vindicated.

Mr. Lynch—Mr. President: I must confess, sir, I am sorry that this resolution has been introduced. I will go as far as any man to secure the right of every person in the State to assemble and express their views, but I see no good to be accomplished now by such an investigation as is proposed. And I am one of those who voted against the resolution. I want the public to know that I am not here to shirk any responsibility or to screen my vote on any question. I shall vote fearlessly, and always as my conscience dictates. This matter, sir, has not, as has been intimated, been passed over in silence. A committee of the legislative department of the government of the United States, came here to investigate this matter. They made a full and complete report, which is accessible to all. The whole truth is there. Black and atrocious as the record is, it is there. And I see no good that came from such an investigation, nor that anything further can be elicited. I, for one, sir, am for having none of these old sores torn afresh. What we want is peace and quietness. If there is anything yet undisclosed, which it is necessary or desirable should be brought to light, if that Congressional investigating committee failed to discover and bring it fully before the country, I would favor the resolution. But I see no good that can be accomplished by it. Evil, and evil only will result by stirring up the bad blood which exists in all parties and in all communities. I shall not be afraid, sir, when necessary to meet bad blood, but when I see no possible good to be accomplished by this measure, I shall not shrink from following the dictates of my conscience, and opposing this or any other proposition from which however well intentioned I can see no benefit.

Mr. Braughn: Mr. President, I was much pleased to listen to the remarks of the Senator from Carroll, (Mr. Lynch), whose sentiments upon the subject accord entirely with my own. The gentleman from the second district has spoken of the importance of fully representing his constituents, and yet, sir, I conscientiously believe they neither expected nor desired the introduction of such a resolution as that which is now before this House. His object, sir, in making a solemn vow to take steps when the time came that would place him in an official position to vindicate the rights of those he represents was praiseworthy, noble, and manly; but in carrying out that vow he should ask himself first whether he can by such means benefit the dead, and second whether he will benefit the living. I believe, sir, this resolution would accomplish neither purpose; it could not benefit those who had departed, nor do I believe it could benefit those who survive. It would only stir up a sore which now is healed and almost forgotten. He has said that something should be done to mark the graves of those who fell on the thirtieth of July; that they silently fell, and their deeds have been forgotten.

In the next breath he informs you that their death was heralded from the Gulf to the Lakes, and that it stirred up the people of the North and the West to such an extent as has resulted in his elevation to official place. What, then, becomes of his own argument? As Senator Lynch, as the gentleman himself has said, in opposition to his own argument, these people did not silently fall and become forgotten. A Joint Committee from the Congress of the United States came here, and after a protracted session made a full and explicit report.

I believe, sir, that the people of New Orleans, as a class, deprecated the occurrences of that day, and were horrified at its results. I believe, sir, that the majority of the people of this city, on that day, were desirous of preserving the peace, and would have done so, had they been able to control its events. And I believe, sir, that the people of New Orleans to-day desire nothing but peace. They desire to have eradicated and removed everything which tends to stir up bad blood and hot blood; and I believe, sir, that the people of New Orleans as a class deprecate the efforts of the gentleman to continually stir up these almost forgotten troubles and sores. I believe that the gentleman's course is calculated to stamp him as a firebrand on the floor of this Senate, and that the majority of the people of New Orleans will so recognize him if he does not desist from the course which he has initiated. I was glad, sir, that the first resolution was disposed of in the manner it was. I think that all such resolutions should be laid upon the table, never to be heard of again, here or elsewhere. I therefore, move, sir, that the whole subject be laid upon the table.

Mr. Ray—The subject now under discussion would seem to justify an explanation.

I think, Mr. President, that all our proceedings here should be with a view to some practical purpose—to accomplish some object necessary for the welfare of the people of the State. I am not in the habit of voting for any resolution or any bill that I do not think has a practical object in view—to attain something that is desirable for the peace and prosperity of the country. In this resolution I do not recognize anything of that kind, for I see no practical good that is to result from it. It is to ascertain, if I recollect aright, who were the victims of that unfortunate affair, and to mark their graves—something of that kind. Now, Mr. President, I can see nothing good whatever which can result from an investigation of that massacre. It may have the effect, however, of stirring up ill blood, and producing something like the same kind of a riot again.

But, sir, if there were murders committed on the same day which have gone unpunished, there is a tribunal before which all such matters can be brought—and that is the First District Court of New Orleans. That Court is for the purpose of trying all criminal cases of that kind. Now, I don't doubt at all the Senator's statement, that he was present here and saw those murders committed. But let him go before the Grand Jury and have those men indicted that violated the laws of the State. Let them be indicted; with the evidence that can be brought there, and impartial juries, these men can not only be indicted and brought to trial, but convicted and punished now.

I say, then, there is a proper tribunal before which this matter can be brought. It is not for the Senate or House of Representatives of the State. I deprecate as much as any man those outrages, the greatest, perhaps, ever perpetrated in this or any other country. But the matter has been given every investigation necessary to preserve the record of those events. The facts are all set forth in the report of the Congressional Investigating Committee, and any one who desires to be informed upon the matter has but to examine that voluminous report. I say no man can deprecate more sincerely than I do the conduct of that riot, when men were murdered without rhyme or reason, and those acts ought to be punished. And if the parties who bring the matter before this Senate would go to the proper tribunal, and it required any legislative aid to accomplish that purpose, I would not be behind any man in supporting such measures as were necessary to punish the guilty parties. The witnesses are innumerable; the court is open. Then why not go before it? This is not the proper tribunal. I am not in favor of any resolution that is merely speculative. But if legislation is necessary to have the matter properly brought before the criminal courts of the city, no one will vote for it sooner than myself.

In regard to what the Senator from the Second District regards his duty to those Republicans who elected him, I did not come here for any such purpose, but to pass such laws as will advance the peace and prosperity of the State—not to open wounds that are almost healed, and to bring about another riot.

With these few remarks, Mr. President, I shall deem it my duty to vote against the resolution.

Mr. Blackman—Mr. President: I did not desire to say one word upon this resolution. It was not my intention to aid in prolonging a discussion which it seems to me is made more for political purposes than any other. The gentleman has introduced the resolution more, I believe, for his own political convenience than anything else, and so far he has accomplished what he intended by it. He says it is time this Legislature should pass such laws as will prevent murders in future, that the citizens of Louisiana may not be massacred and her laws violated. Does the gentleman expect by this resolution to stop lawlessness and crime, or that it will have the least effect upon the people of Louisiana? No, sir, as I have said, this is nothing more nor less than a bill for political effect. But, sir, I speak it in all candor and honesty, the day will come when such appeals as have been made by the gentleman upon this floor will cease to have an influence; when feelings of animosity can no longer be aroused by reckless appeals to the bloody passions of men, to feelings of malice and vindictiveness. It may win for the moment, but the calm sober second thought of the people of the State of Louisiana will reverse and annul the momentary effect of such appeals. The day will come when they will not be listened to from any part of the House.

But the gentleman says that the guilty alone are opposed to this resolution. If I remember aright the celebrated play of Macbeth the gory locks of Banquo were shaken, only shaken, at the guilty. It may be so in this case. And, Mr. President, the gentleman said in his speech that from the Gulf of Mexico to the great lakes of the North the deeds done here upon that day were heralded by newspapers and stump orators, and has admitted that he holds his present position in consequence of what transpired upon that day. I agree with him. And that riot occurred in the same spirit that the resolution has been introduced by the Senator himself. It was concocted for political and partisan purposes.

Mr. O'Hara rose to a point of order that personal remarks were unparliamentary.

The President said he could not decide the remarks of the Senator (Mr. Blackman) out of order, but would caution him to confine himself as nearly as possible to the discussion of the resolution.

Mr. Blackman—Now, sir, as I stated, the riot was concocted in the same spirit and for the same purpose that this resolution has been introduced—for political effect.

When the history of that riot shall have been written—when the revolution of passion shall have subsided, and the American people shall have come to calm and dispassionate thought, and law and order shall again ride triumphant over license and misrule, the instigators of that plot will be denounced, and their names handed down to infamy. Mr. President, I am opposed to riots. I as much deprecate what occurred upon that occasion as the gentleman himself, but I regret fully as much that a Senator upon this floor, where anything but the passions of men should be aroused, that he should take an occasion like the present to introduce resolutions and make speeches which tend to no good, but only for the aggrandizement of the Senator himself and for his own political preferment.

Mr. President, the gentleman has spoken of acts, of recent acts, of lawlessness and crime, of property destroyed, and presses thrown into the street. I can tell the gentleman that lawlessness and crime are not all upon one side. I can tell him of fair ladies of the State of Louisiana being dragged from their homes and cruelly outraged. I can tell him how from the pockets of an impoverished people money has been extorted by those holding power belonging to his own party. Sir, I could stand and repeat for days, if necessary, the grievances we have suffered; but this is not the time nor the occasion.

A single remark, however, in regard to the destruction of a press, to which he has referred. I solemnly believe sir, and I say it unhesitatingly upon this floor, that the destruction of that press is but another piece of strategy for the manufacture of political capital. Who that has seen that sheet, the "Homer Iliad," as it comes out reeking with political filth, pouring vials of gall and wormwood upon our people, and insulting the citizens of the town in which he lives, and has done it, too, in times far more turbulent than these, and gone unharmed, will suppose that this is anything more than a political trick on the part of its manager? Or, that it was destroyed by the hands of "lawless desperadoes?" This act will be heralded far and wide for political effect.

This state of things will exist, Mr. President, until the people of Louisiana learn to be guided by their calm, dispassionate judgment, by their high appreciation of honorable men and those governed by honest motives; until they refuse longer to listen to or be stirred up by inflammatory speeches and resolutions such as those of the gentleman.

In compliment to the gentlemen from Carroll and Ouachita (Messrs. Ray and Lynch), I will say that I was much pleased with the spirit they exhibited in this discussion. They deprecate resolutions and speeches which tend to arouse within the bosoms of the people of the State violent and turbulent passions. I agree with them; and had it not been for the direct attack of the Senator upon my own district I would not have opened my mouth. But let it pass. Let him and those who have voted with him have the full benefit of this resolution. So far as I am concerned, I shall make no further opposition to its passage than simply to record my negative vote upon the record, and let the people judge who are the men who have discharged their duty as legislators without passion or appeals to passion—who have had in view only the best interest of the State.

Mr. Campbell—Mr. President: I was pleased to listen to the disclaimer by the Honorable Senator from the First District (Mr. Braughn) of any approval on the part of the good people of this city of the proceedings upon that day, and the massacre of those people. I wish merely to call his attention to this point. If he and the other good people of this city were so deeply opposed to the outrages of that day, and deprecate them so greatly, who am I in danger of offending? Who is it that I hurt in introducing a resolution of this kind? Whose "wounds are torn afresh?" Not, surely, those of the Senator from the First District, for he stands with me in wishing to condemn those acts. The wounds, if we open any, must be those which are rankling in the breasts of those thugs and desperadoes who were engaged in that riot. What good citizen do I offend by this resolution? Why should not the scorn and detestation of the good citizens of the State, at least, be visited upon these desperadoes if too much time has elapsed for any other punishment?

As to the epithet which the gentleman has applied to me as being a "firebrand" upon this floor, I wish merely to state, sir, that in my opinion, the "firebrands" are not the men who are engaged in trying to seek justice and truth, but the men who are engaged in destroying the cotton houses of the honorable Senator on my left (Mr. Ray), and the printing office of a member of Congress. So far as the gentleman's opinion of me or of my course is concerned, it is of small moment. I have my duty to perform to my constituents, and I shall do it without asking whether he considers me a firebrand or not. I have only to say to him that the men who will concur with him in that opinion are probably the men who had something to do with the massacre.

Now, sir, as to the Senator from Ouachita, (Mr. Ray) there is none for whom I entertain a higher respect, but I think that in this matter his judgment is greatly in error, and he has not done the resolution the poor compliment to read it carefully or hear it read. It says nothing about marking graves; nor has he read it carefully enough to see that it does contemplate a practical result. The Congressional Committee from Washington did not cover the ground at all which this resolution proposes to cover. They came to investigate the violations of law and order with a view to see what legislation was necessary by Congress for this State, not with a view to redressing the wrongs of those who suffered. And I am astonished at my honorable friend from Ouachita speaking of our remedy in the courts. Does he not remember that all criminal prosecutions are proscribed after one year has elapsed?

Mr. Ray—Prosecutions for murder are never proscribed.

I also wish to call the attention of the Honorable Senator from Ouchita to the fact that murders are not the only things included in this resolution. There were crimes committed against the living hardly short of murder, but sufficiently removed from it to bring them within the limits of prescription. For there is no redress except from you, the first tribunal before whom these victims have had an opportunity to be heard.

The gentleman who was the incumbent of the Criminal Court of this city, did indict somebody, but who was it? The very victims of the massacre, and he regarded with perfect indifference the charges against the real perpetrators of the outrages upon that day. Sir, as well might the lamb fly to the wolf for protection, as the innocent sufferers by that riot to the Criminal Courts of this city.

It has appeared on good authority that the bodies of the dead and wounded were dumped indiscriminately by cart-loads into the Mississippi river. I wish to ascertain who those men were, and then whatever the Legislature of Louisiana can do for their redress, let it be done. Why, sir, the honorable Senator from Ouachita informs me himself that he can not canvass the upper portion of his district unless some laws are speedily passed for the suppression of lawlessness and crime. Such a state of things exists that a distinguished Judge, a man known as a conservative gentleman upon this floor, informed me privately that he hoped this resolution or a kindred one would pass, because the people of his parish were on the brink of a civil war.

But, sir, though crime has so long gone unpunished in this State the people will at some time, I hope one not long distant, vindicate their rights and punish wrong-doers. That is the "practical effect" to which this resolution looks, and, sir, I am surprised that gentlemen who represent a Republican constituency upon this floor should question it.

In conclusion I will repeat, sir, that this resolution hurts none but the guilty. And there has never been a tribunal before which the full and damning truth has been exposed, or in consequence of whose investigation any justice has been rendered to the sufferers or their surviving friends. This is the first time and the first tribunal before which this case could be properly brought with a view to the punishment of the offenders.

I have done my duty. I leave the matter to the consciences of Senators and the judgment of their constituents.

LOVE, THE AVENGER.

[From Once a Week.]

I had only returned from Austria a few days when I fell in, by one of those coincidences which people won't believe in novels and which so often occur in real life, with a man whom I had not seen for ten years, and whom I had lost all trace of. He was Philip Chasemore, a surgeon, whose life and abilities had been devoted to the obscure well-doing of a country practice, although his abilities were worthy of a more brilliant sphere of action. And I specially wished to see him, because he had been the intimate college friend and companion of a man who was the admiration of most of the men in the university during my time, their admiration being only equaled by their perplexity; for the man in question, Gerald Stauncel—"Firework Gerald," as he was surnamed from his erratic genius—was a person very unique in his way. With the most brilliant abilities and some of the best qualities, he united to these others proportionately bad. Generous, courteous, high-spirited, free of money, time, and interest in his friend's behalf, and the life and soul of every circle wherein he chose to exhibit his wit and humor, he would change in a second from the frank, brilliant, bon vivant companion to an enemy fierce and passionate as a revengeful Southron; the blaze in his dark eyes and the white pallor of fury which overspread his face might be excited by a harmless speech at any moment, and his physical strength rendered him a most dangerous antagonist. No wonder, then, that with all their admiration of his good qualities men felt insecure, as on a volcano's edge, when in Gerald Stauncel's society.

His intellect was of the highest order. How often have I heard the brilliant epigrams and the lucid arguments flow in an unbroken stream from his lips when he was really warm to his work and nothing crossed his temper. The lore of Greece and Rome were as familiar and dear to him, with all his fondness for modern life and pursuits, as the latest odds and the gossip on the things of the day were to his companions. The power of concentration, argument, and fluent diction which he possessed—and he had little or none of the wordy crudity of youth—marked him for distinction. So thought we all, and so, of course, did his father, a grand old specimen of the English squire, a stately country gentleman, who supported his load of years like a boy, and carried his white head as gallantly as a soldier of the old guard. He was the owner of the gray Stauncel Court, which stood surrounded by its beeches in the midst of a fair domain of three thousand acres, every tenant on which was prepared to fight any man who doubted that the young squire would be the best "member for the country" in Parliament.

When he and I quitted the university simultaneously, an advantageous offer in Australia caused us to separate. I had heard nothing of "Firework Gerald" for ten years. I had been thinking of him but a few hours back, for I landed at the place where ten years previously he had wished me good-bye, and the first man I lit on in London was one better able than most to tell me of Gerald's career.

"And you have never heard?" said Chasemore gravely, "Why his name was in most of the newspapers."

"Likely enough; but in the bush newspapers are very few and far between."

"It's a long story," said Chasemore, "dine with me and I'll tell you all about it. I'm alone, for my wife and children are at the sea-side."

A few hours afterward I found myself an inmate of a house which showed that its owner had a good London practice. Chasemore had certainly made his coup in quitting Muddletown, and settling down here at Tyburnia.

The cloth removed, my host pushed over the claret, and drawing his chair to the fire relapsed into silence; his cheery conversation ended, the silence remained unbroken.

"Ah," he said suddenly, "I never feel so thankful for my own domestic happiness—I wish my Laura was at home, for you to make her acquaintance—than when I put together all the links, half forgotten, of poor Stauncel's story."

He rose and went to a drawer, took something out, and brought it to me. It was a leather case, in which was a gold hunting-watch with one cover dented in by a heavy blow. I looked at the crest, and saw it was the Stauncel falcon.

"There, said Chasemore, "there's my sole relic of poor Gerald. He gave it me just before he died."

"Died!" I said, in utter bewilderment, "Do you mean that Gerald's dead?"

"Dead. Eight years ago!"

I was thunderstruck. I had so keen a remembrance of the man we spoke of. His athletic form and splendid health were the envy of us all. He came of as long-lived and sound stock as could be found in England; and eight years age he was in the very first prime of manhood.

"Ah," said Chasemore, as if he guessed my thoughts, "no disease carried off Gerald, he was killed. I'll tell you all the story."

"You know the generous offer the old squire made me to reside as the salaried physician of the family at the court till I could find a practice to suit me. To a young fellow fresh from college and hall, with a bran new diploma, the attractions of a handsome salary, perfect kindliness, and equality with an ancient family, one of the first in the country, were great temptations. I went; I was treated by every one as a friend and visitor, and shared all their invitations. My work was a sinecure, so I kept my hand in by prescribing for the village, and aiding a little the overworked Union medical officer. As for Gerald, he was my constant companion, shooting and riding, and filling up his working hours by studying for his political career, for he was no mere faineant aspirant for legislative initials. You know what an intellect he had.

One of Mrs. Stauncel's oldest friends was a neighboring Mrs. Chetwynd, widow of an Indian Major, who had left her with a fair income and a beautiful daughter. The widow and her daughter were constant visitors at Stauncel's; in fact, they were on the most intimate footing, and Miss Chetwynd was "Lucy" to everybody (Gerald included) except myself. She was a brilliant blonde, with a very fair complexion, deep blue eyes, and a rosebud of a mouth. Tall, graceful, slimly formed, and light in all her movements, she was a model of feminine vigorous grace.

The young lady was clever in her own way. She drew well, talked French and Italian well, and danced well, but she had no taste for music or intellectual pursuits: therefore there was not much sympathy on that point between her and Gerald.

Gerald grew, I saw, fond of the young beauty, and he was not the man to enter half-heartedly on any cause. Ere long he was evidently passionately fond of Lucy Chetwynd. He told her so, and the girl confessed a penchant for him, for she was fond of him—very few girls would not have been so. And her mother, a thorough woman of the world, was alive to the eligibility of Mr. Stauncel's eldest son—Mr. Stauncel being a rich and long descended landowner. Generally you do not find the qualities united.

Lucy behaved very prettily. That's a queer word, isn't it? but it means just what I think. "Pretty" her demeanor and manner and speeches to him were; "loving" I never thought them. She was rather distraite at times, when he used to try to make her as enthusiastic as himself over Byron and Edgar Poe, or ran on for an hour descanting on Mozart's sonatas. Music to him was his life-blood; with her it was only a "pretty" accomplishment. Still, to all appearance, they seemed to suit each other well. But the engagement seemed only a half one.

In the summer down came a visitor. He had been a tuft at Christ Church in Gerald's time, and an ally of his on the river. He was a handsome man, rather insouciant in manner, and stupid in his ideas, or lack of them. But he was Raoul, fifth Viscount Desserton, and owner of half a Welsh county. That fact his admirers never forgot, and it threw a haze of romance and intellect around him; and the Viscount never forgot it himself.

He seemed very much struck with Lucy Chetwynd's beauty. Indeed, her tranquil loveliness was eminently adapted to catch admirers by a coup d'œil. And the young lady, even while knowing Gerald's fondness, and really fond of him herself, was not indisposed to receive a peer's glances of admiration. So matters went on for some days.

Mrs. Chetwynd was an old campaigner. The glitter of a coronet dazzled her, and made her feel thankful that the engagement between her daughter and Stauncel was only an embryo one. And she gave her daughter sundry secret instructions.

I don't think, looking back, that at first Lucy Chetwynd had any intention of jilting Gerald; but the girl's character was a weak one, and her love of admiration had been fostered from her childhood. So she gradually listened more and more complacently to Desserton's compliments, for a season of bitter dissipation at Paris had taught him one accomplishment, which was his sole one—saying pretty things neatly; and as Gerald was away day after day on his electioneering business—poor fellow, he'd come in at night and tell Lucy his day's adventures canvassing, as if she should share them—the peer had good chance of making play. And he made it.

The Squire and his son were too thoroughly high bred to dream of treachery in a guest. Moreover, the generous spirit of Gerald led him to trust a former friend, and especially a university friend, implicitly; so he let the Viscount escort Lucy hither and thither, with the full truthfulness of a confiding nature. But when those natures are deceived, their wrath is terrible.

"I can fancy what an untamed lion Gerald would have been," said I.

"Yes," said Chasemore, "you are right."

After about three weeks, and during Gerald's absence, Lord Desserton formally proposed to and was accepted by Lucy Chetwynd. The secret was kept well, and he having procured a license, they were married at a church near the parish; then Lord and Lady Desserton went suddenly abroad, accompanied by Mrs. Chetwynd.

The old squire's first intimation of the news was a letter well and craftily written by Mrs. Chetwynd. It dwelt much upon the incompatibility of temper, etc., of her daughter and his son, and ended by every wish for Mr. Gerald Stauncel's happiness. When Gerald returned, flushed with success (for he was returned by a majority), his mother met him at the door, and tearfully, lovingly broke the news to him. He listened to her, and then rushed into the old hall, where I was pacing up and down, sorely ill at ease. His face was flushed crimson, and his eyes glittered as you have seen them once or twice when he was in a fury. He seized my arm like a vice, and his working lips showed how the fierce wrath within choked his words.

"You' heard the news, Chasemore," he said at last. "You know he's robbed me of Lucy. Smooth-tongued, lying, treacherous cur. Curse him! he's taken advantage of my miserable weakness and blighted my life."

"Hush, Gerald," said I, "the servants." I had no need to say more; the pride of race was more potent than even love or hate. He bit his lip till it bled, and his anguished face settled into stern calm.

"You are right," he murmured; "but if I live I'll be revenged. Ah," and his voice broke, "my lost love!"

After this he grew calm and never spoke of the matter. Days, weeks, and months passed on, and though Lord Desserton's name brought the mad fury into his eyes and burst of curses from his lips, his fits of rage never turned against his false betrothed. To him she was a victim merely; he never blamed her in the slightest degree; his voice softened and his eyes filled at allusions to Lucy. But all his anger was reserved for Desserton. You know what his anger was, and can easily guess its intensity when roused by such a wrong.

Two years rolled away. Gerald devoted himself to his parliamentary work. At the end of the time he asked me in the summer to take a walking tour. We went, therefore, into Wales, with our rods and knapsacks, and amid the glorious scenery, the good fishing, and the novelty of life, enjoyed ourself much.

One day, as we were walking toward a small town, a carriage passed. Gerald started, turned pale, and gasped out one word, "Lucy."

"Whose carriage was that?" said I, to an English slate miner passing.

"His lordship's," said the man civilly; "he owns all our mines hereabouts."

"Not Lord Desserton?"

"Yes sir."

"His child," he muttered; "the future Viscount—their heir."

"Yes," said I, "and her child, Gerald, too."

He shivered, passed his hand over his eyes, and said in a calmer tone, "Aye, hers—Lucy's—Lucy's," with a pathetic intonation very pitiful to hear.

Gerald's Stauncel's face wore the old look of vengeance which had gone from it so long. I tried to soothe him, but my efforts were useless.

"You heard me swear, Chasemore," he said sternly, "that I'd be revenged. You can do no good. You know me, and might guess that, therefore."

I said nothing, and we reached our inn. All night long in the next room I heard my companion's restless steps, and in the morning he looked haggard with watching and care; but over his face there brooded that grim and savage look which boded the worst.

He ate nothing, and after breakfast asked the way to Desserton Hall. It lay three miles off, and seeing he was bent on going I decided on accompanying him.

We went on for some two miles, until we crossed a railway line. By the side of this ran a road marked "Private."

"His private path," said I mechanically.

"Yes," said Gerald, with a ferocious glare in his eyes that made me shudder; "therefore let us use it."

Hardly had we crossed and entered on the road when coming toward us from a little copse on the other side we saw two women. They advanced from some distance, and to reach us would cross the line.

"Merciful heavens!" said Gerald with a quick gasp, "Lucy!"

I looked and recognized Lady Desserton, her companion, a nurse, carrying a crowing, laughing baby. Stauncel's eye fell on it like that of a famished wolf; the angry glare in them was horrible, and the convulsion of his features dreadful.

The gallop of a horse was heard behind us. I looked back and saw Lord Desserton. Stauncel looked around and started, while the red flush darkened his face with passion.

"Do you see the dog?" said he furiously. "Now's my time—now!"

He turned. I seized his arm dreading some act of violence, when the shrill whistle of an engine rang out. I looked and saw the express coming at a tremendous speed, while a a shriek from Lucy drew my attention to what was indeed a terrible sight. The nurse had slipped on the rails, and the child had rolled in front of the advancing train, while the unhappy mother made the air resound with her screams; suddenly her eye fell on my companion. Stretching out her hands she shrieked, "Save him, Gerald, save him," and fell fainting into her husband's arms who had reached the spot.

Gerald paused a second, and then with a glance at Lucy sprang on the line. He seized the baby, tossed it to the nurse, and turned, but the express was on him like a flash; it passed, and Gerald Stauncel lay motionless between the rails. Desserton, his face blanched to the lips, hurried over, as did some laberers near. I half frantic rushed to our poor friend, and a cursory examination showed me how fatal were his injuries—arm and ribs broken by the blow of the engine buffer, and internal wounds. He only lived for an hour from the time he was struck down. He was sensible, and we carried him into a cottage near, and there in a strange group we stayed.

By and by the white face grew for a second flushed, the eyes opened, and the lips quivered. And Lady Desserton burst into bitter tears.

"The child?" gasped Stauncel, half inarticulately.

"You've saved him—you whom I so wronged," she sobbed out.

"I," he said, with a look of happiness from his bleeding face; "I, Phil; you hear her? That's my revenge."

How the Sun, the Moon, and the Wind Went Out to Dinner.

One day the sun, the moon, and the wind went out to dine with their uncle and aunt, the thunder and lightning. Their mother (one of the most distant stars you see far up in the sky) waited alone for her children's return.

Now both the sun and the wind were greedy and selfish. They enjoyed the great fete that had been prepared for them without a thought of saving any of it to take home to their mother—but the gentle moon did not forget her. Of every dainty dish that was brought round she placed a small portion under one of her beautiful long finger nails, that the star might also have a share in the treat.

On their return their mother, who had kept watch for them all night long with her little bright eye, said: "Well, children, what have you brought home for me?" Then the sun, who was the oldest, said: "I have brought nothing home for you. I went out to enjoy myself with my friends—not to fetch a dinner for my mother!" And the wind said: "Neither have I brought anything home for you, mother. You could hardly expect me to bring a collection of good things for you when I went out merely for my own pleasure." But the moon said: "Mother, fetch a plate; see what I have brought you." And shaking her hands she showered down such a choice dinner as was never seen before.

Then the star turned to the sun and spoke thus: "Because you went out to amuse yourself with your friends, and feasted and enjoyed yourself without any thought of your mother at home, you shall be cursed. Henceforth your rays shall be ever hot and scorching, and shall burn all that they touch. And men shall hate you, and cover their heads when you appear."

(And this is why the sun is so hot to this day.)

Then she turned to the wind and said: "You also forgot your mother in the midst of your selfish pleasures; hear your doom. You shall always blow in the hot, dry weather, and shall parch and shrivel living things. And men shall detest and avoid you from this very time."

(And this is why the wind in hot weather is so disagreeable.)

But to the moon she said: "Daughter, because you remembered your mother, and kept for her a share in your own enjoyment, from henceforth you shall be ever cool, calm, and bright. No noxious glare shall accompany your pure rays, and man shall ever call you 'blessed.'"

(And this is why the moon's light is so soft and cool and beautiful even to this day.)—Hindoo Fairy Legends.

THE HEATED TERM.

A Terrible Day and Horrible Night—A Stifled City.

[From the New York Times, July 15.]

The bald statement of the range in the shade of the thermometer for the past three days conveys but a faint idea of the blistering heat upon the city, of the stifling atmosphere that weighed upon it. The days were the hottest of the year, and the succeeding nights were exceptional and terrible in discomfort. The days baked the city—the nights scorched it.

As evening came on the heat grew more powerful, and night came bringing torture instead of relief. There was no relief anywhere. On the housetops or in the cellar; in the densest part of Baxter street or upon the piers stretching into the soundless, glassy rivers, was heat, all-pervading, all-prostrating. Men eschewed the conventionalities of life—flung neckties, collars, vests, and coats angrily away and searched wildly for something cool. The ladies stirred not beyond the precincts of home, and the devices they adopted can be imagined but not stated. Children wailed with extreme discomfort and with a seeming dread of something worse; horses fell prone and lifeless on the streets.

Evening business came to a stand-still save about the soda fountains and in ice-cream saloons. Driven to desperate extremities men swallowed these in sheer despair; but without hoping for the relief that did not come. Whoever could walked and avoided the street car ovens; whoever was forced to take a stage clambered to the roof, and these vehicles went up and down Broadway crowded on top and empty inside. A few desperate people entered the several theaters, allured by the placard: "This is the coolest place of amusement in the city." The announcement was cool enough, and there was a hope that some of its frigidity might have permeated the auditoriums.

To many homes of honest toil the torrid days brought disaster and wailing. Strong men went out in the morning to do strenuous battle for daily bread, and with the evening came not home. The missing ones were found in the wards of the hospitals gasping, unconscious, or already dead. The records of the days were ghastly. The books of the Coroner's office at noon yesterday showed thirty-four cases of sudden death, and with every hour the casualty roll increased until with the close of business hours it had mounted to fifty-four.

Since 1824 the average heat during the month of July has been about eighty-seven degrees. In 1838, however, it averaged ninety-two degrees. The general belief that August is a hotter month than July is not borne out by facts, as the average temperature during August since 1824 has not exceeded eighty-five degrees. During many years the average temperature during August was seventy-nine degrees.

Since 1825 the hottest days of the year have occurred in July and the latter end of June. The two hottest days experienced since that time were June 30, 1855, and July 10, 1838. On each occasion the mercury rose to 103 degrees.

It will be remembered that the July of 1866 was extremely hot. Professor Loomis says: "The hottest month at New Haven since 1778 was the month of July, 1825. The heat of the past thirty days (July, 1866), has been somewhat higher than that of July, 1825, so that we seem authorized in saying that the heat of the recent period has been more intense, and the extreme heat has been longer continued than has occurred before in eighty-nine years, and probably for a much longer period."

FROM TEXAS.

Attempted Assassination of Senator Cooley—Another Man Killed.

We learn from the San Antonio Express of the fourteenth instant that a well-known desperado named Dixon shot ex-Senator A. O. Cooley, while standing in his own door, at Fredericksburg, Texas, on Saturday, the eleventh. Mr. Cooley was the only Union member of the Texas Senate in 1866, and has on various occasions been made the subject of rude assaults by his enemies. His prominence as an able member of the Senate, in which he stood alone in his political faith, made him the target for the revenge of his enemies. His wounds were at first thought to be mortal, but later accounts are favorable to his recovery. We can not learn from the Express that Dixon had been arrested. The history of the latter is given, which is anything but flattering to Dixon, or the party of which he is a prominent member.

On the same night that the outrage was committed on Senator Cooley, a lawyer named Sim Williams was shot at Fredericksburg. He was called to his door about one o'clock at night, and shot, one ball taking effect in the abdomen, from the effects of which he will die. He leaves a wife, who has recently lost her eyesight, and ten children. Mr. Williams depended entirely upon his own exertions to support his large family. He has not left them enough to keep them one month. They will, therefore, become helpless paupers, as their mother is entirely incapable of even helping herself.

The victim of this last outrage was at one time identified with the rebellion, but after the war he became a sincere supporter of the provisional government. It was for his honesty in this particular that he was marked for revenge.

As in the case of Senator Cooley, no arrest is reported of the parties engaged in the assassination of Mr. Williams. It is quite evident that no one has been punished in either case.

Information Wanted,

Of Nimrod W. Jenkins, who wrote to his sister from Carlisle, Pennsylvania, in July, 1866, that he was going to start in a few days for Texas. Since then nothing has been heard of him. He is small, dark complexion, very black hair, intelligent looking. He was a soldier in the ninety-ninth Ohio regiment, and I fear has been murdered by some Texas rebel. Anything concerning him will be thankfully received by his father, James Jenkins, at Carthage, Missouri.

Blair—"Methinks I see the White House."
Seymour—"Where?"
Blair—"In my mind's eye, Horatio."

The Democracy are much in the condition of the fellow who was running away from the battle of Gettysburg. "Stop," said an officer to him; "stop, and go back to your company." "Stop. Thunder!" replied the frightened man; "I can't stop. I'm demoralized. My mind is all tore up." And on he went.

The boasted strength of Horatio Seymour in New York is shown in this: that he was five times the Democratic candidate for Governor, resulting in three defeats and two elections. On every occasion he ran lowest on the ticket, sometimes several thousand votes below associates who were elected.

Governor Seymour's chances are beginning to be understood. He will get all but the Republican party and the floating vote.—N. Y. Tribune.

LATEST BY TELEGRAPH.

WASHINGTON, July 17—House—The prior orders of the House were deferred in favor of the funding bill, by a vote of 59 to 58.

Mr. Dawes presented credentials of Kellogg, Price and Buckley, claiming seats as representatives from Alabama, and asked for their reference to the Committee on Elections. Mr. Brooks inquired whether it would not be proper for the committee to inquire whether the gentlemen were elected at a one-sided election or not.

Mr. Dawes said the committee would inquire faithfully as to any matter committed to them. They simply made an examination of these credentials to ascertain if they were correct and presented a prima facia case. Mr. Cullom, of Illinois, asked if there was any law to prevent electors from all voting on one side if they desired to do so. Mr. Brooks replied that he knew of none; but that there was a law of Congress prescribing how these elections should be held, and the people of Alabama had not held their election in conformity with that law. The credentials were referred to the Committee on Elections.

A committee of conference appointed on the Indian appropriation, when the funding bill was resumed.

Mr. Stevens favored paying the bonds in greenbacks.

A wild discussion ensued. Finally an amendment making but one class of bonds at 3.65 per cent interest, with forty years to run, was adopted.

Without definite action the bill was postponed.

The credentials of the Louisiana Representatives were referred to the Election Committee.

After agreeing to reconsider the funding bill to-night, the House took a recess.

Senate—John A. Abbott and John Pool, Senators from North Carolina, and John S. Harris and Wm. P. Kellogg, from Louisiana, were seated.

The bill authorizing a temporary three per cent loan for liquidation of the compound interest notes was passed.

A new conference committee was appointed on the temporary executive appointments, the House having disagreed to the report of the former committee.

Louisiana's ratification of the fourteenth amendment was read, when the Senate proceeded to consider the appropriation bills, went into executive session, and adjourned.

The Senate rejected Francis Price as Consul at Havana.

Both Houses met to-night.

Senator Howard, of the Joint Committee on Ordnance, submitted a report to-day charging corruption on General A. B. Dyer, Chief of Ordnance, and requesting his removal.

WASHINGTON, July 17.—Isaac J. Lerch, member of Congress from North Carolina, is missing. His mail has been coming here for some time, but nothing has been heard of him.

Hon. William Orton was re-elected President of the Western Union Telegraph Company.

Indications are that the funding bill will fail this session.

The Senate is indisposed to agree with the House in the amendment to the Alaska appropriation bill, whereby the House becomes a party to treaty making. It is expected that the House will recede.

The Senate Pacific Railroad Committee had under consideration to-day, a bill to build a railroad from Cairo to the Rio Grande, through Arkansas and Texas. The bill calls for government aid in the shape of a guarantee upon the bonds of the company.

The committee also considered a bill, building a road two hundred miles long in the lowlands of Mississippi, also building levees along the same section. Both bills were postponed until next session.

It is understood that General Fremont is at the head of the proposed road between Cairo and the Rio Grande.

A full Cabinet meeting was held to-day and continued three hours.

The third party movement is dead.

Senator Bayard, of Delaware, has sailed for Europe.

Internal revenue receipts to-day $496,000.

WASHINGTON, July 18.—Senate.—South Carolina's ratification of the fourteenth article was presented.

The applications of the Georgia and Mississippi conventions for loans were indefinitely postponed.

The bill authorizing corporations created by Federal authority to bring suits in Federal courts passed.

The bill requiring five hundred feet span for bridges over navigable streams, after provoking considerable discussion as to the uselessness and danger of such bridges, and retorts from friends of the bill that the opposition were stimulated by two railroad companies that desired to build cheap bridges over the Ohio river. Bill postponed.

The bill for the protection of naturalized citizens abroad was discussed to executive session, after which the Senate adjourned.

House—Ninety days were allowed the Election Committee to investigate disloyalty in Missouri contested election case.

Louisiana Representatives, Vidal, Sypher, Newsham, Mann, and Blackburn; and South Carolina Representatives, Goss, and Whittemore, were seated.

The tariff bill was recommitted to the Ways and Means Committee, which kills it for this session.

The funding bill was resumed and discussed to adjournment.

Among the rejections of the Senate today is Collector Smythe as minister to Austria.

WASHINGTON, July 18.—Mr. Burlingame, Minister from China, is giving the members of the press a grand dinner to-night. It is a very handsome affair.

WASHINGTON, July 18.—The following is a synopsis of the President's message, which was sent to Congress to-day:

Quoting General Jackson in support of his views, and arguing that by the present system the will of a majority of the people is liable to be defeated in the choice of a President; favors the election of State Senators by the people instead of by the State Legislatures; and a limited instead of a life tenure of Supreme Court Judges; pointing out the interest the Chief Justice and Vice-President have in cases of Presidential impeachment.

The President closes his argument as follows: "Time, observation, and experience have confirmed these convictions, and as a matter of public duty and with a deep sense of my constitutional obligation to recommend to the consideration of Congress such measures as I deem necessary and expedient, I submit the accompanying propositions, and urge their adoption and submission to the judgment of the people."

The President's term of office shall be for six years. The States shall be divided into equal districts, corresponding with the number of Representatives and Senators in Congress, and each district shall count as one vote for President and Vice-President respectively. The person in each district receiving the highest number of votes from voters qualified to vote for the popular branch of the State Legislature within said district. These facts shall be certified to Governors of States, to Senators in Congress from such State, to the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House. The Federal Congress shall be in session on the second Monday in October, 18—, and every sixth year thereafter, and the President of the Senate, both Houses present, shall open and count the votes, and the persons receiving the highest number shall be President and Vice-President respectively if they have a majority of the votes cast; otherwise a second election occurs between the two highest for each office. If at the second election both receive a like number of votes of districts, the candidate receiving the highest number of votes in the largest number of States shall be President. The same rules shall apply to Vice-President; but in case of a second election being necessary for Vice-President but not for President, then the Senate shall elect a Vice-President from the two candidates receiving the highest number of votes of districts. No President or Vice-President shall be eligible for the second term. In case of the President's removal by any cause, the office devolves on the Vice-President; and in case of the Vice-President's removal the Presidential office devolves on the Secretary of State, following whom as successors come the Secretaries of the Treasury, War, Navy, Interior, Postmaster General, and Attorney General, who shall exercise the functions of office until the disabilities are removed, or a new election held.

The Senate of the United States shall be composed of two Senators from each State chosen by election of the State Legislature, to hold six years, each having one vote.

The President, after the adoption of the proposed amendment, shall divide Judges of the Supreme Court into three classes, expiring the fourth, eighth, and twelfth years, so that one may be chosen every fourth year.

WASHINGTON, July 18.—The Southern Representatives conducted themselves quietly, voting with the Radicals on all questions.

Their prompt party votes on subjects which have been seriously discussed for months, and upon which the most shrewd legislators were doubtful, provoke smiles on the floor of either House.

It is stated that the three hours Cabinet session yesterday was very important, and that some Executive suggestions regarding the Presidential elections will be sent to Congress to-day, and that the veto of the bill regulating the electoral college will be withheld until Monday.

The Senate last night passed the Alaska treaty, with an amendment ignoring the joint power of the House with the Senate and President in making treaties. The bill as it passed the Senate simply appropriates money to fulfill the stipulations of the treaty.

The Senate also passed bills providing for selling the St. Louis arsenal property; aiding improvements in the Mississippi river at Rock Island and Des Moines rapids; exempting certain vessels trading with Canada from tonnage fees, and the civil appropriation bill.

The House considered the funding bill.

WASHINGTON, July 20.—Vetoing the electoral college bill, the President maintains that the Southern States were never out of the Union, and asserts that they were practically and constitutionally restored previous to March, 1867. Narrating the provisions of the Constitution, the President says the joint resolution, by implication at least, concedes that these States were States by virtue of their organization prior to the fourth of March, 1867, but denies to them the right to vote in the election of President and Vice-President of the United States. It follows either that this assumption of power is wholly unauthorized by the Constitution, or that the States so excluded from voting were out of the Union by reason of the rebellion, and have never been legitimately restored.

Being fully satisfied that they were never out of the Union, and that their relations have been legally and constitutionally restored, I am forced to the conclusion that the joint resolution which deprives them of their right to have their vote for President and Vice-President received and counted is in conflict with the Constitution, and that Congress has no more power to reject their votes than those of the States which have been uniformly loyal to the Federal Union. It is worthy of remark that if the States whose inhabitants were recently in rebellion were legally and constitutionally organized, and restored to their rights prior to the fourth of March, 1867, as I am satisfied they were, the only legitimate authority under which the election for President and Vice-President can be held therein must be derived from the governments instituted before that period.

It clearly follows that all the State governments organized in those States under the act of Congress for that purpose, and under military control, are illegitimate and of no validity whatever; and in that view the votes cast in those States for President and Vice-President in pursuance of acts passed since the fourth of March, 1867, and in obedience to the so-called reconstruction acts of Congress, can not be legally received and counted, while the only votes in those States that can be legally cast and counted will be those cast in pursuance of the laws in force in the several States prior to the legislation by Congress upon the subject of reconstruction.

The President proceeds to argue that while the people of the Southern States were not in rebellion, some people of the Northern States were in rebellion, and that the act for exclusion applies logically equally to New York and Virginia.

The message concludes: If Congress were to provide by law that the votes of none of the States should be received and counted if cast for a candidate who differed in political sentiment with a majority of the two houses, such legislation would at once be condemned by the country as an unconstitutional and revolutionary usurpation of power. It would, however, be exceedingly difficult to find in the Constitution any more authority for the passage of the joint resolution under consideration than for an enactment looking directly to the rejection of all votes not in accordance with the political preference of a majority of Congress. No power exists in the Constitution authorizing the joint resolution or the supposed law, the only difference being that one would be more palpably unconstitutional and revolutionary than the other. Both would rest upon the radical error that Congress has the power to prescribe terms and conditions to the right of the people of the States to cast their votes for President and Vice-President.

WASHINGTON, July 20.—Senate—The rights of naturalized citizens abroad were discussed all day, interrupted only by the reading of the President's veto message and the passage of the electoral college bill over the veto by forty-five to eight—the Southern Senators, except Poole, who was absent, voting with the majority.

The Senate then went into executive session and adjourned.

House—The credentials of Lush, from North Carolina, and Bowen, from South Carolina, were referred to the Election Committee.

Jones presented a bill extending the provisions of the law of July, 4, 1864, limiting the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims over North Carolina. Referred to the Judiciary Committee.

Vinnie Ream was restored to her studio in the capitol by resolution.

Mr. Eldridge, of Wisconsin, asked leave to offer a resolution requesting the Secretary of War to communicate to the House the names of persons under sentence of military commission or courts martial at the Dry Tortugas, the crimes with which such persons are charged, and the names of persons in confinement by order of military commissions at Atlanta, Georgia, and Charleston, South Carolina.

Mr. Schofield, of Pennsylvania, objected, and Mr. Eldridge withdrew the resolution.

Mr. Lush, of North Carolina, and Mr. Bowen, of South Carolina, were seated.

Mullins, opposing Bowen's admission, said "Bowen was born in Ohio and went to South Carolina ten or fifteen years ago. When the rebellion broke out he voluntarily went into the Confederate service, accepted a commission as captain, and was subsequently promoted to major, probably for his gallantry in shooting down Union men. While a major (Mullins was reliably informed) Bowen killed his rebel colonel. But of this he (Mullins) would not complain. For this act Bowen was incarcerated and put in irons, but was released when the Federals advanced. He then had one of two things to do: either to be hung or join the Federal forces. He did the latter, and he (Mullins) was informed by General Sickles himself that in the Federal army Bowen acted so badly that he had to be incarcerated by the Federal authorities.

When the war was over he became a Radical and adopted the faith of franchise for the black man. He (Mullins) had no disposition to oppose the pardon of men who showed proper penitence, but he would not reward treason by making these people rulers over us as soon as they came back. He doubted very much whether the House was pursuing the proper policy in this matter.

The electoral college bill passed, the veto notwithstanding, by 134 to 36.

Adjourned.

WASHINGTON, July 20.—Secretary Seward addresses a letter to whom it concerns stating that Congress in June, 1866, passed a resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, known as article fourteen, which he quotes. Secretary Seward states that the act of 1818 requires the Secretary of State to publish amendments of the Constitution when adopted, but no act authorized the Secretary to determine and decide doubtful questions as to authenticity of organization of State Legislatures, or the power of any State Legislature to recall previous ratification. Twenty-three States have ratified the amendment, and also the bodies avowing themselves as Legislatures of Arkansas, North Carolina, Florida, Louisiana, South Carolina, and Alabama.

Mr. Evarts was installed as Attorney General.

General Gillem's official report of the Mississippi election shows that the constitution was defeated by 7629.

The President has signed the new tax bill.

The Secretary of War has issued an order enforcing the eight-hour law.

It appears further that Ohio and New Jersey have withdrawn their assent, but the efficacy of these withdrawals is doubtful. The whole number of states is thirty-seven; he then proclaims the amendment adopted provided the original resolutions of Ohio and New Jersey are valid notwithstanding the withdrawal.

WASHINGTON, July 20.—The President has nominated John L. Dawson, of Pennsylvania, Minister to Russia, W. S. Rosecrans to Spain, and J. A. McClernand to Mexico, Henry W. Watts to Austria, Wm. J. Wells, Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, C. C. Cox of Maryland, Commissioner of Pensions, and Elisha Foot, Commissioner of Patents, Edmund Cooper, Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

WASHINGTON, July 21—Senate.—A concurrent resolution that the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution has been duly adopted passed.

A resolution paying the Southern Senators from the beginning of the Fortieth Congress, meeting opposition, went over under the rules.

A motion to adjourn till Friday drew from Mr. Hendricks the remark that the President would properly avail himself of the constitutional ten days to defeat the military bill which arms Southern militia at the option of the Secretary of War.

A debate of great bitterness ensued, in which the alleged outrages on Southern loyalists were again ventilated.

A bill changing ports of entry from Plymouth to Edenton, and Beaufort to Port Royal, passed.

A resolution seating the Alabama members provoked a long debate, but finally passed.

The concurrent resolution declaring the fourteenth article duly adopted passed.

WASHINGTON, July 21.—A vote in the Republican caucus to-day showed eighty favoring recess till September or October against twenty-eight favoring the regular adjournment.

A full Cabinet meeting was held to-day, including Mr. Evarts for the first time.

Both Houses are in session to-night.

General Gillem's report regarding the Mississippi election shows that both parties charge fraud, but he can find none that are within military reach. The constitution is defeated, and military rule will be continued.

General Gillem recommends modification of the law whereby all registered and qualified voters may fill vacancies which exist or may occur in civil, State, or national offices.

WASHINGTON, July 21.—Frank P. Blair's letter of acceptance, dated Omaha, has been received here and will be published in the Intelligencer in the morning. Mr. Blair accuses the Radicals of usurping the power of the courts and executive, and seeking to maintain their usurpations by the sword, and insists upon the right of the people against Congress to control questions at issue.

WASHINGTON, July 22.—Senate—Messrs. Robertson and Sawyer, Senators from South Carolina, were seated. The seating of Sawyer excited a prolonged discussion. Affidavits of C. C. Bowen and Thomas J. Mackey were read, declaring their belief that Sawyer was ineligible; that he was a shareholder in blockade running, and a member of a military organization in Charleston in 1864.

Senator Conklin said he was free to say he did not believe one word of the charges against Mr. Sawyer.

Mr. Robertson, who had been previously seated so that he might speak and vote in Mr. Sawyer's case, heard none of these charges in the South Carolina Legislature, and he believed them unfounded, and that they were brought up by the disappointed friends of Dr. Mackey.

The question of adjournment was resumed, when the arming of the Southern States was again discussed. The bill will undoubtedly become a law before Congress adjourns.

The concurrent resolution to take a recess from Monday to the third Monday in September passed. Adjourned.

House—Messrs. Kellogg, of Alabama, and Tift, of South Carolina, were seated.

A bill passed removing disabilities from Simon Carley, of South Carolina; Michael Hahn, of Louisiana; and John Milledga, of Georgia.

Mr. Stevens made personal explanations denying the remarks attributed to him about paying the bonds in gold, and denouncing the papers attacking him as rebel or half rebel and all in bondholders' interests.

The Speaker made a statement regarding the tax bill in answer to a question, and had a message from the President read, in which the approval of the tax bill was announced. The Secretary of the Treasury and the Commissioner of Internal Revenues, however, had advices that the bill was not signed. The Speaker had no information other than that contained in the President's message that the bill had been signed.

The amendment to the Alaska appropriation was disapproved and a committee of conference appointed.

The bill extending the time for the completion of the Southern Pacific railroad passed.

In the House, to-day, on motion of General Sypher, the Committee on Railroads and Canals was instructed to inquire into the expediency of making the levees of the Mississippi a public highway, or otherwise improving the levees at public expense. Also extending the act of 1864, to indemnify loyal citizens for losses sustained during the war over Louisiana.

WASHINGTON, July 22.—The uncertainty about the tax bill creates much excitement, and it seems probable now that the President will veto it on the ground of innovation on the appointing power.

The Senate will disagree to the House amendments to the funding bill.

The President has nominated S. Ferguson Beach District Attorney for Virginia, Oliver Hawkins Consul General at Havana, Wm. E. Wells Collector of the Fourth Virginia District, and Wm. Selden Collector of the Second Virginia District.

There was a meeting to-day of the Southern members of Congress and Union men. Mr. Whittemore, of South Carolina, president; H. F. Fish, of Mississippi, secretary. A committee of five was appointed to draft resolutions.

John C. Fremont introduced the following resolution:

That, in view of the President's threatening attitude regarding reconstruction, Congress should remain in session until after the Presidential election. Congress should immediately give Virginia, Mississippi, and Texas loyal State governments. Congress should pass a stringent law for the enforcement of the fourteenth article of the Constitutional amendment.

Pending consideration of the above, a resolution was offered that the President should be impeached, and pledging themselves to resist adjournment or recess until removal is accomplished.

The meeting adjourned to to-night.

WASHINGTON, July 22.—The President proclaims the adoption of the fourteenth article by the alleged Alabama Legislature.

The sub-committee on reconstruction have prepared a bill for establishing a provisional government in Texas. It will be considered by a full committee to-morrow, and then reported to the House. The first section provides that the constitutional convention of Texas shall be empowered to make removals and appointments of all officers of the provisional government, and authorizes the provisional Governor to appoint registers judges of elections, but judges not to be candidates, to organize and maintain a constabulary force, to maintain peace, and to execute the laws.

The convention is given power to provide for its own assembling from time to time and for ascertaining the results of elections which may be held to ratify any constitution the convention may adopt.

The second section makes it the duty of the military authorities to aid the convention in executing the laws and maintaining order.

THE GERMANIA LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY, established in 1860, and based upon the most approved principles of Life Insurance security, presents its claims for consideration, believing that its solid foundation already secured by the faithful and efficient management of its officers and Board of Directors will give it the preference above all other similar institutions.

It is purely Mutual, as the net profits are distributed among the parties insured, the interest of the capital stock being only five per cent according to its charter.

It assumed the system of cash payments at the commencement of its existence, and maintained it faithfully until now, and promises the same for the future, thereby securing to policy holders the full amount for which they are insured. The advantage of this system over the half cash and half note system is patent to every careful observer, but will be more fully illustrated by the following statement and table:

If a person of thirty years of age insures his life for the amount of $1000 in one of the credit companies, and pays a premium of $28 30 per year, with a note for half of the premium, then by means of this note and interests thereon the amount will become less and less in the following proportions:

| | |
|---|---|
| After 10 years the $1000 will amount to | $887 44 |
| After 15 years the $1000 will amount to | 795 28 |
| After 20 years the $1000 will amount to | 666 02 |
| After 25 years the $1000 will amount to | 484 73 |
| After 30 years the $1000 will amount to | 230 47 |
| After 33 years the $1000 will amount to | 32 53 |
| After 34 years the $1000 will amount to | Nothing. |

So that after a lapse of 34 years the whole amount will be eaten up, notwithstanding the parties insured paid their money in good faith.

The large dividend of 40 per cent declared last January is evidence of the care and success with which the Managers have conducted the enlarged and rapidly increasing interests of the Company, and vouches for its future brilliant and permanent prosperity.

Parties contemplating an assurance on their lives will do well to examine the status of this Company, every facility for which will be given by the

PURE LOVE.

BY FRANCOIS XAVIER.

O God, my spirit loves but thee,
Not that in heaven its home may be,
But thou on the accursed tree,
In mercy hast embraced me;
For me the cruel nails, the spear,
The ignominious scoff didst bear;
Countless, unuterable woes;
The bloody sweat, death's pangs and throes.
These thou didst bear—all these for me,
A sinner and estranged from thee.
And wherefore no affection show
Jesus, to thee, that lovedst me so?
Not that in heaven my home may be,
Not lest I die eternally,
Not for the hopes of joys above me,
But even as thyself didst love me,
So love—I will ever love thee.

THE CLEAR VISION.

BY JOHN G. WHITTIER.

I did but dream. I never knew
What charms our sternest seasons wore.
Was never yet the sky so blue,
Was never earth so white before.
Till now I never saw the glow
Of sunset on yon hills of snow,
And never learned the bough's design
Of beauty in its leafless lines.

Did ever such a morning break
As that my eastern windows see?
Did ever such a moonlight take
Weird photographs of shrub and tree?
Rang ever bells so wild and fleet
The music of the winter street?
Was ever yet a sound by half
So merry as yon schoolboy's laugh?

O earth! with gladness overfraught
No added charm thy face hath found;
Within my heart the charge is wrought,
My footsteps make enchanted ground.
From couch of pain and curtained room
Forth to thy light and air I come,
To find in all that meets my eyes
The freshness of a glad surprise.

Fair seem these winter days, and soon
Shall blow the warm west winds of spring,
To set the unbound rills in tune,
And hither urge the bluebird's wing.
The vales shall laugh in flowers, the woods
Grow misty green with leafing buds,
And violets and windflowers sway
Against the throbbing heart of May.

Speak forth, my lips, in praise, and own
The wiser love severely kind:
Since, richer for its chastening grown,
I see, whereas I once was blind.
The world, O Father! hath not wronged
With loss the life by thee prolonged;
But still, with every added year,
More beautiful thy works appear.

As thou hast made thy world without,
Make thou more fair my world within:
Shine through its ling'ring clouds of doubt,
Rebuke its haunting shades of sin;
Fill, brief or long, my granted span
Of life with love to thee and man;
Strike when thou wilt the hour of rest,
But let my last days be my best!

Washington Correspondence.

WASHINGTON, July 16.

A Russian once said "he never knew what cold weather was till he reached the south of Italy." People of New Orleans here are sighing for the cool nights of the Crescent City; the declining sun brings little relief from the furnace-like breath which passes over these burning pavements and dusty streets. Parts of Pennsylvania Avenue are watered by private enterprise, the other streets may be watered from the hydrants once a day without fine. With the vast waterworks tapping the Potomac river, one would suppose there would be water sufficient to supply any demand, but it seems to be otherwise. In any other city the river would afford an ample supply.

The treasury extension is approaching its completion; the extension takes a downward direction as well as a northerly one; that is a hole has been dug to set the north end in, a beautiful Park has been spoiled by excavating between street lines, and the building in order to expose its first story; it is mournful to behold such a botch in an edifice, which in some respects is an object of architectural beauty.

The tax bill has passed both Houses of Congress; the tax on whisky now is fifty cents. It is supposed by the legislators, that the frauds heretofore practiced by whisky rings, will, under the present law be avoided; but when was the whisky business an honest one? Take it as a business it has been a lying, cheating, robbing, mean, debasing, dirty concern; and to that supposes the present tax will be collected if it can be avoided, has ved to little purpose. But is it matter of surprise and mortification that the Congress of the United States should cower before these death-dealers?

The papers of the morning report a deed of infamy perpetrated by tying a piece of black crape at the door of Chief Justice Chase. It is a pity such vagabonds can not receive their dues. Religion and politics have been considered antipodes. We should judge so from the entire, or nearly entire, exclusion of God from the thoughts of political assemblies, or mention of his government in any of the resolutions adopted by them. The government will never fulfill its mission till the Deity shall be more recognized by the public mind, and devout as well as intelligent men shall give more attention to the means of introducing candidates for office. It is a scandal and an insult to the Supreme Being, that candidates for the most important offices in the government are, as a rule, first nominated in grogshops or by their patrons.

There have been several sudden deaths recently, not perhaps as many as there was reason to fear would occur under the unparalelled heat of the city.

A new work has recently appeared exhibiting "Life among the Mormons," by a surgeon of the United States army. The author was for some time stationed in New Orleans. This very interesting work is an enlargement of a series of letters written for and published in the New Orleans ADVOCATE. That portion of the work devoted more particularly to Mormonism exhibits that detestable cheat in its hideous proportions and deformity; its existence is a foul blot on our country, and illustrates how reckless of the laws of God and public decency our rulers sometimes are in the appointment of men to office. That such a beast as Brigham Young should be a ruler anywhere on this continent is appalling. The author of the work under notice deals with this monstrous plague in no rose-water style. Congress has had some dabbling legislation on the subject, but that is all. The members of the House will soon sweat out—the hall, being defective in ventilation, is hot, almost beyond endurance. The failure of the House to pass the clerks' relief bill is an act bordering on inhumanity, especially in view of the handsome increase made to their own salary; the present rates of compensation were fixed when the government paid gold: if thus paid now, there would be no complaint, but every article of consumption has advanced, propotioned to the advance of gold, and the wages of every class of employes have advanced accordingly; the clerks of the government, however, form the only exception to the rule. The plea of economy is a pitiful one, standing as it does along side of the immense frauds practiced on the government unchecked, and with here and there an exception the perpetrators of them unpunished.

On Education.

BY F. K. HYDE.

NEW ORLEANS, July 24, 1868.

MR. EDITOR: As true Republicans—as lovers of the human family, we can not but feel a deep interest in the condition and progress of mankind. We believe that it is for us to solve the problem of the destiny of the colored race in America, but the preponderance of numbers, power, wealth, and learning still belong to the white race, and the progress of the colored race is greatly dependent on the progress of the white race; indeed, it is not at all certain that the bigoted, prejudiced whites may not be urged on by the stimulus of necessity to discover and reduce to practice truths of a nobler and more elevating character than they may attain or embody by constant vituperation of the colored race.

The colored race has its bold thinkers—its true Republicans—its heroic philanthropists—and they are not idle. What is the state of the southern portion of this republic at present, and what may be anticipated for the future, we may learn from careful observation.

A great and marked barrier to peace and harmony in the South, which gives great permanence to the old abuses and institutions of slavery, is the prejudice of the whites against the elevation of the colored race, or in other words caste.

This evil is remarkably strong throughout the South, and constitutes, in our opinion, the chief difficulty in the way of rendering the Union at once to quietude.

The spirit of caste is deeply rooted in the Southern mind; the idea of "superiority" and "inferiority" as resulting from differences of color is almost universal, and reveals itself by an alternate servility and arrogance of manner that reflect clearly and painfully this mischievous, unchristian creed, from the highest gilded rounds of the social ladder down to its lowest, muddiest steps; pride and meanness stand together hand in hand. Noble exceptions undoubtedly exist, and here as elsewhere there is an infection in the air that promises something better for the future; but as yet caste holds unshaken sway in this strange dwelling place of power and weakness, of luxury and misery, of progress and prejudice, yclept through so many years "Sunny South."

What can break down this prejudice of caste? Nothing, evidently, but to educate the colored people and give them an intellectual power which will enable them to respect themselves manfully and to command the respect of the white race. Hence the leading question of progress that should engage the attention of the Legislature should be, What is being done for education?

For education there has been much done in the South, but in a disjointed, expensive, inefficient manner, and exclusively for the benefit of one race. Instead of one all pervading, straightforward. State-directed and republican system, there are two or three in operation, necessarily conflicting with and damaging each other. And yet a vast majority really desire the education of all whites, and are willing to pay for it.

The Southerners are good at paying taxes, wherein they have had large experience, and if they grumble a little now and then at their amount as oppressive, it is only because they take pleasure in grumbling, and this seems to afford them a good excuse for it. They would not be deprived of it if they could: witness the discussions of the taxes, income, internal, State, and city, which every Southerner denounces while none justifies abstractedly; and yet it is always upheld and we presume always will be. And if the question could now be put to a direct vote, even of the taxpayers alone, "Shall or shall not a system of common school education for the State of Louisiana be maintained by a national tax?" I believe common schools would be triumphant. Why? Because education is the bulwark of liberty. Even if the system advised by the papers opposed to colored children going to public schools were matured, put in operation, and to be sustained by private contributions alone, we should despair of its success.

The Last Papal Allocution.

THE POPE AND THE AUSTRIAN REFORMS.

Venerable Brethren: We should never have imagined that after the convention agreed to nearly thirteen years ago between us and the Emperor and Apostolic King of Austria, to the great joy of all well-minded men, we should be obliged to lament upon the miseries and serious misfortunes which, by the machinations of evil-disposed men, now afflict and annoy in a deplorable manner the Catholic Church in the empire of Austria. In fact, the enemies of our divine religion have been unceasing in their efforts to destroy the said convention, and to do the greatest harm to the church, to us, and to this Apostolic See.

On the twenty-first of December last the Austrian government passed an odious law, to be carried out and strictly observed in every district of the empire, even in those districts where the Catholic religion exclusively prevails. That law establishes free liberty for all opinions, liberty of the press, of all faith, and no matter what confession or doctrine; it grants to the members of every confession the right of establishing public schools and colleges, and members of every confession are allowed to be admitted on the same footing with the sanction of the State. Although we felt great grief on being informed of the fact, and wished to raise our voice against it, we, nevertheless, gave proof of forbearance, and we deemed it advisable then to keep silent, chiefly supported by the hope that the Austrian government, lending a docile ear to the just complaints of our venerable brethren (the holy prelates of Austria) would return to more wholesome ideas, and adopt a sounder determination. But our hopes have been frustrated. In fact, the same government on the twenty-fifth of May of this present year issued another law which compels all the subjects, even the Catholic ones of the empire, deciding that sons born of a mixed marriage must follow the religion of the father, and the daughters that of the mother; and that under seven years of age they must follow in the stray path of their parents from the true faith. Moreover, the same law suppresses entirely the validity of the promises which the Catholic Church, with reason and with the greatest justice, exacts and prescribes absolutely before the celebration of mixed marriages. It makes apostacy itself a civil law, both as regards the Catholic religion and the Christian religion generally; it suppresses all authority of the Church over cemeteries, and Catholics are bound to allow the bodies of heretics to be buried in their churchyard, if they have not any of their own. Moreover, the same government, on the twenty-fifth day of May of the present year, did not hesitate to promulgate a law on marriage which entirely cancels all the enactments agreed to in the convention already alluded to; this law restores the former Austrian laws, which are contrary to the laws of the church; it admits, and even confirms, that form of marriage absolutely condemnable, called civil marriage, when the authority of any confession whatever refuses the celebration of the marriage on grounds which are not admitted as valid, as legal by the civil authorities. By this law this same government has suppressed all the authority and jurisdiction of the church on matters relative to marriage, as also all competent ecclesiastical tribunals on the subject. It has also promulgated a law on education which suppresses all the influence of the church over education, decreeing that the whole superior supervision of education, literature, and science, as also the inspection of schools, appertains to the state which finally decrees that religious teaching in the public schools must be placed in the hands of members of each separate confession; that any religious society may open private or special schools for the youth of its faith; that those schools shall also be subject to the supreme inspection of the state, and that the school books shall be submitted to the approval of the civil authorities; with the exception, however, of such books as are meant for religious instruction, books which must be submitted to the approval of competent authorities of each confession.

You see, consequently, venerable brethren, how necessary it is strongly to reprove and condemn those abominable laws, sanctioned by the Austrian government—laws which are in flagrant contradiction with the doctrines of the Catholic religion, with its venerable rights, its authority, and its divine institution; with our power and that of the Apostolic See, as also with our concordat already quoted, and with natural right itself.

In virtue, then, of the care of all churches intrusted to us by the Lord Jesus Christ, we raise our voice in your most illustrious assembly. We reprove and we condemn, by our apostolic authority, the laws which we have enumerated, and everything, general or special, in those same laws or in matters which refer to ecclesiastical right which has been decreed or attempted unjustly, in any manner whatsoever, by the Austrian government or its subordinates, whomsoever they may be. In virtue of this same authority which appertains to us we declare those decrees null and powerless in themselves and in their effect, both as regards the present and the future.

As regards the authors of those laws, especially those who congratulate themselves on being Catholics, and have not feared to propose, establish, approve, and carry out the above laws and acts, we conjure and entreat them not to forget the censures and spiritual punishments which the ecclesiastical institutions and the decrees of the oecumenical councils inflict, as having been deserved ipso facto by the violators of the rights of the church. Meantime, we rejoice greatly in the Lord, and we give our well-deserved praise to our venerable brothers the Archbishops and Bishops of the Austrian empire, who, with truly Episcopal energy, have not ceased to warn their flocks of their duties boldly to defend and protect, by speech as well as writing, the cause of the church and the said concordat concluded with us.

We also desire from our hearts that our venerable brothers the Archbishops and Bishops of Hungary, following the example of their colleagues, will show themselves disposed to display the same zeal and the same ardor to protect the rights of the church and defend the concordat against the attacks which are directed against it. Nevertheless, under these calamities, which in these times afflict the church everywhere, we do not cease, venerable brothers, with the deepest fervor and humility of heart, to pray to God that He may upset all the criminal designs of His enemies and those of his holy church, suppress their impious efforts, and in His mercy lead them both into the paths of justice and salvation.

Successful Temperance Logic.

A small temperance society had been started in a community very much under the control of a rich distiller, commonly called "Bill Myers." This man had several sons who had become drunkards on the facilities afforded by their education at home. The whole family was arrayed against the movement, and threatened to break up any meeting called to promote the object. Learning this, the Rev. T. P. Hunt went to a neighboring district for volunteers for that particular occasion. He then gave out word for a meeting, and at the time found his friends and enemies about equal in numbers. This fact prevented any outbreak, but could not prevent noise.

Mr. Hunt mounted the platform, and by a few sharp anecdotes and witty sayings soon silenced all noise except the sturdy "Bill Myers," the old Dutchman crying out, "Misther Hunt, money makes the mare go." To every shot, which seemed ready to demolish him, the old fellow presented the one shield, "Misther Hunt, money makes the mare go."

At last Mr. Hunt stopped and addressed the imperturbable German:

"Look here, Bill Myers, you say that money makes the mare go, do you?"

"Yes, dat ish just what I say, Mishter Hunt."

"Well, Bill Myers, you own and work a distillery, don't you?" inquired Mr. Hunt.

"Dat ish none of your business, Mishter Hunt. But den I ish not ashamed of it. I has got a still, and work it too."

"And you say, 'Money makes the mare go;' do you mean that I have come here to get the money of these people?"

"Yes, Mishter Hunt, dat ish just what I mean."

"Very well; you work a distillery to make money, and I lecture on temperance to make money; and as you say, 'Money makes the mare go,' Bill Myers, bring out your mare, and I'll bring out mine, and we'll show them together."

By this time the whole assembly was in a titter of delight; and even Myers' followers could not repress their merriment at the evident embarrassment of their oracle. In the mean time we must premise that Mr. Hunt knew a large number of the drunkards present, and among them the sons of Myers himself.

"Bill Myers, who is that holding himself up by that tree?" inquired Mr. Hunt, pointing to a young man so drunk that he could not stand alone.

The old man started as if stung by an adder, but was obliged to reply, "Dat ish my son: but what of dat, Mishter Hunt?"

"A good deal of that, Bill Myers; for I guess that son has been riding your mare, and got thrown, too?"

Here there was a perfect roar from all parts of the assembly, and as soon as order was restored Mr. Hunt proceeded, as he pointed to another son:

"Bill Myers, who is that staggering about as if his legs were as weak as potato vines after frost?"

"Well, I suppose dat ish my son, too," replied the old man with a crestfallen look.

"He has been riding your mare too, and got a tumble."

At this point the old man put up both hands in a most imploring manner, and exclaimed: "Now, Mishter Hunt, if you won't say any more I will be still."

This announcement was received with a roar of applause and laughter, and from that moment Mr. Hunt had all the ground to himself.

The General Conference and Lay Representation.

The General Conference having declared itself again, and as it is supposed with greater emphasis than ever before upon the admission of lay representatives, it is of moment to the Church to know precisely what its declarations mean. Just at this point of departure there has been suddenly developed no little difference of opinion. The Christian Advocate of June 25 tells us that "as to its attitude toward the subject—its approval or otherwise—the General Conference of 1868 stands precisely with its predecessor of 1860. At that point there was neither advance nor retrogression. * * * It was simply designed that the whole subject should go to the Church without any prejudgment in either direction from the General Conference, and the 'godly consideration' of the Church was invited to the subject."

The Western Advocate has also presented its interpretation of the proceedings of the Conference. In this we are told that "those who voted for the submission of the plan to the people are not thereby bound to favor it before the people, or to vote for it when it shall be submitted to them in the Annual Conferences. The plan is not formally adopted. Many voted for its submission who will feel it their duty to oppose it hereafter. In this they violate no obligation, nor will their personal consistency be involved in the least." The editor says for himself personally, that while he will not "prejudice any against the principle or the plan," he can not "champion the cause before the Church." These explanations have caused no little surprise. They have led many to fear that we have made a settlement in which nothing is settled; that we have achieved a conclusion in which nothing is concluded.

We have then a most important question to consider, namely: was the vote of the General Conference only a vote to submit the question of lay representation to the people and the traveling ministers, without any prejudgment in either direction from the Conference itself? Or did the vote carry with it the whole moral weight of the favorable opinion of the Conference?

The bare statement of this question is almost enough to determine the answer which the facts require. But more distinctly, (1). The Conference declared for the third time "its willingness to admit lay delegates whenever the people should desire it." A willingness to adopt a measure upon a certain contingency is an acceptance of that measure upon its general merits. The attitude of the Conference is one of declared readiness. There being two parties interested in lay representation, one party announces itself as waiting for the other. The Conference has, therefore, most emphatically sent the measure to the Church with a prejudgment in its favor, for it has pledged itself to adopt it upon the fulfillment of a single contingency.

(2) But farther, the Conference has recommended a plan of lay representation to the consideration of the Church, after having given to that plan its own godly consideration. The plan having been reported was made the order of the day until disposed of, and was subjected to a thoughtful discussion. It was considered both in its generals and its details. The several articles were "adopted" (see the official report in the Daily Advocate), the preamble was "adopted," and on motion of J. T. Peck the report was "adopted" as a whole by 227 yeas to three nays. By "adopting" the report the General Conference plainly said: "We consider this a good and suitable plan of lay representation for the Church." It could not say this without accepting the principle of lay representation, nor could the Conference say this without approving the plan. It might easily be maintained that the vote has all the disciplinary requisites of a legal enactment, the necessary two-thirds of the delegates being more than furnished. But waiving this we say that, according to the facts of the record the General Conference has in every other respect "adopted" a plan of representation, and sent it to the people.

(3) This reasoning is, however, set beyond doubt by the language of the preamble of the report. It is worthy of a careful reading, and we give it all:

"WHEREAS, The General Conference of 1860 expressed its willingness to admit lay delegates to the General Conference whenever the people should desire it; and

"Whereas, The General Conference of 1864 concurred in that action; therefore

"Resolved, That we also concur in the same, and recommend the following plan to the godly consideration of our ministers and people."

There are in the preamble two points to be noted:

1. It commits the Conference for the third time to the acceptance of the general principle of lay representation. If there is any cumulative power in a repeated declaration, we have then the acceptance of lay representation by the General Conference, with all the accumulated emphasis which repetition can give.

2. This preamble recommends a plan to the consideration of the people, that plan having been previously carefully considered by the Conference. While the preamble was under consideration in the Conference, a motion was made to substitute the word "submit" for the word "recommend," and the proposal was voted down, the Conference meaning thereby that a stronger than a negative term should be here used. To "recommend," according to all sound usage, is to commit to another with an expression of favor or approval. It is something more than merely to present or to submit; and to say that the preamble of the report sends the subject to the Church, "without any prejudgment in either direction from the General Conference" is, in our opinion, with all deference to the acumen of the Advocate, an abuse of language. Taken in connection with the refusal of the Conference to adopt the word "submit," the meaning of the preamble is placed beyond all question.

The sincerity of the General Conference can not, for a moment, be doubted. Its magnanimity in dealing with the question of lay representation will ever remain one of the proudest facts of its history. It has this time gone forward farther than ever before to meet the people. Lay representation is now offered to the people, with a plan "adopted" in every respect but the formality of a legal vote by the highest representative body of the Church. The consummation of the work now depends upon the laity. Let them but vote in June, 1869, overwhelmingly for representation, as we know they will, and the rest will be but a matter of form. The Annual Conferences will follow, the lay delegates will be elected according to the plan, and the General Conference will, with its legal ratification, open the door and bid them enter in. Already the end appears. We who have long led the van of this movement, in some years as a forlorn hope, may with good reason rejoice.—Methodist.

The Luther Monument at Worms.

The Berlin correspondent of the London Times writes:

The city in which Luther, pleading before the sovereign and the assembled estates of the holy Roman empire, vindicated the gospel against sacerdotal encroachment three hundred and forty-seven years ago has just witnessed the inauguration of a monument to his honor. From other statues previously erected to him the new one is distinguished in more than one respect. It is a tribute paid by all Protestant Germany, subscriptions having come in from every country in which the reformed faith has gained a footing.

In size and rich variety of design the monument has no equal. In this respect it is an improvement even upon Rauch's Frederick the Great, with its hosts of generals ranged round the base. It is not a statue, but a combination of eleven statues grouped around and surmounted by the gigantic likeness of the Thuringian miner's son. Ascending a few steps you tread on a granite base forty feet square, inclosed on the three other sides by a battlemented balustrade. In its centre Luther stands pre-eminent. Seated on the four pillars projecting from the corners of Luther's pedestal you see clustering about the master mind his four precursors who attempted what he accomplished.

To this noble array the English, French, Italian, and Slave nations have each furnished a member—John Wickliffe, Petrus Waldus, Jeronimo Savonarola, and Jan Huss. Then turning to the circumference, you notice seven more statues distributed around. Occupying the four corners of the balustrade, and separated from the centre group by the inner space, are the venerable figures of two regal and two clerical allies of the reformatory hero. Frederick the Wise, Elector of Saxony, and Philip the Generous, Landgrave of Hesse, impersonating power and prudence, watch the front; Philip Melanchthon and John Reuchlin, with their solid erudition, are at their rear.

To these four, or, adding those in the centre group, nine great men—images of real beings—are, with questionable taste, united the symbolical statues of three cities, celebrated in the history of time. Augsburg, Madgeburg, and Spires, three majestic women, take up the centre of each side of the balustrade. Seated, and looking up to Luther, they pleasingly relieve the four corner statues, which are standing, and have their faces turned in the same direction as the central figure. To do justice to the many places which have likewise deserved well of the cause of religious liberty, the battlements of the inclosure are on the inner side decorated with the escutcheons of twenty-four other German cities. These are Brunswick, Bremen, Constance, Eisenach, Eisleben, Emden, Erfurt, Frankfort, Halle, Hamburg, Heilbronn, Jena, Konigsberg, Leipsic, Lindau, Lubeck, Marburg, Memlingen, Nordlingen, Riga Schmalkalden, Strasburg, Wittenberg, and Worms. Thus stands the wonderful structure before us, a petrified piece of history, silent, yet eloquent to any one who knows what has once agitated mankind, and has a presentment of what will agitate them again.

On a syenite pedestal of subdued color, surmounted with two bronze squares, stands Luther. It is the stout, sturdy shape familiar to every eye. It is the dear old well-known form, with its honest features and calm, imperturbable eye, as painted by Cranach. With face turned upward he rests his clenched fist on the closed Bible, as if uttering the famous verse of his beautiful chorale, "Das Wort sie sollen lassen stehn." From an artistic point of view it might, perhaps, have been better to give his head a more inclined position. In a statue of ten and a half feet in height, on a pedestal of sixteen feet, a face lifted up to heaven can not be well seen from below. A better view, however, is obtained from the side than from the front.

Grand as the total effect is, the best critics agree in regretting that the artist who devised the work did not live to see it completed. Rietschel, who in 1856 was commissioned to make the model, died a few years ago, when the statues of Luther and Wickliffe alone had been carried out. The rest are modeled from his sketches by Herren, Schilling, Dondorf, and Kietz, his three talented assistants. Their achievements are worthy of the studio whence they proceed; but, while acquitting themselves of their task in excellent style, each of the three sculptors seems to have followed the particular bent of his genius rather than co-operate with the others in the production of an artistic whole. Luther is ten and a half feet high; the figures at his feet, seven feet; the corner statues of the balustrade, eight and a half feet; and those of the towns, six feet.

The inauguration was graced by the presence of the King and the Crown Prince of Prussia, the King of Wurtemberg, the Grand Dukes of Weimar and and Hesse, Prince William of Baden, and other members of the royal families of Germany. The concourse of strangers was immense, some reports speaking of one hundred thousand, and among them many clergymen.

Concerning the practice of sleeping in church, Henry Ward Beecher says: "If a man sleeps under my preaching I do not send a boy to wake him up, but I feel that a boy had better come and wake me up."

Ames Methodist Episcopal Church.

There will be preaching every Sabbath at 11 A. M. in Dr. Newman's church, corner of St. Charles and Calliope streets, and social meetings for conference and prayer every Sunday and Thursday evening from eight to nine o'clock in the lecture room. You are invited.

Louisiana Intelligencer.

We are glad to see the spirit and talent with which the new editors of this paper are entering upon their duties. The Republicans of Washita and the adjoining parishes have in this journal a champion and counselor which they will do well to heed and liberally sustain. Our friends Morey and Ennemoser have our best wishes for success in their enterprise.

Lottery Gambling.

It is pitiful to see the desks of the lottery croupiers in our cigar stores surrounded by crowds of poor negroes and seedy whites staking their earnings or stealings upon the turning of the wheel. The poor cripple to whom we yesterday gave a quarter to buy food to-day may be seen investing it in a lottery ticket. Multitudes are being impoverished and domoralized to supply material for these gambling concerns, and we hope our Legislature will set a brand upon this business which has been outlawed by nearly every Christian community.

Lieutenant Harry H. Pierce, first United States infantry, has been detailed from his regiment, by request of the Secretary of War, and assigned to duty as the General Superintendent of Education in Louisiana for the Freedmen's Bureau, filling the vacancy made by the acceptance of Major Chase's resignation. Lieutenant Pierce is from Springfield, Massachusetts; a graduate of Trinity college, Hartford, Connecticut; entered the army in May, 1861, as a private in the first Connecticut volunteers; was mustered out with his regiment March, 1865, as its major, having made a gallant record in the war. He is an accomplished Christian gentleman, well fitted every way for his position, and will perform its duties more than creditably.

Burnett's Cocoaine has received universal indorsement. No other preparation possesses such remarkable properties for embellishing and strengthening the hair, and rendering it dark and glossy. It cures baldness and eradicates dandruff. It has stood the test of time and competition.

The Pope and Austria.

The defenders of the Catholic Church have always denied that said church is opposed to the inevitable reforms which a Christian civilization incites and demands; but such denial were futile with the Pope's last allocution before us. In the conventional language of all such documents he bewails the degeneracy of the "Emperor and Apostolic King of Austria," and in terrorem conjures Francis Joseph "not to forget the censures and spiritual punishments the church can inflict." Ten years ago, and such a pontifical warning would have terrified the Emperor; but now his Prime Minister replies to the holy father, and in turn warns him not to meddle with the affairs of the empire. The significance of the answer is this: The Pope's right to dictate temporal rulers is no longer acknowledged, and his anathemas are laughed to scorn. Such facts mark the progress of religious and civil liberty, the final triumph of which is not afar; and that triumph will be the defeat of the Papacy throughout the world. To the enlightened Protestant Christian it is refreshing to recall the rapid growth of free religious thought in the Catholic countries of Europe since 1860. Within those eight years all Italy has emerged from the darkness, and has arisen and is shining, "for her light has come." Mexico has shaken off the Pope, and the French and Juarez are giving the churches of the metropolis to Protestants, while Austria, the last stronghold of Popery in Europe (Spain excepted), has not only thrown off its old papal yoke, but has adopted such state measures as restore her to her former position of a first-class power among the nations of the earth.

This remark will be justified by a glance at the laws adopted in Austria, and will disclose the secret of the Pope's bellowing but harmless bull. The holy father complains that the Austrian government has passed an odious law which establishes free liberty for all opinions, liberty of the press, of all faith, and no matter what confession of doctrine; that schools and colleges may be opened by persons of any religious creed; that the restrictions on mixed marriages are removed, and marriage itself is declared a civil contract; and that cemeteries are open to all without regard to religious faith. Such are the glorious strides which Austria has made and which have inspired for her an admiration only excelled by that which is felt for Italy. Is it not the marvel of this marvelous age? Let us pause; free speech, free press, free schools, free religion, free marriage, free country in Austria? The world does move, don't it?

The last stronghold of Popery is in Spain. But her time has not yet come. The night of her darkness lingers. Yet that night is rolling away, and the morning shall dawn. A needle-gun war may be necessary, as in the case of Francis Joseph, to open the eyes of Isabella. "The first shall be last" is to have a fulfillment in the land which sent Father Columbus in search of the New World; and Spain will be the last of European nations reached by the Christian Protestant power of the United States. But all hail to the light that sets the nations free!

Personal.

Dr. Newman in Detroit.--The editor of the Advocate attended the International convention of the Young Men's Christian Associations of the United States and Canada, and was called out for a speech. The Detroit Post thus speaks of the Doctor's remarks:

Mr. Rowland and others made interesting reports of the work in their several districts. Under this order of business the Rev. Dr. Newman, of New Orleans, spoke, reviewing the history of the Association in that city during and subsequent to the war. Referring to the period when they were under the control of the Southern Confederacy, he said that they learned that the "heroic Butler" was the only man who knew how to treat with rebels. (This admission was loudly cheered.) He said that, in their Association they believed in the brotherhood of man, and that colored men as well as white men were admitted to membership. He asked the convention if colored delegates would be admitted at the next annual International convention provided they came. A hearty affirmative reply was given. The reverend Doctor continued in most eloquent and stirring language, to advance the doctrine of equal rights, a sentiment which was most rapturously applauded, the applause lasting several minutes after the speaker had resumed his seat.

Rev. Scott Chinn.—We observe in the New York Christian Advocate of the ninth instant the publication of Brother Chinn's excellent sermon delivered at the dedication of the Camp Parapet M. E. Church (colored), New Orleans, September 22, 1867.

Rev. Dr. Porter.—Rev. Dr. Porter, late one of the book agents, has accepted the office of Superintendent of Agencies (not the presidency as some of the papers erroneously reported) of the National Life Insurance of this city, and expects to enter fully upon the work by the first of August. In the meantime correspondents should address him at the office of the Company, No. 212 Broadway, New York.

Rev. Dr. Elliott.—The Central Advocate states that the venerable Dr. Charles Elliott, ex-President of the Iowa Wesleyan University, was able to be present at the late commencement exercises of that institution, and, supported by the President, Dr. Holmes, and Professor Burns, ascended the platform and made a short and most affecting address. He continues to write as far as his strength will permit, is deeply interested in the work of the Church, but daily awaits his call to another world.

Revs. George Storrs and Samuel Norris are the two brethren whom the General Conference of 1836 solemnly censured for attending an anti-slavery prayer meeting, which censure the last General Conference declared rescinded. Both are living in Brooklyn, and will live, we trust, till the next session in that city, and have the opportunity in that Conference of thanking the Church for honoring herself in removing the dishonor from them.

Rev. George Duffield, D. D., of Detroit, a clergyman who has been well-known to the American churches for two generations, died suddenly last week in the seventy-seventh year of his age. The circumstances of his death were peculiar. The thirteenth annual convention of the Young Men's Christian Associations of the United States and the British Provinces had assembled in Detroit on Wednesday, June 24, and were to receive an address of welcome by Dr. Duffield. He began the address by referring to the noble armies of young men "who," he said, "are here in all the freshness of their vigor, and who, in this glad day of their assembling in our city, give good proof by their piety that they have overcome the wicked one." He then suddenly paused, and leaning forward, said: "You will have to excuse me—my head reels." A moment afterward, in the act of falling, he was caught in the arms of several surrounding clergymen, and borne from the stand in an unconscious state. He soon afterward rallied a little, but he had been stricken with paralysis, and he died on Friday, June 26.—Advance.

Ex-Governor B. F. Flanders. Another worthy old citizen, after a temporary absence, is again with us to see after railroad interests which will aid greatly in the material reconstruction of our State. We may reasonably hope much from these enterprises of internal improvement, and heartily welcome brain and purse at home and abroad to help us.

Hon. Thomas W. Conway.—This well-tried and noble-hearted patriot and philanthropist is entering upon his duties as State Superintendent of Education with his characteristic energy. We predict for him great success in the organization of a school system as thorough and beneficial as that of any State in the Union. Let every child, especially of poor parents, have the means of securing a good English education. Fill the land with good schoolhouses and teachers. To this end we have now "the right man in the right place."

Notices of Periodicals for August.

Harper's Monthly contains "To and Upon the Amoor River," "Among the Andes of Peru and Bolivia," and "John Bull in Abyssinia," all profusely illustrated, and very interesting to lovers of travels and adventures.

Among the Andes were found curious ruins of ancient temples and fortresses. The story of Theodore and his kingdom is well told. Several love stories and good poetry. "How Fort McAllister was Taken." "A Visit to the French Legislature," a lively article, and of value. The Frenchmen are not more dignified than our own legislators. "Duels and Dueling," "Streets of Washington," closing with "Literary Notices." It is as usual a rich magazine.

The Galaxy has several good stories. "A Journey through Mongolia" shows us Chinese and Siberian life. "A Few Words about the Nerves," continued from the July number; a very instructive history of "Words and Their Uses;" "Miscellany;" "Driftwood;" and "Book Notices" contain much valuable matter.

Arthur's Home Magazine, fresh and homelike as ever, with many pretty stories, and some music and pictures. Our daughter says "It's almost the best magazine in the world."

The Phrenological Journal is full of sage, popular, and humorous pieces, profusely illustrated. Our friend Wells is a wise and good teacher. We must agree, however, to disagree on theological matters. We don't believe "Phrenology is commissioned by God to show men their mental and moral constitutions," etc.

Packard's Monthly, No. 4, contains "The Wickedest Man in New York," a wonderful but true relation of life in New York. Surely there is hope for the fallen. Parton has a good lecture to young men on "Wasting Capital," Burritt on "The English Language," and Greeley on "Success or Failure in Life." Bungay on "The Law of Compensation," "Matters and Things," and correspondents give us items of interest. This is a valuable periodical, and is becoming very popular.

Obituary Notice.

WILLIAM JAY.

Died in New Orleans, Louisiana, at his residence No. 282 Calliope street, on Thursday, July 23, 1868, Mr. William Jay, aged sixty-six years. He was a worthy citizen, a faithful Christian, a devoted husband and father, and a warm friend. His illness was brief, only twelve days of suffering, during which time he was full of Christian peace and triumph. He leaves a bereaved widow and a numerous connection of about fifty children, grandchildren, and great grandchildren. Brother Jay was born in Willenhall, Staffordshire, England, but has for the last twenty-six years been a resident in New Orleans. An old-fashioned Methodist of thirty years standing, and loyal to the American Union, he from the first identified himself and family with the Methodist Episcopal Church in this city in its missionary organization, under the Rev. Dr. Newman, and through all its early struggles he has stood firm, deing what he could to hold up the hands of his pastor.

At the time of his decease our brother held the offices of trustee, steward, and class-leader in the Ames Methodist Episcopal church, and since its organization has faithfully discharged the duties they imposed upon him. So useful a citizen and so pure a Christian can poorly be spared by Church or State, and he will be sadly missed in this city.

His absent minister and his brethren will greatly deplore their loss, while they rejoice that it is his eternal gain.

Peacefully lay him down to rest,
Place the turf kindly on his breast.
Sweet is the slumber beneath the sod,
While the pure soul is resting with God.
Peacefully sleep! peacefully sleep!
Sleep till that morning—
Peacefully sleep! D.

Military Changes.

By order of the Secretary of War General Rousseau will command Louisiana and Arkansas; General Reynolds Texas; General Meade North and South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, and Florida; General Gillem Mississippi; General Canby the department of Washington; and General Crooke Columbia, in place of General Rousseau. General Hatch relieves General Buchanan as Assistant Commissioner of the Freedmen's Bureau in Louisiana.

The New York Tribune's Washington correspondent thus sketches the Louisiana and South Carolina Congressmen:

The Louisiana delegation, in the House, were sworn in to-day. J. H. Sypher, who represents the First District, was born in Pennsylvania in 1837, graduated at Union College, New York, studied law, and practiced at the bar until the commencement of the rebellion, when he entered the Federal army as a private soldier, serving through the war and rising to the rank of Brigadier General. At the close of the war he settled in Louisiana, where he has been engaged in practicing law. He is also interested in a sugar and cotton plantation. Mr. Sypher represents a part of the city of New Orleans. James Mann is from the Second District. He was born in Maine, is about thirty-six years old, and was formerly a paymaster in the United States army. At the close of the war he was appointed by President Johnson to a position in the internal revenue department in Louisiana, and has resided there since. He is a Democrat, the only one in the delegation. J. P. Newsham represents the Third District. He was born in Illinois, and is now about thirty-seven years of age. During the war he served in the Federal army as captain in an Illinois regiment. He settled in Louisiana in 1864, and commenced to practice law. Michel Vidal is from the Fourth District. He is a native of France, from whence he emigrated to Louisiana shortly before the war. He has no profession. W. Jasper Blackburn represents the Fifth District. He is a native of Louisiana, and is about forty-five years of age. During the war he was an intense Unionist, and established a paper at Homer, of which he is still editor and proprietor. He is by far the ablest man in the delegation.

Only two of the South Carolina delegation were sworn in yesterday—Messrs. Whittemore and Goss. B. F. Whittemore, who represents the First District, was born in Massachusetts in 1824, and is a clergyman by profession. During the war he was chaplain of the Thirtieth and Fifty-third Massachusetts regiments. He settled in South Carolina at the close of the war and engaged in teaching. He was a member of the State Constitutional Convention. James H. Goss, who represents the Fourth District, is a native of South Carolina and was born in Union Courthouse in 1820. He is a merchant and has never held office before. The Representative of the Third District, Simeon Correy, was born in South Carolina in 1823. He is a tailor by profession, and claims to have always been a Unionist and an anti-slavery man. During the rebellion he was conscripted into the rebel army, was taken prisoner by the Federals at Petersburg, Va., and sent to Point Lookout. He was soon after exchanged, and subsequently retired from the army to fill a small civil office. He is unable to take the test oath, which accounts for his not being sworn in to-day.

A bore—the man who persists in talking about himself when you wish to talk about yourself.

The General Assembly.

This body is working industriously, and considering all things efficiently.

Several important laws conforming the judiciary system to the new constitution have passed the Senate; by one of them the powers and emoluments of Clerks of District Courts. An important finance bill is on the tapis.

A good militia bill is under way; an efficient constabulary law prepared by Senator Campbell is before the judiciary committee.

A joint resolution to appoint a committee to investigate the conduct of the election, and the present condition of peace and order in the State, has been sent to the Governor for his signature.

Senator Packard has introduced a good registration law.

With these laws adopted, and a good election law, a well digested metropolitan police law, the peace and the financial credit of the State will be well secured.

The General Assembly can then turn its attention to the development of the great material and industrial resources of the State.

A great and glorious future is open to our State if our people will only consent to let bygones be bygones, and unite in the great work of improving and utilizing our magnificent natural advantages and putting ourselves in railroad communication with the grand stretch of territory west and east of the Mississippi which seeks its natural outlet here.

New Orleans can be the New York of the Gulf, and the entrepot for the Asiatic trade which is soon to flow westward from the Pacific coast, and whose nearest route to Europe lies through its port. The grain of the West, the metals of the Rocky mountains, and the whole trade of the western half of this continent naturally centres here.

North New Orleans District.

Rev. Dr. Newman writes us under date twenty-second instant that the Bishop has placed the above named district in his charge, and that he will soon return and attend to the duties of the same. A notice in the Advocate of the eighteenth that Rev. Mr. Henry had been placed in charge was incorrect. The preachers will give this their attention.

From the Churches and Schools.

Rev. Marcus Dale again writes us about the revival in the Cypremort church:

I must let you know how our little church is getting along. God is still blessing my labors. The people are getting clearer views of Christianity, many silly notions have been corrected, Christians are becoming more united, many persons have given evidence of change of heart, and others are crying for mercy. Temporally, the people are doing well. I hear of no trouble on the plantations. In this vicinity there are three, with about six hundred acres under cultivation, on which the laborers are working for one-third. They will do very well. I wish they were all working on shares. A good feeling prevails between white and colored. This must be cultivated if peace and prosperity is desired, for we are all mutually dependent. I think they should feel this and act accordingly. I hope the white man of this country will acknowledge the manhood of the black race and prove by acts which speak louder than words that he is willing to deal with them as men, meet together on the level, and part on the square. I hope the black man of this country will be industrious and honest, and in all his dealings show himself a man. Instead of a war of races as predicted, I believe the two will not long hence be as brothers, and prosperity flow like a river.

Brother John Wesley writes from Charenton:

I thought a few lines in regard to my church would be encouraging. The members are all well; my protracted meeting began last Sunday and continued all the week; thirteen professed conversion and about twenty-five are now earnestly seeking religion. The Lord has blessed us greatly with harmony and religious prosperity.

The day school and Sunday school are doing very well.

Mrs. Parks writes from Franklin:

My day school is getting to be very interesting, and the Sunday school is very large. The colored people are holding prayer meetings every night in the church. I shall, if my health will permit, open a night school in the club room next week. The Episcopalian Church is preparing to give a grand concert for the benefit of their minister. I am anxious to give one to raise money for the building of our school-house, but can not do much at it now.

Rev. S. M. Small writes from Alexandria:

I have had some trouble about an unruly preacher in my church, but it has proved to be a blessing to the people, who are now doing well. In Pineville we have good order and propriety, but we are delayed in getting the land to build upon.

I am sorry to say that the day school, fine as it was when you were here, is now broken up. The teacher has gone and joined the Democratic party, and is trying to do us all the harm he can. I gave him the ten dollars you left from the aid society on his promising me to continue, and a few days afterward he closed the school.

Rev. E. Jackson writes from Washington, Louisiana:

I am on the eve of getting this church in shape. The hinges for the doors are bought, and they will be hung next week. My day and Sabbath schools are interesting. We have seventy scholars attending every day. On opening I read a chapter from the Bible and offer prayer.

I have just come from visiting a woman whose husband lately whipped his child to death. She is now left alone with twins in great poverty, he being in jail to await the penalty of his horrible crime.

Mr. E. Bentley writes from Opelousas:

Next Monday I will open my school in the new church. It is roofed, floored, and the windows in. The doors are to be in and the key delivered to me this evening. The parents of the children and myself will prepare benches. Major Chase has authorized me to appoint two assistants. I will have three departments. The primary under Mr. Hypolite Martin at the African church; the second or intermediate at the Baptist church under Miss Helen Donato. The higher department will be in my charge in our new house, where the urchins will have a splendid opportunity to develop their craniums or be switched.

If it is possible to obtain a good, wide-awake preacher send him on; he will not starve. The crops are promising, and better times are in store We want that life of a church, a good minister.

A letter from New Iberia says:

We have put up a fine commodious building here, and the day school is in successful operation with a large attendance. The church was dedicated last Sabbath.

The crops of the parish are looking finely; planters wear a cheerful look in anticipation of a bountiful harvest, and all the planters unite in saying the freedmen work splendidly—never better, even in the palmy days of the whip.

Negro Democrats.

The Christian Recorder, organ of the African Methodists, says:

We have negro blacklegs, negro thieves, negro drunkards, why should we not have some negro Democrats? O ye negro Democrats of the South, know that the world will believe you are men, not because of any high deeds ye have done, but because ye have played the part of fools. A negro throwing up his hat for the Democratic nominees! Surely his eyes were Blair-ed that he could not Seymour clearly to make manifest a better part of his manhood.

A word to my Southern countrymen. Be not deceived with the pretentious smiles of the Southern Democrats. They are deadly foes to the black man; and the curse that now rests upon them is that they are given up to believe a lie. Lived you here in Philadelphia and heard their words of bitterness against your race—could you but see their banners flaunting to the breeze with the inscription, "This is a White Man's Government," we know you would vote aright. Do you love your children, your race, your country? Then listen not to the wiles of the Democrats of the South, for be assured they are as Satan in the garb of an angel of light.

The Marksville Villager, in both English and French, works itself into an agony about negro revolts, and closes thus:

We assure the blacks if they do persist in their hellish designs that we are thoroughly prepared for the emergency, and by the living powers that made us, the concoctors of such schemes, and all those unfriendly to the whites, will never be permitted to tell the tale of their revolt in this parish.

Is the man sane, or has he been sleeping these seven years past? Who are the blacks to revolt from? Whose slaves are they? It is cool talk for the parties who are slaughtering and burning all over the State. Let them read the fable of the wolf and lamb at the brook.

Congressman J. H. Sypher has sent us an official document relating to the public printing. The General has introduced a joint resolution to extend aid to the levees of the Mississippi, and to provide for the payment of citizens of Louisiana for the quartermaster's stores furnished to United States troops.

Congressman J. H. Sypher sends us the statutes relating to public printing.

Cost of Intoxicating Liquors.

When the late war was at its height the expenses per day reached the sum of about two millions of dollars. Another destroyer is at work in the land which consumes the enormous sum of four millions per day, or nearly fifteen hundred millions per year. From the late published statistics of Mr. Welles, special commissioner of the revenue, are made up the footings of the retail sales of intoxicating liquors in the several States for the year 1867, which reach the enormous aggregate of $1,483,491,865.

The Papal allocution has failed to have any influence upon the Austrian government. The Chancellor of Austria, Von Beust, has at once replied to it, and promised again the execution of the new Liberal laws. The ultramontane party is compelled to admit its weakness. The operation of the new laws has already begun. Thus, in the fanatical province of Tyrol, several cases have occurred where Protestants and Jews have purchased real estate.

When some Polish vassals had been robbed of their cattle, their prince, urged by St. Hedwiges, his wife, ordered the restoration of the plunder, but did so at his own convenience. When he told his wife that he had now satisfied them, the royal-hearted princess replied respectfully: "You have restored their cattle, but who can restore their tears?"

Le Veritable Ami du Peuple.

On s'occupe beaucoup du peuple aujourd'hui. Les uns ont voulu presque le déifier, les autres le dédaignent profondément. Les uns en font l'instrument de leurs passions, les autres voudraient mettre des barrières à ses progrès; mais où est son véritable ami? Celui-là ne le flatterait pas, mais ne le mépriserait pas non plus. Il répondrait à tous les désirs de son cœur, il guérirerait toutes ses blessures, il se dévouerait à lui sans mesure avec le plus complet désintéressement, il comprendrait ses douleurs, ranimerait ses espérances, lui signalerait courageusement ses erreurs ou ses fautes. Il guérissait les malades, consolait les affligés, instruisait l'ignorant; en un mot, se dévouait à tous sans restriction. C'est cet ami qui le premier a fait entendre ces paroles: "Soyez libres, soyez égaux, soyez frères!" Mais où le trouver cet ami?

Cet ami, c'est Jésus-Christ, mort il y a dix-huit siècles pour nous affranchir de l'esclavage du péché, le pire de tous les esclavages; c'est lui qui, ressuscité pour nous réconcilier avec Dieu, intercède encore pour nous c'est lui qui dirige les évènements, fait crouler les trones et nous apprend qu'à lui seul appartiennent la puissance et la gloire. S'il paraissait aujourd'hui sur la terre par quelles paroles apaiserait-il cette tempête qui gronde de toutes parts? Que ferait-il pour répondre à cette soif de progrès, de bonheur, qui dévore la société entière? Proposerait-il une de ces théories qui éblouissent au premier coup d'œil, mais dont la base est entièrement fausse et ne peut que causer misère et désorganization partout? ou bien dirait-il à ceux qui souffrent et gémissent, "Le monde est ainsi fait et doit rester ainsi; votre condition est malheureuse, vous végétez au lieu de vivre, mais tel est votre lot, soumettez-vous, attendez?" Attendre, lorsqu'on meurt de faim, attendre lorsque l'âme se dessèche aussi faute d'aliment, parce que les soins matériels ont tout absorbé! Non, telle ne serait pas la désolante réponse de celui qui a donné sa vie afin de nous donner toutes choses avec lui. Rom. 8:32. Cet ami plein de miséricorde, toujours présent par son Esprit au milieu de nous, a renfermé dans sa parole une réponse à chacune des questions qui agitent non-seulement notre pays, mais le monde entier. Ouvrons un moment ensemble cette Bible, si négligée, hélas! précieux trésor auprès duquel tous les trésors de ce monde ne sont qu'une vile poussière; livre si ancien et pourtant toujours nouveau, parce qu'il contient des remèdes aux véritables maux de l'âme humaine qui dans tous les temps a besoin de croire, d'aimer, et d'espérer!

Cette Bible place en première ligne les biens spirituels, ceux qui appartiennent à l'âme. La paix de Dieu répandue dans le cœur par le Saint-Esprit, voilà la source du véritable bonheur; elle se trouve au pied de la croix de Jésus Christ pour toute âme convaincue de sa misère et répétant avec le pauvre péagerce cri d'une conscience réveillée: "Mon Dieu, sois apaisé envers moi qui suis un pécheur!" Dès lors, vivre pour Dieu devient la règle suprême, et "ses commandements ne sont point pénibles." 1 Jean, 5, 3. Mais, chose admirable, la religion Chrétienne qui semble n'avoir pour objet que la félicité de l'autre vie, fait encore notre bonheur dans celle-ci. La piété, dit Saint Paul, a non-seulement la promesse de la vie à venir, mais encore celle de la vie présente; elle est utile à toutes choses. 1 Tim. 4. 8. La religion Chrétienne est une religion d'Egalité, de Fraternité, de progrès: on ne peut lui assigner des limites et lui dire comme au flot de la mer, Tu n'iras pas plus loin! Immuable dans ses principes, parce qu'elle émane du Dieu éternel, elle s'associe à toutes les idée grandes, nobles, et génereuses; elle les élève encore et les sanctifie parce qu'elle leur donne un fondement solide; elle répand dans les cœurs cette charité qui se nourrit de dévouement. Lisez le douzième chapitre de l'Epitre aux Romains, admirable résumé de la morale Chrétienne, et dites nous ce que notre société deviendrait si elle suivait cette loi parfaite. "Quoique nous soyons plusieurs, dit l'apôtre, nous sommes un seul corps en Christ et nous sommes chacun en particulier les membres les uns des autres." Rom. 12. 5. "Aussi, lorsqu'un des membres souffre, tous souffrent, lorsqu'un des membres a de la joie, tous se réjouisssent." 1 Cor. 12, 26. Mais où trouver la réalisation de ces principes sublimes? Au moment où les trônes s'écroulent, il y en a un qui reste debout au milieu de nous, c'est l'égoïsme; l'incrédulité et la superstition en sont les deux soutiens. Le règne de Jésus-Christ établi dans les cœurs, puis dans le monde, peut seul détruire ou dumoins affaiblir mortellement cette triste puissance. Les véritables Chrétiens, malgré leurs misères, sont encore les seuls amis sincères du peuple, parce que l'esprit de leur maître a soufflé sur eux. ils appellent de tous leurs vœux, de toutes leurs prières, une nouvelle ère pour la société.

Peuple qui a reçu tant de privilèges de la main de Dieu, contemple la croix du Sauveur, embrasse la par la foi, appuie-toi sur l'Evangile; et c'est de toi que partira l'un de ces rayons lumineux qui doit envelopper l'univers. Ecoute, écoute la voix du véritable ami du peuple et rappelle-toi ces paroles: "Si le fils vous affranchit vous serez véritablement libres." Jean 8:36. Mais sans lui toute liberté n'est qu'un vain mensonge, un fantome de bonheur qui vous échappe au moment où l'on croit le saisir!

A Great Sinner.—An old negro named Pete was very much troubled about his sins. Perceiving him one day with a very downcast look, his master asked him the cause. "O, massa, I'm such a great sinner!" "But, Pete," said his master, "you are foolish to take it so much to heart. You never see me troubled about my sins." "I know de reason, massa," said Pete; "when you go out duck-shooting and kill one duck and wound anoder, don't you run after the wounded duck?" "Yes, Pete." And the master wondered what was coming next. "Well, massa, dat is de way wid you and me; de debbil has got you sure; but as he am not sure of me, he chases dis chile all the time."

RECALLING YESTERDAY.

What makes the king unhappy?
His queen is young and fair,
His children climb around him,
With waiving yellow hair.

His realm is broad and peaceful,
He fears no foreign foe;
And health to his veins comes leaping
In all the winds that blow.

What makes the king unhappy?
Alas! a little thing
That money cannot purchase,
Or fleets and armies bring.

And yesterday he had it,
With yesterday it went,
And yesterday it perished,
With all the king's content.

For this he sits lamenting,
And sighs, "alack! alack!
I'd give one-half my kingdom,
Could yesterday come back!"

Nice Little Game of the Albany Regency—Sixth Ward Tactics in the National Convention.

The following leading editorial article appeared in the Herald on Sunday morning last:

You all did see that on the Lupercal
I thrice presented him a kingly crown,
Which he did thrice refuse.

So says Mark Anthony of his friend, "the noble Cesar," who was by Brutus, Cassius, and company put out of the way, "not that they loved Cesar less, but because they loved Rome more." Our ex-Governor, Horatio Seymour, has been as patriotic and magnanimous as Cesar; for has he not thrice refused the Democratic nomination for the next presidency? His last declination, some three days gone by, was so frank and unequivocal that it has been generally accepted as conclusive. He was not equal to the great distinction; he had not been seeking it; he did not want it, and he would not have it. Yet, in our judgment, this is but a stroke of strategy in the nice little game concocted of the Albany Regency for Seymour's nomination.

It is the identical trick which was so successfully played not many years ago to secure Mr. Seymour the Democratic nomination for Governor. He had withdrawn; he was not in the fight; but his friends thought, in the nick of time, that a complimentary vote in his favor as the first choice of the Democracy would be very acceptable to Mr. Seymour, though he would unquestionably decline the nomination. Under this assurance the experiment was tried, but the convention was caught; for Mr. Seymour graciously accepted the nomination thus conferred, and the thing was fixed. Now, in this convention the advantages of the same trick of strategy are visible to the naked eye. Mr. Seymour, it is understood, has positively withdrawn. He thus ceases to be an object of attack, and his friends begin to be sought for by the other candidates. The Seymour detachment becomes a balance of power in the convention. It beats about the bush right and left. It adroitly contrives and assists in the slaughter of Chase, Pendleton, Hendricks, Hancock, and the rest, and then, at the point where all his rivals are used up under the two-thirds rule, Mr. Seymour is trotted in fresh and good as new, distances all his exhausted competitors, and carries off the prize.

The two-thirds rule is a beauty. At the Baltimore Democratic convention of 1844, where it was invented to kill off Van Buren, we find that on the first ballot Van Buren had 146 out of 213 votes cast; on the ninth ballot he had only two votes left; for Polk, a fresh nag, was just then brought in, and a general rush for Polk nominated him to the astonishment of all concerned. In the Baltimore convention of 1852 the old stagers, nine of them, fought pretty stubbornly to the thirty-fourth ballot, when, having betrayed their exhaustion in an effort to unite on Dickinson, poor Pierce was trotted in, fresh and prancing, head and tail up, and on the forty-ninth round he walked over the course. This is the game of the Albany Regency with Seymour. It is to keep him back until his rivals are worn out and killed off, and then to charge with him after the fashion of the Old Guard of Napoleon at the turning point of the battle, fresh and vigorous, against the exhausted centre of the enemy's line, break it, double up the two wings, rout them, and take possession of the field.

There are two cliques among the managers of the New York delegation, a Seymour clique and a McClellan clique. Certain Democratic financiers of this city who made some sacrifices of "der monish" in behalf of McClellan in 1864 would like to get it back, and doubtless his nomination and election in 1868 would answer this purpose. These men constitute the New York McClellan Central Committee. Their chance is very slim. The Seymour clique is powerful and is headed by the Albany Regency. They argue in this way: Seymour has made mortal enemies of the Pendleton men in that Cooper Institute speech; they will in the first of the fight kill our candidate unless we hold him back. Let us do this, and when we have killed off Pendleton, Chase, Hendricks, Hancock, and Andy Johnson, by knocking their heads against each other, there will be an opening for Seymour. If nominated we are sure at least of the State of New York, and in holding New York, if we do nothing more, we hold the candidate and the whip hand over the Convention of 1872.

We warn the friends of all the other candidates and probable candidates, especially the friends of Mr. Chase, that this is the game of the Albany Regency in behalf of Seymour. In this view very little faith is to be placed in the professions and promises of the New York delegation in behalf of Chase. They are using him as a convenient instrument with which to lay out Pendleton, their most formidable enemy. Pendleton is too strong to be beaten by a direct attack, and strategy must be resorted to. There is something to admire in the bold and manly front presented by the Pendleton men. They proclaim their candidate and his platform without wincing or mincing. We know where to find them and what they want. We do not know that the Albany Regency are honest in their professions of affection for Mr. Chase, and we do not believe they are. Nor have we any faith in Mr. Seymour's repeated declinations, positive as he makes them. He is standing aloof to avoid the first rough blows of the battle. It is the old trick of Seymour and Polk and Pierce. It is a skulking mode of warfare; it is the Indian system, and the big Indians of Tammany hall are skilled in it as well as Seymour. Let the Chase men and the Pendleton men accordingly be on their guard in reference to the withdrawal of Seymour, and treat it as a deception and a snare until the name of Seymour is withdrawn in convention by the New York delegation. Even then, if there is any hedging upon Seymour let it be stopped at once; for the Albany Regency is not to be trusted.

The Trick of Nominating.

Seymour might have saved himself the trouble of his nine hundred and ninetieth declension of his nomination which he had said he could not take without sacrificing his personal honor. For while he was declaring he could not consent, banners and bands were hastening to the Hall, and before the roll call was completed a large bell with his name inscribed thereon, banners elaborately prepared, music, cannon, etc., were announcing the public triumph of the secret plan so artistically and elaborately prepared long before. The Evening Post exposes the entire game:

Those who have followed carefully the balloting of the Democratic convention have been the witnesses of a curious and adroit piece of management.

There is no doubt that a majority of the convention desired the nomination of Pendleton, or some man of Pendleton's principles. General Butler, if he had been more prudent in the impeachment business, would have suited the convention admirably. The platform suits him as though it had been made for him.

But while Pendleton was thus the general favorite, a few leading men in the New York delegation had determined to nominate Mr. Chase or Horatio Seymour, and to that determination they have adhered.

Of course it would not do to let this be known at first; so the convention was thrown off its guard by the elaborate introduction of Mr. Sanford E. Church's name. We trust Mr. Church was informed beforehand that his name was only to be used as a stalking-horse. For Mr. Church the New York delegation voted with such apparent zeal that it was soon evident to Mr. Pendleton's friends they could not hope to win over such affectionate friends. The Ohio men worked for Pendleton, whom for a time they hoped to nominate; but the New York men worked with equal ardor for Church, whom they did not wish to choose.

The contest continued until nearly the whole of Mr. Pendleton's strength was developed; until the moment, indeed, when it was not impossible that he would get a majority on the next ballot, when some rash Western or Southern delegate might have carried the convention by a motion to "make it unanimous."

At that moment the astute New Yorkers with a loud sigh gave up their Church, and cast the vote of New York for Hendricks. That was a death blow to Pendleton; for a considerable part of his friends were at once drawn off to Hendricks, whom the New Yorkers now appeared to favor, as a compromise candidate. Him they have been supporting ever since, but it was noticed in the convention that the devotion to Hendricks on the part of the New Yorkers gained strength with the increase of Hancock's vote; and there were irreverent men to assert that the office which Church performed for Pendleton, the same office Hendricks, in the hands of the New York delegation, was performing towark Hancock.

Hancock until one o'clock was still at the head of the list. He might have been nominated last night, but at a critical moment somebody moved to adjourn, and the Hancock men rightly felt that this was probably a death blow to their candidate. They still tried to push him in the convention, but the faithful friends of Hendricks opposed him. At last the Hancock men broke line, and scattered, and then came the moment for which the New Yorkers have been laboring so shrewdly; the moment when they brought forward their real candidate. The complete success of this movement, in the triumph of Mr. Seymour on the twenty-second ballot, is fully reported.

Mississippi.

Extract from the letter of a delegate to the late Constitution Convention of Mississippi, dated July 16:

"The Constitution has been defeated by about 5,000 votes—defeated by the most audacious rascalities ever perpetrated in an election on this continent. Had every man been permitted to have gone up and voted his sentiments without fear, the constitution would, I honestly believe, have been ratified by 30,000 majority. Prejudices and wicked passions have got such complete control of this people that the life of a Union man is in constant danger. Not only so, but such are being wickedly mobbed and murdered in different quarters of the State. Only a day or two since B. H. Orr, delegate from Harrison county, was foully murdered by a political adversary. For my own part, I have been notified time and time again to change my quarters, else I would be missing. Such is the state of affairs that unless there is a strong probability of a change for the better soon I must leave."

Mr. Fessenden, complaining that men bet and gambled on his vote, "Warrington" sharply replies:

Mr. Senator Fessenden, who is to blame but yourself for this unpleasant state of affairs? Nobody betted or gambled on Lot Morrill's vote. Everybody knew that Maine had one honest Senator, whose vote was not doubtful, and could not be changed by money, nor revenge, nor spite, nor dyspepsia, nor anything else. Nobody undertook to slander Wilson, or Sumner, or Patterson, or Cragin. They were known to be men of honor, and not canting quasi-judges, putting on some skunk-skin robe, in lieu of ermine, and parading what they termed their judicial oaths as an excuse for their perjury. It was only the Fessendens, and Rosses, and Fowlers, and Hendersons, and Grimes, and Trumbulls, who were speculated on, for they were in the market. It was only they who were talked of and followed, for they only were "on the street."

The Hon. Schuyler Colfax, the genial and popular Speaker of the House, not only abounds in works of charity, which he executes with his own hands, but is careful that his power of doing good shall not be limited by the term of his life. We have recently learned that he has taken out a life policy in the Asbury Insurance Company for $5000, the money to be applied to a charitable purpose, which will render his name still more dear to his fellow-countrymen.

GOVERNOR WARMOTH'S INAUGURAL ADDRESS.

Mr. President and Gentlemen of the Senate and House of Representatives:

I am deeply impressed with the grave and peculiar significance of this occasion, and the magnitude of the responsibility which I am this day to assume. I trust the hearts of all of us are moved and pervaded by a realizing sense of the new and serious duties we have been called upon to discharge. Before me is the first Legislature as an equal member of the American Union that has set for seven years. I need not recount to you the history of these seven years, so full of startling and wonderful as well as painful and terrible events—so pregnant with momentous issues, so productive of great and glorious results. Nor do I deem it expedient at this time to trace the chain of causes which led to these events and produced these results, or to discuss the questions of who have been most culpable and responsible for whatever has been wrong or mistaken in the past, and who are most deserving of credit for whatever is good in the present. We have here met not to speculate upon the past, nor to brood and quarrel over its ashes, but rather to meet the great living issues of the present, and the duties which it imposes upon us. We stand amid the ruins of an old order of things; it should be ours to work wisely and manfully for the establishment of a new and better order of things upon the foundation which these seven years have established. So long as time is spent in futile and irritating discussions upon the realness and probable permanency of these foundations, or persistent and perhaps turbulent efforts to unsettle and upheave them, so long will the public peace, order, and tranquillity refuse to be restored, and so long will the restoration and development of all the great interests of the State be delayed and endangered.

Gentlemen, the corner stone of these foundation laid and fixed forever by a great war, sealed as I firmly believe by the hand of God himself, and recognized by that organic law under which we have assembled, and which I am here to swear to support and defend is the equality before the law and the enjoyment of every political right of all the citizens of the State, regardless of race, color, or previous condition; and only when this grand distinctive feature of the new constitution shall be stamped on every act of legislation, and when such legislation shall find approval and support in that general public sentiment which gives to law its vitality, will our State fairly enter upon that career of greatness and prosperity which the Almighty designed for her. It would be idle to deny that while a large majority of our people have testified in the strongest manner to their approval of that feature of the constitution of which I have spoken, there is still a minority, not wanting in intelligence and virtue, who are strenuously opposed to it. Much is to be hoped from the good sense, the discretion, and inherent love of justice of the American people for the gradual wearing away of the prejudices upon which alone this opposition is founded. Meantime let our course, while resolute and manly, be also moderate and discreet. Let legislation be kept as much as possible in harmony with the sentiments of the whole people. It is better that the course of legislation should rather fall behind than to outstrip the popular wishes and demands. Let everything consistent with right and justice be done to bring back the era of good feeling, and to wash from the memories of all everything that tends to alienate one class or one party from another.

I refrain at this time from entering into any discussion of measures which I may deem of importance. In future I will discharge the duty imposed upon me by giving to the General Assembly information respecting the condition of the State, and recommending to its consideration such legislation as may seem expedient. I venture, however, to urge immediate measures for the repression of lawlessness and disorder now rife in many parts of the State. From many parishes we have almost daily accounts of violence and outrage—in many cases most brutal and revolting murders—without any effort on the part of the people to prevent or punish them.

We want peace and order; without it we can have no prosperity. Such measures must be adopted to secure life and property as may be necessary. If the taxpayers prefer to support a strong constabulary force to doing their duty as citizens by helping the officers, yes, by making the officers of the law keep the peace, and protect the life of every man, however poor, then the responsibility will be upon them, and not the State administration. Everybody knows that the strong men, the property holders, and those who claim and command the respect of their parishes, could make it as peaceable and safe throughout the State as any part of the Union.

The hands of the courts must be strengthened and upheld—the peace officers must do their duty—the good people must rise up and vindicate the law. The press, too vindictive and partisan, should unite with the government in denouncing crime, and aid in the establishment of a healthy public sentiment which of itself would protect the peace by its frowns upon evil doers. You should drive those drones upon society who eat but do not work, who consume and produce nothing, more dangerous to peace and prosperity than famine or pestilence, to go to work or find another country than this to curse.

I appear before you to-day not as a partisan, but to take the oath of office prescribed for those who are chosen by the people to discharge the duties of the office of Governor of our State. My object will be to enforce the law, protect the people, and aid in advancing the social, material, and political interests of the whole people. I believe the epoch has the smiles of Providence. Cursed for our sins with war, scourged with the epidemic, our crops blighted for a succession of years, our fair State overflowed by the torrents of the Mississippi, commerce paralyzed, the people impoverished—the event of my inauguration is welcomed by the full restoration of civil government and readmission into the Union, the fairest prospect for crops, receding floods, and improving credit. Let us vie with each other in seeing who of us shall receive most blessings for good and faithful services rendered the State.

Remarks of Lieutenant Governor Dunn.

SENATORS—I now have the pleasure of introducing to you Oscar J. Dunn, the first Lieutenant Governor of the State of Louisiana elected under the provisions of the constitution of 1868. The prudence, candor, and ability displayed by him in the discharge of the difficult and delicate duties imposed upon him in this House during the last two weeks have won the admiration of all, and augurs well for the future of the race he represents, emerging from under the shadow of a great wrong into the pure light of freedom and the privileges of a universal franchise.

Lieutenant Governor Dunn resumed the chair, and said: Senators of Louisiana—The remarks of Senator Lynch have caused me to feel sensibly the change that has been brought about—a change which is apparent to all present. The fact that the Senate of Louisiana is presided over by a man of my race, one who has ever been kept in obscurity, shows the progress which has taken place in the Southern States, a progress more rapid than that of the Northern States, East or West; and I hope that progress will continue until everywhere throughout this land intelligence will be respected, whatever the color of the skin. Not that I claim intelligence for myself, but I hope that with your assistance and kindness toward me and my race to prove worthy of every advantage bestowed upon us. There is no one present more anxious than I am to see the State of Louisiana restored to the Union—not as it was, but as it is. Previously she was in the Union, and said to be a free State government; but her freedom was confined to one class. Now she is going in under a republican form of government, granting civil and political rights to all men.

As to myself and my people we are not seeking social equality; that is a thing no law can govern. We all have our preferences. We all wish to select our associates, and no legislation can select them for us. We ask nothing of the kind. We simply ask to be allowed an equal chance in the race of life; an equal opportunity of supporting our families, of educating our children, and of becoming worthy citizens of this government.

I am truly happy that we are about to return into the Union, for I, as much as any of you, object to military rule. I believe that there is ability enough in the State to govern our own affairs, and I believe that harmony will exist among us to such an extent that no interference of military power will be necessary on the part of the general government.

Gentlemen, I thank you for the kind courtesies and the leniency you have extended toward me. If any action of mine has been considered arbitrary, I hope that feeling will be removed, and that the Senate will believe I acted under my conscientious convictions of duty, for my sole object has been to act justly with all men. Certainly I shall use my utmost endeavors to preside impartially over this honorable body, and to promote harmony and dignity in its deliberations.

A Chinese Widow.

A passenger from San Francisco to Hong Kong describes a disconsolate widow that was among the Chinese passengers, of whom there were some twelve or fifteen. She had resided in California fifteen years, had accumulated about $20,000, and having lost her husband by death, was returning to China to abide for the future with her friends and kinsmen. She was about forty years of age, good looking, when considered from a Chinese standpoint, and, being rich, would doubtless be considered a good catch by her countrymen. She had had the bones of the "dear departed" polished after the Chinese style, boxed in a camphorwood trunk, and was taking them to the Flowery Kingdom in order that they might be deposited in the Joss House alongside those of his ancestors.

Every day she would descend to the hold of the vessel where the remains were stowed, and spend an hour or two with the skeleton, muttering a mixed sort of prayer, while tears streamed from her eyes. Her mummeries concluded, she would come upon deck, smoke her cigar, laugh and chatter with her countrymen, as if she were the most light-hearted person in the world. One day, after she had terminated her hour's penance over the dry bones of her skeleton husband, I asked her, writes the correspondent, why she said her prayers over him daily, and was not a little astonished to hear her reply, "Me likee to fools Chinamen; he tinkee me likee husband belly much; then maybe bime by me get another one. My husband in boxee belly good man, he belly dry." I felt that human nature was the same the world over, and therefore asked no more questions.

The appearance of Horatio Seymour, as seen in the Democratic convention, is affectionately portrayed by a writer in the World. "Seymour," says this writer, "is dressed in the old style shad-belly coat, which is buttoned across his chest, leaving open a diamond shaped portion of irreproachable white linen and a very neatly arranged black neck-tie of moderate dimensions. The head is well shaped, and set gracefully back on a firm pair of shoulders, and the lower part of the face, below the eyes, is almost a perfect oval. The eyes are of a brilliant brown color, and shine like diamonds beneath a firmly balanced forehead, which is bald—the baldness extending back as far as the back part of the skull. The mouth is pleasant and mobile, and when Seymour smiles at you, the feeling produced is a genial one. This is a cultured man, a man of free tastes and high purposes, a man of elegant diction and also of powerful analysis. The skin of the face is sallow, and a thin seam of white whiskers encircles the throat under the chin. The dress of Seymour is in perfect accordance with good taste, for Horatio Seymour is a gentleman first, last, and all the time. When he makes a gesture, it is dignified, and yet graceful. His voice, slightly impaired yesterday by a bad cold, is correct in its intonations, full, and, when approaching a climax, resonant. The hands, when lifted in air, are white like a woman's, and the fingers slenderly shaped. When speaking, all eyes and ears are turned his way, and his influence on a large body of men is magnetic and thorough. To the humblest man in the party he is courteous, polite, and kind in his manner. His knowledge of parliamentary law is full. His manner of recognizing a delegate on the floor is all that could be desired.

The Harrisburg State Guard, one of the ablest journals in Pennsylvania, makes three strong points against Seymour, as follows: Horatio Seymour for a Presidential candidate is the blindest piece of political folly ever perpetrated by the Democratic party. First, because he is the most vulnerable politician in the country, a double-dealer with his friends, and unfair with his foes; second, because he has a reputation sufficient to swamp any party, however strong, having been from the first to the last the steady and active friend of the slaveholders' rebellion, the advocate of its pretensions, the apologist of its atrocities, and the defender of its upholders; third, because he played an underhand game entirely unworthy a man claiming to be governed by honorable motives to secure the nomination, having persistently declined to be recognized as a candidate, while it is now apparent he had been scheming before the convention met, and all the time it was in session, to wrest the nomination from Pendleton.

Recently a boy, while walking over the roof of the Pennsylvania railroad shops in Altoona, stepped on one of the large glasses (placed in the roof to admit light in the shop), which broke through with him. He fell a distance of about fifteen feet, lighting on a large belt used to drive part of the machinery. The belt was running very fast, and he was carried some ten feet on it, when he was thrown off, and he again fell a distance of fifteen feet, fortunately alighting on a man's shoulder, who happened to be standing there. The boy escaped serious injury.

FLORIDA ORANGES.—The Tampa (Fla.) Peninsula says: "The orange crop in this section of country is very promising, and we learn that the farmers at Old Tampa and Clear Water Harbor have already engaged their present crop of oranges at $20 a thousand. The orange, lemon, lime, pineapple, shaddock, guava, and many other tropical fruits are growing finely along the Gulf coast, south of Cedar Keys, and will, in a short time, be a source of great profit to this part of the State. There is but little capital required in raising tropical fruits and we hope that the people of South Florida will for the future turn their attention more to the raising of fruit than heretofore. With but little capital and little labor the raising of tropical fruits can be made very profitable."

FOR YOU.

A thought! a thought! for the rosy morn
That comes through the gates of dew!
But I keep a kinder, happier thought
For twilight and for you.

A word! a word! for the humming bird,
A tilt on the jessamine new!
Will my lip let slip, but my heart will keep
Its softest words for you.

A song! a song! for the mocking bird
In answer to his so true!
But you know right well I will always keep
My sweetest songs for you.

A kiss! a kiss! for the sweet red rose,
And one for the violet blue!
But standing here at the garden gate
I'll keep back one for you.

A sigh! a sigh! for the pale white rose
That the chilling night-wind slew!
But I answer you when the lilies say—
I am sighing most for you!

Since the President has signed the bill reducing the tax on whisky from two dollars to fifty cents, the price of the article is said to have gone up in this market.

There is a lady who owns and runs a large wholesale harness and saddlery establishment on Pearl street, New York. She transacts her own business, and is daily at the store. She has traveled extensively in this country and Europe, and is said to be the "smartest woman in New York."

The Knox county (Ill.) Republican says a farmer in that county recently discovered on his farm a trap door covered by the sod, which opened into a room excavated in the ground. This room was quite well fitted up with tables and chairs, and contained stolen property of all kinds, and was evidently the rendezvous of thieves.

The income of the Crown Prince of Prussia is a fraction over a million dollars. His wife is very economical, and they lay by every year a couple of hundred thousand dollars. The King of Prussia spends his whole civil list, but accumulates the revenues proceeding from his private property. He is now believed to be the wealthiest monarch in Europe.

The New York Express emphasises the fact that Colonel J. H. Sypher has probably spent more years in Louisiana than ever he did days in Rhode Island.—Providence Journal.

Rev. Dr. Guthrie, the eloquent preacher of Scotland, says of his advancing years: "They say I am growing old because my hair is silvered and there are crows' feet upon my forehead and my step is not firm and elastic as of yore. But they are mistaken. That is not me. The brow is wrinkled, but the brow is not me. This is the house in which I live; but I am young—younger now than I ever was before."

The correspondent of the Boston Daily Advertiser writing from Savannah, Georgia, describes a nice condition of things in that lovely city. He gives many particulars of the insults and contumely to which people from the North are exposed, and relates one instance which strikes us as truly pathetic. A young lady went to Savannah from New York about a year ago. She was from the North, it is true, but on the other hand she was a relative of Mayor Hoffman. This consanguinity should have saved her from insult, but it didn't, the Mayor will be grieved to hear, do her a morsel of good. She was cut, isolated, sent to Coventry all the same. She might as well have been a relative of Mr. Garrison. We hasten to extend to Mayor Hoffman the assurance of our particular sympathy.—N. Y. Tribune.

IS IT TO BE 1866 OVER AGAIN?—We perceive that some of the Copperhead journals propose to fight this fight against article fourteen of the amendments of the Constitution. That article, in the State elections of 1866, as their platform, gave the Republicans their heavy two-thirds vote in both Houses of the present Congress. Are we to have that battle repeated? That is the important question for the Democracy.—New York Herald.

A full-blooded negro boy, a native born African, is now one of the chief lions of Great Britain. He travels free of expense in steamships, on railways, and in private yachts. He was the guest of Sir Robert Napier on the yacht Ferooz, and was the guest also of royalty at Osborne. He has had no education worth speaking of, and has only lately learned the use of the knife and fork. Yet this black boy is feted, petted, and caressed by princes and nobles, as well as by all others, in England. In this country the advocates of a white man's government would object to his traveling in the cars or steamboats along with them, because of his color. The little "nigger" thus petted in England is a son of the late King Theodore, of Abyssinia.

HOW BLONDIN WENT TO NIAGARA.—The following little paragraph, which is going the rounds is true:

Some years ago there was a rope walker by the name of Blondin amusing the people in various parts of the country. In the course of his travels he came to Buffalo, where he practiced his feats. One day he was astonished to see an announcement in a morning paper that he was intending to stretch a rope across the Niagara chasm, and astonish the people by walking it. Blondin in a tearing passion visited the office of the offending paper, and sought the author of the canard. He found him (Hank Faxon, inventor of the silver lake snake story and other romances; he is dead now, poor fellow), and abused him roundly in broken English. Faxon received him good naturedly, told him the thing was a joke, and wouldn't hurt his professional business half as much as it would help it. Blondin was calmed, became thoughtful, and finally said: "By gar, I go do that very thing." The American public knows whether he did it, and how well he succeeded.

The following is the opening sentence of General Frank P. Blair's speech at a Union meeting in St. Louis, after the fall of Sumter:

"Mr. Chairman and Gentlemen — The rebels who inaugurated this war shall not win by it as much territory as they can carry off under their finger-nails!"

Extract from F. P. Blair's letter bidding for the Democratic nomination for the Vice-Presidency:

"There is but one way to restore the government and the Constitution, and that is for the President elect to declare those (the reconstruction) acts null and void, compel the army to undo its usurpations, disperse the carpet-bag State governments," etc.

How much sympathy with General Blair's revolutionary programme can those Southern business men have, who recently met in convention at Bristol, Tenn., and took measures to start the "Norfolk and Liverpool Steamship Company?" Peace, stability and good order will be wanted to insure the success of their grand undertaking; but this state of affairs can only be secured by the defeat of the party that has indorsed the Blair platform of revolution

LOCAL INTELLIGENCE.

TRAVEL ON THE FERRYBOATS.—It would be a source of unalloyed amusement to watch the varied crowds which on every fine afternoon during the summer season throng to the ferryboats plying between New Orleans and Algiers, were it not for the serious accidents that sometimes happen in consequence of the recklessness evinced by many of those who cross the river.

Happily these accidents rarely occur; but they need not, and would not happen at all if the least prudence was exercised by a majority of the passengers.

Observe the boat about to land. Most of those on board crowd to the railings apparently actuated by a frenzied desire to escape from the vessel as if she was on fire with a hundred barrels of gunpowder in the hold. Some spring as soon as she attains the distance of three or four feet from the wharf; and but a small portion seem willing to wait until the boat is secured and fairly at rest. Per contra, those on shore waiting for a passage seem equally frantic to get on board, as if the boat would not remain for a quarter of a second. These people, coming and going, do not intend to be uncivil to or inconvenience one another; but each party is so intent on its object that they charge like knights in a slow tournament, jostling, pushing, crowding, banishing comfort, and incurring risk. The evil is the more absurd from the fact that the boats always remain at the landings between each trip long enough to permit several hundred people to get on shore, and then several hundred to get on board. There is no occasion for hurry.

Sometimes after an accident has happened people talk about the necessity of having railings along the ferry wharf. But no railing or other preventive will supersede the necessity of prudence in those who travel on the boats. A little caution on the part of passengers is all that is needed.

These remarks will not be considered inopportune in view of the dreadful accident which occurred on Sunday last, and which has had the effect of exciting a spasmodic public feeling soon to subside until revived by a new catastrophe.

JUDGE ABELL ON DUELING.—Judge Abell has made a supplementary charge to the Grand Jury:

He charged them that they were invested with the sole power of indicting offenders, and that the Court was powerless if they failed to do their duty. The public look to them for a searching investigation into the numerous homicides that are committed. The Legislature has denounced dueling as murder when death ensues; the law presumes malice till the contrary is shown. Dueling is a practice reprobated by the laws of all civilized countries, often destructive to life, ruinous to the happiness of whole families, and of a most demoralizing tendency to the youth of the State, and in the opinion of the Court unequal in its application, and should be discouraged. The killing of a fellow man without the highest necessity can never be justified in morals, and is denounced as murder by the statutes which it is your duty to enforce. Carrying concealed weapons is a kindred practice of dangerous tendency; weapons about the person frequently emboldening persons to seek a pretext to use them without legal cause, and frequently to commit homicide or murder.

HORRIBLE ACCIDENT—A Lady Crushed to Death at the Pontchartrain Railroad Depot. About five o'clock on Sunday evening last there happened one of the most fearful accidents which our reporters have been called on to record for many a day. Mr. and Mrs. E. R. Knight, residing at 232 Baronne street, left their home about half-past four o'clock with the intention of taking the five o'clock train at the depot of the Ponchartrain railroad for a trip to the lake. They arrived at the depot just as the train was moving off, and not wishing to be disappointed in their contemplated pleasure, very unwisely undertook to get on the moving train. In thus attempting to do so, Mrs. Knight missed her footing and fell between the car and the depot platform, which it will be remembered is about three or four feet high, and requires considerable descent to enter a car while standing on the platform. As Mrs. Knight fell the moving car caught her, and with the motion of a cylinder kept her turning round and round in a space scarcely a foot, crushing her in such a horrible manner as to cause instant death. Her ribs and arms were fractured, and her body completely smashed. Mr. Knight in attempting to rescue her (Mr. K. standing on the car platform) fell between the cars, one of his legs being badly crushed, which it is feared will have to be amputated.

No blame is attached to any of the railroad employes.

Mrs. Knight was a lady of about twenty-six years of age, and was the mother of five interesting and bright children, whose piteous wails were almost heart-rending. Mr. Knight, if he survives his injuries, will have cause to mourn the loss of a most exemplary wife, torn from him in the prime of life and under circumstances well calculated to cause a gloom to hang over his remaining years.

Coroner Roche held an inquest on the deceased on Sunday evening, and the following was the evidence taken before the jury:

Statement of Ben R. Hyatt—Was standing on the platform, talking with Mr. Anderson, when I saw Mrs. Knight trying to get on the cars while in motion; think it was about the last car. I saw some person holding their hand out, trying to assist the lady since killed to get on the train. I saw her slip and fall. I tried to assist her, with the help of Mr. Anderson, to get away from the car, but before we could succeed in lifting her on the platform she was caught between the body of the car and the platform. As soon as the car passed Mr. Anderson and myself jumped down and raised her up on the platform. I do not know whether the cars start before five o'clock or not. I do not attach any blame to any person or persons connected with the railroad.

Andrew Anderson stated that at the time of the occurrence the train was in motion. Mrs. Knight in trying to get on the train slipped and fell off and rolled between the platform and car. Witness with the assistance of some others endeavored to extricate her, but did not succeed until the train had ceased moving. Mr. Knight also endeavored to help her, and in so doing had his leg badly crushed. I do not attach any blame to any person connected with the railroad.

The verdict of the jury was in accordance with the facts above stated.

This sad accident should be a warning not to endeavor to get on a train while in motion, as serious accidents are always liable to occur. At best, the platform of the Pontchartrain railroad depot is very awkwardly arranged, and is not built in a manner to accommodate passengers. It is about two feet too high, and it requires no ordinary skill to enter the cars when standing still, and therefore it will be conceded as being extremely dangerous to attempt to board a moving train. Some remedy should be found for this oversight, or it is feared more accidents of the same sort will take place. It has long been decided by railroad men that a depot built for the shipment of freight can not in safety be used for passengers, and that a passenger depot is not adapted for loading and unloading freight. Separate tracks should always be used and different sized platforms, to avoid accidents and unnecessary labor.

THE PONTCHARTRAIN RAILROAD DEPOT—Nearly Another Accident.—Last evening the tragedy of Sunday last came very near being repeated at the Pontchartrain railroad depot. As the five o'clock train for the lake had just started a lady came rushing up and attempted to board the moving train; was in the very act of stepping on board when her dress caught on a large splinter, and she lost her balance and fell against the car. Except for the timely efforts of some bystanders, who succeeded in dragging her away, she would, in all probability, have met the same lamentable fate of Mrs. Knight. Now, in order to avoid a constant liability to accidents as the present construction of the depot platform is tending that way, a few simple suggestions and a few facts will not be amiss. In the first place the platform was built, not for the accommodation of passengers, but for loading and unloading freight cars.

The platform is too high, and is not only dangerous, but inconvenient for passengers getting on the cars. By actual measurement the distance between the body of the cars and the depot platform is but five inches and a half. The platform is on a level with the floor of the cars, and the distance between the depot platform and the platform of the cars varies in different cars from three feet two inches to two feet nine inches, according to the slope of the steps. Any one possessed of ordinary sense will at once perceive that the stride to be made in entering a car from this platform is inconvenient if not dangerous, especially for ladies.

Owing to the peculiar build of the platform, it is impracticable to lower it; but there is a remedy still better than that to avoid these accidents, which at present are always liable to occur, and that is to erect a platform, say from six inches to one foot in height, situated between the middle track and the track on the west side of the depot, using the middle track for the passenger train instead of the west track, as is now done. There is a space of six feet between these two tracks, and sufficient room for passengers not to crowd each other, as the depot is over three hundred feet in length. Both side tracks can then be used for freight and not interfere with the passenger department at all; besides removing the cause for accidents, which in this way can very rarely occur. In Northern and Western cities many depots are thus arranged where accidents like the recent disaster never have been known to take place. The company should look into the matter immediately, or it is feared these horrors will be of very common occurrence.

WEEKLY MORTUARY REPORT.—Dr. G. W. Dirmeyer, Secretary of the Board of Health, reports that the total number of interments in this city last week was 110, of which 1 committed suicide, 1 was drowned, 1 died of brain disease, 3 congestion of the brain, 1 softening of the brain, 14 consumption, 5 congestive fever, 2 pernicious fever, 1 intermittent fever, 1 brain fever, 1 nervous fever, 1 puerperal fever, 1 remittent fever, 1 scarlet fever, 2 typhoid fever, 3 heart disease, 2 lockjaw, 3 pneumonia, 11 were stillborn, and the balance died of various other diseases. Fifty-three were males, 52 females, and 5 infants. Seventy-one were whites, 23 blacks, 12 mulattoes, and 4 not classified. Sixty-five were natives of the United States, 20 not stated, and 25 were foreigners. Thirty-three were under 1 year, 17 between 1 and 10, 3 between 10 and 15, 2 between 15 and 20, 7 between 20 and 30, 14 between 30 and 40, 11 between 40 and 50, 12 between 50 and 60, 6 between 60 and 70, 4 between 70 and 80, and 1 between 90 and 100.

PIONEER GRANT CLUB.—There was another rousing big meeting of this club on Friday evening last. There are great accessions to its ranks every meeting night. In addition to the regular business there is always something to entertain and enliven those present. There is an organized glee club, subordinate to the Pioneer Grant Club, and composed of its members, which must prove an attractive feature when properly trained. Then there is Professor Sheldon, who, by the way, was elected an honorary member at the last meeting, and is yet no honorary member; he is a host within himself. The public speaking, too, is of the most attractive and popular kind. Last meeting night, after the regular business had been disposed of, the President, J. M. G. Parker, Esq., called Hon. Michael Hahn to the chair, for the purpose of giving him an opportunity of introducing to the club General Wm. L. McMillen. This the Governor did in his happiest and best style, eloquently portraying the many admirable qualities of the man as a patriot, soldier, and civilian; he complimented him highly for the part he had taken to suppress rebellion, and said that although he was one of those who was called a "carpet-bagger" here, he had done his duty to his whole country by helping to put down its enemies. They might call him what they pleased, but the friends of the country and of human progress knew him to be brave, honorable, and eloquent. General McMillen then addressed the meeting in an able and eloquent manner for about an hour.

He called on Republicans and Union men to rally to the support of Grant and Colfax, the standard bearers of the only party that was true to the country and human progress—the party that was opposed to slavery. He said that when he was in Washington, and doubts were expressed of the propriety of admitting the States that had been in rebellion to the condition occupied by them before the war, he pledged himself that if Louisiana was reinstated she would stand by the party that had stood by the country. In order to make this pledge good he said the colored people would have to do their duty. They would have to help carry this State for Grant and Colfax. The General concluded his remarks amid deafening shouts of applause.

WILL OPEN ITS DOORS IN SEPTEMBER.—We hear that the Academy of Music will open its portals about the middle of September. That will be a good joke on September, but then he can stand it. By all means give a show, Mr. Bidwell, and recall the emaciated Kittredge.

LATEST BY TELEGRAPH.

WASHINGTON, July 24—House.—A joint resolution authorizing officers and soldiers to wear on State occasions badges of the corps in which they served passed.

The report of the Conference Committee on the Alaska bill, simply appropriating the necessary money, was passed.

The resolution to take recess from Monday to the third Monday in September, after an exciting struggle prevailed, several Democrats changing their votes. The final vote was 107 to 71.

The Reconstruction Committee reported a bill for the more speedy reorganization of Virginia, Mississippi, and Texas.

During the debate Mr. Butler declared himself in favor of the bill, but hopeless, however, of its becoming a law, the resolution to adjourn on Monday would defeat it. He added that if the Republicans lost the Southern States they could not object to their being counted against them, and if the Republicans won them the President had said their governments were illegal and their votes could not be counted, and the President held the purse the sword, and the Senate so far as heard from. The New York World claimed that if Congress adjourned every Southern State would be carried for the Democratic ticket. Mr. Butler believed it. Congress was simply losing time considering this bill. If the reconstruction policy could stand Congress ought to protect it. They ought to protect their action, their honor as legislators, and themselves. Mr Butler's time here expired.

Mr. Beck appealed to the House not to pass the bill, not to consign those States to reckless adventurers, and not to arm a negro constabulary against peaceful white inhabitants, but rather leave those States under the protection of the troops of the United States.

The bill passed on a strictly party vote, except John Banker, of Illinois, who voted with the Democrats.

The bill as passed is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That for the better security of persons and property in Texas, Virginia, and Mississippi the constitutional conventions of each of said States heretofore elected under and in pursuance of an act of Congress passed March 2, 1867, entitled an act for the more efficient government of the rebel States, and the several acts of Congress thereto and amendatory thereof, shall have and are hereby authorized to exercise the following powers in addition to the powers now authorized by law, to wit:

To make removals and appointments of all officers of the provisional governments of said States respectively; to authorize the provisional Governors of said respective States to remove and appoint registers and judges of election under said act of Congress, which registers and judges of election shall not be eligible to any elective office under such provisional government, and shall observe the provision of said act of Congress; to organize and maintain a constabulary force in each of said States to preserve the peace and aid in the execution of the laws; to provide by ordinance for the reassembling of said conventions from time to time, and for holding all elections authorized by said acts of Congress, and for ascertaining and declaring the result of such elections, especially the result of any election which may be held for the ratification or rejection of any constitution which said several conventions may submit to the people of either of said States, and to pass ordinances not inconsistent with the constitution and laws of the United States, as they may deem necessary to protect all persons therein in their lives, liberty and property.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That the several ordinances which may be passed by the constitutional convention of either of said States as herein provided shall be enforced by the provisional government of such State until such State shall have adopted a constitution of State government, and the same shall have been approved by Congress, provided that nothing in this act shall deprive any person of trial by jury in the courts of said State for offenses against the laws of said State.

SEC. 3. Be it further enacted, That the military commanders in each of said states shall give aid to the officers of the provisional government of each of said States in preserving the peace and enforcing the laws, and especially in suppressing unlawful obstructions and forcible resistance to the execution of the laws.

SEC. 4. Be it further enacted, That on the fourth Wednesday after the passage of this act the said conventions of Mississippi and Virginia shall reassemble, and the said convention of Mississippi shall proceed to frame a constitution of government and submit the same to the people, under and in pursuance of the provisions of the said acts of Congress and of this act.

SEC. 5. That if in any one of the said States any person shall, during the year 1868, vote for any candidate for Elector of President or Vice-President of the United States, or shall act as an officer at any election for such candidates, every person so offending shall be deemed guilty of high misdemeanor and shall be liable to indictment and conviction thereof in any court of competent jurisdiction, and shall, on conviction, be fined not more than $1000 and imprisoned not less than one month nor more than one year.

SEC. 6. That it shall be the duty of the President of the United States to prohibit any person from voting or acting as an officer at any election contrary to the provisions of this act, and for that purpose he shall employ the power of the army and navy of the United States as far as may be necessary.

SEC. 7. That all acts or parts of acts, so far as the same may be in conflict with the provisions of this act, are hereby repealed.

Senate—Legislative business unimportant. Senate in executive session nearly all day considering the Sandwich Island treaty.

Adjourned.

In the House to-day General Sypher introduced a bill enforcing in Louisiana the third section of the fourteenth article under penalty of fine and imprisonment. Referred to the judiciary committee.

A resolution introduced directing the committee on postal affairs to report a bill establishing a postal system of money orders between France and the United States.

WASHINGTON, July 24.—The President has recognized Adolph Bader as Consul for Bavaria at New Orleans.

Reports by train from Baltimore say that the water was within a few feet of Monumental square, North street almost through its entire length flooded to the depth of four to eight feet. The Holliday Street theatre was surrounded by water. A number of dray horses and some drivers were drowned. A street car was swept from the track on Gay street down Harrison, with a number of passengers. The wildest reports concerning their fate are in circulation. No business is doing. The latest advices so far are up to half-past two o'clock, when the flood was swelling.

The Radicals are not hopeless of prolonging the session, but as the case stands now Congress must take recess on Monday, unless the Senate concurs in a concurrent resolution to the contrary. This action will defeat all current legislation affecting the South, parliamentary tactics and pocket vetoes being regarded certain.

The two wings of the Republican party have been fighting over the Southern members so far they mostly mate with Butler's impeachment extremists.

Schofield will reorganize the Military Districts in a few days. The details have not transpired.

WASHINGTON, July 25—House.—A bill requiring that future grants to railroads be sold only to actual settlers passed.

A resolution passed prohibiting exemption from penalties of the recent tax bill for twenty days, as it will take that long for its official promulgation.

Messrs. Clift, Prince, Edwards, and Gore were seated as representatives from Georgia.

On the impeachment resolutions which were referred to the Judiciary Committee, Messrs. Baker, Ingersoll, and Spalding voted with the Democrats adversely to the new impeachment movement; otherwise the action of the House was entirely partisan.

The Corruption Committee on Impeachment were discharged.

The bill protecting Americans abroad passed, and goes to the President.

After passing several bills which are of no interest South, and passing the Freedmen's bureau bill, which secures Howard in office, the House took a recess.

Senate—After unimportant business, the House bill for the reorganization of State governments in Virginia, Mississippi, and Texas came up, and was placed on the Speaker's table, as being too important to refer to committee. The bill was telegraphed in full last night.

The bill protecting American citizens abroad was resumed.

Mr. Howard opposed conferring power on the President by which the President could involve the country in war in six weeks. The government had nothing to do with Irish oppression at home. He objected to making the United States a society for the propogandism of political views.

Mr. Terry said that the bill was an effort to change the laws of nations, and by its passage we would simply expose ourselves to the contempt of the nations of the earth.

The bill passed by 39 to 5—Messrs. Terry, Fessenden, Fowler, Howard, and Van Winkle.

Though in their seats, Messrs. Sumner and Trumbull refused to vote.

The bill removing political disabilities from Ex Governor Hahn, of Louisiana, and Mr. Young, of Georgia, was amended to include John Young Browre, of Kentucky, and others, was taken from the table and passed.

The bill securing General Howard in office as Commissioner of the Freedmen's Bureau passed.

The Senate confirmed Oliver Hawkins, Consul General at Havana; W. M. Selden, Collector of Internal Revenue in Virginia; Elisha Foote, Commissioner of Patents, and Henry M. Watts, Minister to Austria.

WASHINGTON, July 25.—It is stated that the debt statement will show an increase of six millions. Internal revenue receipts are decreasing rapidly. Receipts from customs about the same.

Charles M. Hamilton, of Florida, is the leader of the present impeachment movement.

Burlingame and his mandarins have a grand reception to-night in honor of the ratification of the treaty.

Captain Queen is dead. It is understood that he was robbed and murdered. Razors and papers were found, and signs of a scuffle were apparent where the body was found.

WASHINGTON, July 27.—The funding bill has passed both Houses.

The bill reorganizing Mississippi, Virginia, and Texas came up in the Senate. Mr. Buckalew took the floor to argue it, when Mr. Conkling said it was useless to try to pass the bill, and on his motion it was tabled.

The bill having passed removing the disabilities from Messrs. Nelson and Tift and General Young, they were seated as Representatives from Georgia.

The House filibustered on the tariff to adjournment.

Mr. G. E. Spencer was seated as Senator from Alabama.

Simeon Corley, Representative from South Carolina, was seated.

The Senate confirmed General Rosencrans, Minister to Mexico, Enos D. Hodge, Associate Justice of the Supreme Court, and Lewis Woolfley, Assessor of Internal Revenue for the First District of Louisiana.

The President has nominated Alexander Cummings, of Pennsylvania, Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

Bill reducing the army came up in regular order in the House, and, by test vote, was referred to a committee by a majority of four. This kills it for the present. One section of this bill armed the loyal militia of the South.

The Senate rejected Johnson and Tewell as Collector and Assessor for the Third Louisiana District, and reconsidered the vote confirming Seldon for the Second Virginia District, and rejected him.

There is so much confusion that it is impossible to give the position of several important bills, but all affecting the South, of an aggressive character, have failed.

The Senate confirmed Robert A. Crawford as Collector of Customs at Brazos de Santiago, Texas; rejected General Jeffries for Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

Both Houses adjourned till the third Monday in September.

WASHINGTON, July 27.—The President has not yet signed the funding bill.

At an informal meeting of the Southern members the startling proposition was made and met with great favor of having the Southern Legislatures instead of the people elect Presidential electors, thus making the practice of South Carolina general throughout the South. There appears to be no constitutional or legal difficulty in the way of securing the Southern States for Grant by this plan.

The President called no special session of the Senate. This leaves many important offices vacant. The President was at the Capitol from half-past ten to twelve. All the bills were signed except the funding bill, which, however, the President can sign any time within ten days.

The Republican members of Congress have signed an agreement not to be here in September unless advised to come by Senator Morgan and Representative Schenck, of the Congressional Republican Committee.

WASHINGTON, July 28.—It is understood that the President considers the commissionership of Internal Revenue vacant, and will make an ad interim appointment in a few days. Efforts to reorganize the Federal offices in New Orleans failed. It was found impossible to compromise conflicting party interests.

The following overdue Federal obligations are outstanding:

Of one year five per cent temporary loan, issued four years ago, over a million; 7-30's payable in 1867, over half a million; 7-30's due June 30, 1868, nearly three millions. These bonds are now payable in currency without interest from date of maturity. The time for redeeming 7-30's due July 15, 1868, has been extended to August 1, after which date they will be payable in currency without interest.

It is positively stated that the President will continue to act as heretofore regarding the reconstruction acts. He will conform to the laws until modified by Congress or nullified by the courts.

The Chinese legation took formal leave of the President to-day. Burlingame is delighted with the treaty.

This evening's Star has the following:

"Choosing Electors in the South.—The Southern members of Congress within the past few days have, in conference with the Republicans here, decided that it will be best for the Presidential electors in the reorganized States to be chosen by their respective Legislatures in the same manner as in South Carolina. This, it is held, will remove all fear of the disturbances and frauds which have been apprehended. It is thought probable that these views will be carried out by the Legislatures in whose hands the matter rests."

The Cabinet had a prolonged session to day. Schofield submitted an order for the reorganization of the military districts, which will probably be promulgated to-morrow. Its details are unknown.

Mr. Davis with his family sailed on Saturday from Quebec for Europe.

"The Commanding Generals of the Second, Third, Fourth, and Fifth Military Districts having officially reported that Arkansas, North and South Carolina, Louisiana, Georgia, Alabama, and Florida have complied with the reconstruction acts, including the act of June 25, 1868, and that consequently so much of the act of March 2, 1867, and all acts supplementary thereto providing for military districts, subject to the military authority of the United States as provided, have become inoperative in said States, and the Commanding Generals have ceased exercising the military power conferred by the said acts, therefore the following changes will be made in the organization and command of the military districts and geographical departments:

1. The Second and Third Military Districts having ceased to exist, North and South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, and Florida will constitute the Department of the South, General Meade to command, with headquarters at Atlanta, Georgia.

2. General Gillem, will command the Fourth Military District, comprising Mississippi.

3. General Reynolds will command the Fifth Military District, comprising Texas, with headquarters at Austin.

4. Louisiana and Arkansas will constitute the Department of Louisiana, General Rousseau commanding, with headquarters at New Orleans. General Buchanan will continue in command until relieved by General Rousseau.

5. General George Crooke relieves General Rousseau in the Department of Columbia.

6. General Canby is reassigned to the command of the Department of Washington.

7. General Edward Hatch, Colonel Ninth cavalry, relieves General Buchanan as Assistant Commissioner of the Freedmen's Bureau in Louisiana.

WASHINGTON, July 28.—In accordance with the concurrent resolution of Congress Secretary Seward proclaims, reciting the facts and circumstances, and concludes: "And I further certify that the said amendment fourteen has become valid to all intents and purposes as a part of the Constitution of the United States.

The Commissioner has given notice that spirits may be withdrawn from bond on payment of fifty cents per gallon and four dollars per barrel of forty gallons, equal to sixty cents per proof gallon. All distilleries must be closed until the distillers have given bonds and have complied with the new law in all other particulars.

WASHINGTON, July 29.—Reliable reports represent that Colonel W. M. Smallwood will probably be appointed Postmaster at New Orleans in place of the present incumbent, who, it is reported, is to be suspended.

General Hobart, it is understood, will be assigned as Special Treasury Agent to run the customhouse until a successor to Mr. Kellogg has been appointed and confirmed. This arrangement will be satisfactory to the conservative element of Louisiana so far as it is represented here.

WASHINGTON, July 29.—Secretary McCulloch has issued a circular stating that parties desiring to exchange seven-thirties due July fifteen for five-twenties, must place them in mail or express, addressed to Secretary McCulloch on or before August 1.

Messrs. Seward and Evarts departed for New York on a week's absence.

The Speaker appointed Messrs. Poland, Butler, and Beck committee to visit Prince Edward's Island to report upon the propriety of a reciprocity treaty.

Secretary McCulloch apprehends mischief from the new tax bill. Stringent regulations are under preparation.

Messrs. Foote and Cox, Commissioners of Pensions and Patents, have been installed.

Internal revenue receipts to-day $659,000.

ATLANTA, July 24.—The military commission for the trial of the Columbus prisoners met this morning, and no business being before it, on motion, adjourned sine die.

The Columbus prisoners were remanded to the custody of the post commandant at Columbus, and will be released on two thousand dollars bail for future appearance in case called on.

The State Democratic Convention nominated General J. B. Gordon and Hon. John T. Clarke, electors for the State at large, and General William T. Wofford and Thomas M. Norwood, alternates.

The House passed the following resolution by a vote of 117 to 20:

That we respectfully and earnestly petition Congress to remove from every citizen of Georgia, irrespective of party association, the disabilities imposed by the third section of the proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States known as article fourteen.

Governor Bullock sent a message to both Houses, in which he congratulates the people on the establishment of civil government; declares the new State constitution non-proscriptive; applauds the freedom of the ballot box; declares that we are a nation, and not independent sovereignties; claims that the national Legislature should have the right to declare who shall be citizens; lauds the labor system as the most efficient in the world, and approves of the removal of disabilities as fast as the relations to the general government will justify.

The Democratic demonstration closed last night with a grand torchlight procession. The city was brilliantly illuminated. The crowds dispersed at midnight, cheering for Seymour and Blair.

ATLANTA, July 25.—In the Senate Mr. Candler offered the following:

WHEREAS, Ex-Governor Brown, one of the ablest lawyers in the Republican party of Georgia, as well as other persons distinguished for their knowledge of constitutional law, held during the late election canvass that persons of color were not entitled to hold office under the existing constitution; and

Whereas, Such persons hold seats as Senators on this floor; and

Whereas, Laws of vital importance to the people of Georgia are to be enacted by the General Assembly, the validity of which should not be made uncertain because of the participation in their enactment of persons not entitled under the constitution to participate therein; therefore,

Resolved, That the Committee on Privileges and Elections be directed to inquire into the eligibility of several persons of color holding seats as Senators, and report at the earliest day practicable.

Mr. Hungerford, Radical, said: There is a higher opinion than Governor Brown's—that of a United States Senator, which has settled it, who holds a higer office than Governor Brown has yet held. I mean Mr. Sumner, who in a letter said there was no reason why colored persons should not hold office or anything else that any one can under the Constitution of the United States. The passage of the fourteenth article settles that question forever in Georgia.

The constitution of this State proclaims that all persons born or naturalized, whose residence here makes them citizens of the State; no law can be made to abridge their privileges. Does it simply mean that they may breathe and work, or are they entitled to all the privileges of American citizens. The resolution was defeated?

The Senate and House have appointed Tuesday, the twenty-eighth instant, for the election of United States Senators and State officers. Joe Brown and Foster Blodgett have been nominated as candidates by the Republican party. No nominations have been made by the Democrats.

ATLANTA, July 27.—Democratic Congressmen were nominated to-day—General Wafford for the long term, and H. V. Miller for the short term.

The House adopted a resolution requesting the Governor to proclaim military law at an end, and the restoration of civil law.

Bills were introduced to organize the militia, re-enact the stay law, and abolishing the District Courts.

A resolution passed both Houses suspending levy and sale except for debts contracted during the war.

In the House a long discussion ensued on the reconsideration of Candler's resolution for a Committee on Privileges and Elections to report whether negroes have the right to hold office.

ATLANTA, July 28.—No choice was made for United States Senators. In the Senate the votes stood: For the long term—A. H. Stephens, 15; Joe Brown, 24; scattering, 4. Short term—Foster Blodgett, 16; Miller, 13; scattering, 12.

In the House the vote stood: Brown, 78; Stephens, 81; Joshua Hill, 10. For the short term—Blodgett, 57; Miller, 80; scattering, 31.

The Senate refused to concur in the House resolution instructing the Governor to notify the civil officers of the cessation of military rule in Georgia.

A resolution was offered in the House that as no elections were held in the counties of Irwin and Telfair, and those counties were not represented in the legislative body, the Governor be requested to order elections, and in the same order bring these counties into the Union. Referred to the Judiciary Committee.

ATLANTA, July 29.—Joshua Hill and H. V. Miller were elected United States Senators on joint ballot of the Senate and House. For the long term—Hill 110, Brown 94. For the short term—Miller 119, Blodgett 73, scattering 20.

Adjourned until to-morrow.

AUGUSTA, July 29.—It has been raining for several days.

The remains of Cornelius Kedd, killed by police officers, were interred this afternoon. The body was followed to the grave by a large procession of citizens and firemen. It is understood that the jury found a verdict of murder against the police officer.

An indignation meeting will be held to-morrow against the present municipal government.

SAVANNAH, July 29.—The heaviest thunder storm known for years passed over this city this morning. One child was killed, and several buildings struck by lightning. Rain continued throughout the day.

NEW YORK, July 27.—Several cases of cholera, including three deaths, have occurred in what is known as the shanty district of the city.

THE GERMANIA LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY, established in 1860, and based upon the most approved principles of Life Insurance security, presents its claims for consideration, believing that its solid foundation already secured by the faithful and efficient management of its officers and Board of Directors will give it the preference above all other similar institutions.

It is purely Mutual, as the net profits are distributed among the parties insured, the interest of the capital stock being only five per cent according to its charter.

It assumed the system of cash payments at the commencement of its existence, and maintained it faithfully until now, and promises the same for the future, thereby securing to policy holders the full amount for which they are insured. The advantage of this system over the half cash and half note system is patent to every careful observer, but will be more fully illustrated by the following statement and table:

If a person of thirty years of age insures his life for the amount of $1000 in one of the credit companies, and pays a premium of $28 30 per year, with a note for half of the premium, then by means of this note and interests thereon the amount will become less and less in the following proportions:

| | |
|---|---|
| After 10 years the $1000 will amount to | $687 44 |

A ROCKY MOUNTAIN SKETCH.

BY ABBIE J. SHAW.

Those grand and glorious hills, exhaustless theme
Of painter's pencil or of poet's dream;
Those lofty snow crowned spires that proudly rise
In bold relief against the azure skies;
Nature's primeval temples reared on high
By Him above, whose omnipresent eye,
Beheld His work and "saw that it was good,"
Ere yet prevailed the waters of the flood,
He sent to rest upon the face of earth,
When He repented Him creation's birth,
Where now, upon those pure unsullied crests,
The bright eternal token of His mercy rests,
His "bow of promise" set, a radiant span,
An everlasting covenant with man,
That while the earth remaineth, never more
He'll curse the land as in the times of yore,
And never more shall cease the winter's cold
Or summer's heat the harvest to unfold;
By day the sun shall never cease to shine,
Nor shall the moon her starry throne resign.
Such thoughts as these attune our hearts to praise,
While on His wondrous works with awe we gaze.
Those deep ravines and rocky canons wide,
The lights and shadows on the mountain side,
The dark and rugged pines above, that stand
Like watchful sentinels to guard the land;
The shadowy outlines of the "Red Buttes" seem,
'Neath the soft splendor of the moon's pale beam,
To waken memories of some ivied tower
Or ruined castle seen at midnight hour.
Upon the heights, with upraised head and ear,
The antlered elk and graceful fawn appear,
Listening to catch the sound of coming foe,
And startled, gaze, then swiftly fly below
To wooded valleys, where they seek to find
A shelter from their enemy, mankind.
Here mountain streams flow o'er their rocky bed,
And by the melting snows in summer fed,
Relying on their never failing source,
Down through the valley keep their onward course,
Within their channels deep, with thoughtful care,
Dame Nature hides her jewel casket rare;
What stores of wealth these sandy beds enfold,
Of precious stones with bright and shining gold.
Their margins fringed with many-colored blooms,
Wafting the breezes with their sweet perfumes.
And over all, with richer colors blent
Than boasted tints of flaming orient,
The gorgeous canopy of sunset gold,
Whose curtains fall in many a dazzling fold
Of every shade, down from the turquoise blue
To crimson, amethyst, and amber hue,
These views combined present a picture grand,
Showing the faultless touches of the Master's hand.

CLUB SONG.

AIR—"A Thousand Years."

Respectfully dedicated to Chaplain McCabe, the "Sweet Singer" of the Rocky Mountain Excursion Club.

BY ABBIE J. SHAW.

That happy day I'll long remember,
When first beyond the border State
We saw the rocky, snow-crowned summits,
Neath the June skies of Sixty-eight.
CHORUS.
"A thousand years" might pass before me,
And each record some joyous fete,
But memory still would fondly cherish
Those bright June days of Sixty-eight.
And while those scenes shall be remembered,
What forms will fancy recreate
Of painted Sioux upon the war path,
The "bete noir" of Sixty-eight.
A thousand years, etc.

We met as strangers, yet forever
I'll thank the kind propitious fate
That brought our little band together—
The cherished friends of Sixty-eight.
A thousand years, etc.

And when we "gather at the river,"
As for the boatman pale we wait,
Oh, may we in that blest reunion
Meet all our friends of Sixty-eight.
A thousand years, etc.

DESPAIR NOT.

Oh, weary heart! treading the path of life,
The hard, rough path that has torn thy feet,
The winds that blow over the way are rife
With sorrow and toil, and the cold storms beat
On thy bare, sick head; the dread tempest wild
Sweeping down from the cold, cold world all around
And upon thee,—look upward, poor earth-worried child,
And press steadily on till thy rest thou has found.

Ah! the islands are flower-gemmed and radiant beyond,
And the laurel is waiting to circle thy brow;
But none but the victor may win the wreath,
And only the heroes wear it now,
Who in many and many a hard-won fight
Have met and conquered the direst foe.
And thou wilt value the crown the more
If for it even thy blood should flow.

The pearls that lie in the coral reefs
The farthest down in the cold dark sea
Are richest and best, and the diver knows
It may cost his life, yet never does he
In his search for the bright gems pause—oh, no,
But boldly and bravely goes steadily on,
Breasting the wild, chill waves, 'till at last
The prize he is seeking is nobly won.

We know full well that the crimson heart
Of the rose is opened after the rain,
And the sunlight flows in a flood of gold
Where latest the storm-cloud swept the plain.
Despair not, though bleeding thy weary feet
Be brave to conquer the hardest fate:
Thou shalt win the goal, and when life is done
Pass safely and blest through the emerald gate.

RUTH.

New Orleans, July, 1868.

Washington Correspondence.

WASHINGTON, July 23.

The introduction of "Rand's Pneumatic Gas" is likely to produce great change in and extend the use of that article as an illuminator. A difficulty heretofore encountered in using automatic gas machines has been the liability of the gas to condense, so as not to travel in long tubes. This difficulty is overcome by Rand's invention. The material used is gasoline, a cheap material obtained at the oil wells. The gasoline is placed in a tank surrounded by water, the air is pumped into the tank, and passes through the gasoline. The gas is thus formed, and passes through a tube to the burner; the flame produced is strong and clear, and equal to thirty candles: it can be mixed with coal gas, and greatly increases the illuminating power of the latter. The arrangements are exceedingly simple: the gas can be made by anybody who can turn the crank of a coffee mill. The simplicity is almost too much for belief. One must see for himself. I could see nothing in the operation to suggest danger from explosion. The gas was poured into an open tank and set on fire: it burned like alcohol in a saucer: but to avoid all danger the tank is put below the earth's surface in the yard, and covered by a metallic lid.

This invention places the use of gas within the reach of every householder in the country, as well as town, and as each one may, by a water tank in the upper story of his house, be the owner of waterworks, so by this arrangement every man may be the proprietor of gasworks, and capable of all the uses to which coal gas is now appropriated. It is claimed that it can be furnished at one half the cost of coal gas. Of this I can not speak, but allow that the cost is the same: the adaptation of the pneumatic gas to the country home as well as to the largest city halls is a feature that must command public attention, and confer universal good as long at least as petroleum continues to flow. Gas light to read by is inferior to that produced by coal and lard oil in properly constructed lamps, but the latter are so troublesome, and the former so convenient that no housekeeper who can choose will hesitate to accept gas. The price of a tank for private families is, I think, unreasonably high—too high for general use. A machine to supply fifteen burners will cost some three hundred and fifty dollars. This is about a fair average. One of thirty burners costs five hundred dollars. True, if the cost of consumption is only one-half of coal gas, as is claimed, the machine would soon pay for itself. Taking it just as it stands, it opens to view a source of domestic comfort not to be estimated by its cost in money.

Hamilton & Co., on Seventh street, have the agency for this city, and from the experiments I witnessed there, I see no reason why this convenient and brilliant illuminator should not soon be within reach of every property holder. The right to use this machine in Illinois has been sold already at $100,000.

Louisiana is restored to her place in the halls of the National Legislature. May her Representatives prove equal to the demand upon their wisdom and fidelity.

South Carolina came in yesterday. The scene in the Legislature of the latter was anything but flattering in regard to the purity of politicians.

There is no hope for the country till statesmen shall be substituted for politicians in the legislatures of the nation. The politician is always corrupt, no matter to which party he may belong. Patriotism with him is his leaf of bread, nothing more.

Office holding under either State or general government seems almost certain to debauch the official, though he may be honest when placed there.

Before this reaches you more light will have been thrown on the subject of adjournment than now appears. The language of the President, proclaiming the passage of the fourteenth amendment, is carefully employed, but the design is as clear as if plain words had been used. "A false friend is like a broken tooth or a foot out of joint."

MORDECAI.

Galveston, Texas.

We will state a few facts. They may do good. Possibly some kind brother to whom the good Lord has loaned a liberal amount of this world's goods may feel disposed to bestow some upon us in our great need. At any rate, it can do no harm to speak the truth in soberness.

I take it for granted that all of our friends admit that the Methodist Episcopal Church ought to have a society and foothold on this island. You are aware that this place is beginning to assume the proportions of a commercial city of no small dimensions. There are no less than twenty-five thousand inhabitants here to-day, with the prospect of many hundreds to be added this coming fall. Many of these people come here from the North, and some with their church letters in their pockets, taken from the Methodist Episcopal Church at the place where they last resided. They want a home, and if really devoted must have one, and we believe that it is our duty as a church to provide them with one of their own choice.

How is this to be done? Certainly not in the way usual among our brethren of the North, because we have not the sympathy of the community in which we labor, and contributions for building a loyal church will be largely withheld.

The Church Extension society, we understand, has been obliged to refuse donations for the present, and no help can be expected from that source. If we present our claims to individual churches we are told that they subscribe and pay liberally to the support of the Church Extension society, and pastors inform us that they are pledged to their people not to introduce special cases for their consideration.

We have no money among ourselves. We are without a church.

We can make no progress until we have some place to call our house. Now is the most favorable time to build a church, for the following reasons: First. Lumber is unusually low, and great bargains can be had for cash. Second. Labor is much cheaper than it has been since the war, and than can be reasonably expected for years to come.

3. Real estate, some of which is most desirable, can be purchased at this time very cheap.

4. The work can be superintended and managed this year, and under present circumstances perhaps better than in the future.

How much do we need? Five thousand dollars would build us a neat chapel sufficient to meet our present wants, and two thousand more for the purchase of a lot of ground.

It would be useless to attempt to do anything with less than this amount, and without it we shall be compelled to abandon the post at least for the present.

If this should meet the eye of the editor in chief or his assistant in their wanderings through the land, they may be constrained to make personal application in our behalf, or some brother who for months passed has been looking for some favorable opportunity to do good with the means with which he has been blessed may say

"EUREKA."

On Education—No. 2.

BY FREDERICK K. HYDE.

There is a lion in the path of universal education, in the shape of the prejudice of the whites, who insist that the colored children shall be instructed in separate schools, or there shall be no State system of common schools; and behind these stand the Southern journals, and a few legislators. The unreasonableness as well as the ruinous effects of these demands is already palpable throughout the South. If, when the ancestors of these same prejudiced white persons were meditating the introduction of slavery into the colonies, had each insisted that the slaves should be of a white skin, or in default of this there should be no slavery at all, the case would be substantially parallel to this. Or if there were a hundred children whose parents were of divers colors in this city, all ignorant of the alphabet, whom it was necessary to teach altogether, but not separately, and these prejudiced journals and citizens were respectively to insist they shall be taught to steal, and no other, while the teaching is going on, or there shall be no teaching and no theft, that case would not be materially diverse from this. In vain does the moral man say to them, "Pray teach them honesty, and then you may teach them to steal;" they will be honest according to law, or not taught at all!

Do they not provoke us to say that their insisting on an impossible, a suicidal condition is but a cloak, a blind, a fetch, and that their real object is to keep the colored people in darkness, to prevent them from refuting the truculent, prejudicial, and vituperative assertions that they are an inferior people? We are truly thankful that we have among us men, white in skin and heart, who manifest a spirit akin to that which to this day deprives thousands of the colored children of the South of any considerable school education whatever.

We think nothing unsusceptible of mathematical demonstration can be clearer than the imperative necessity of universal education as a matter simply of public economy. In this State where school-houses are already erected, and where many persons qualified to teach are maintaining a precarious struggle for subsistence, a system of general education need not cost half so much as that proposed by the proposers of universal education. Every dollar judiciously spent on the education of the white and colored children, in the same school-houses, would be more than saved in the diminution of the annual cost of pauperism and crime, while the industrial capacity of the people would be vastly increased by it.

We do not see how even prejudicial resistance, formidable as it deplorably is, can long resist this consideration among a people so susceptible of improvement.

The colored people have come out of slavery, and can not any longer be governed or treated as chattels. To their own qualities must now be commended the care of their destiny. The Southern people will have to learn the lesson that the well-being of a people must exist by means of the justice, education, and self-government of the individual citizens, irrespective of race or color. The theory of dependence attempts to dispense with the necessity of these qualities in the dependent colored people. But now, when even in position they are becoming less and less dependent, and their minds less and less acquiescent in the degree of dependence which remains, the virtues of independence are those which they stand in need of. These virtues it is still in the power of government and of the higher classes greatly to promote; and they can hardly do anything which does not, by its own effects or those of its example, either assist or impede that object. But whatever advice, exhortation, or guidance is held out to the colored people must henceforth be tendered to them as equals, and accepted with their eyes open. The prospect of the future depends on the degree in which they are treated as rational beings.

As every person has a right to the means of physical life, so he has to means of mental activity. It is unjust to withhold aliment from the mind as it is to deny food to the body. Education should, therefore, be national, universal, gratuitous, and to a certain extent compulsory.

We therefore recommend that schools, colleges, and universities, supported by the State, be gratuitously open to every citizen, and that it be compulsory with all parents to have their children educated in the common branches of learning. That education in its highest branches be equally gratuitous, but optional; that industrial schools be established in which the young may be taught the various trades and professions, thus gradually superseding the system of apprenticeship. More anon.

Respectfully,

FREDERICK K. HYDE.

Intelligence from Our Mission Rooms.

CONSTANTINOPLE.—Rev. Dr. Long writes, June 15: "Rev. I. W. Thombs, of the Southern Illinois Conference, has been spending a few days with us here, and we have enjoyed his company very much. I wish every Methodist preacher and layman who passes through this city would take the trouble to call upon me; they would receive a brother's welcome, would cheer the heart of the missionary, and would carry home with them some new ideas as to the practical part of missionary work. Should any such brethren be starting this way, say to them that my residence is No. 3 Popdji Bashy, Rue Yasidji, Pera Constantinople. Let them make a note of it and give me a call."

MARTIN MISSION INSTITUTE.—The Mission Rooms have received information to the effect that Rev. L. Nippert succeeds Rev. Dr. Jacoby as Director of the Institute. The Board of Managers consists of Brother Mack, from Frankfort; Teem Achard and Edward Foucar, from Friedricksdorf; Jacob Rommel, from Bissengen, (Wurtemburg;) Jean Heber, from Uster, (Switzerland;) L. Nippert, J. F. Hurst, E. Riemenschneider, L. S. Jacoby, E. Gebhardt, H. Nuelsen.

NEW AUXILIARIES.—Every new and improved church edifice is almost or quite equivalent to a new auxiliary to the missionary cause. Our observation has been that the new church, or the renovated sacred edifice, is either the fruit of liberal missionary contributions actually made, or liberal contributions immediately follow. We hail, therefore, the brethren of Grace church, Chicago, and of Centenary church, Binghamton, and anticipate further good news from them.

REV. DR. LONG.—By our latest advices from Bulgaria, under date of July 10, Brother Long had not then heard of the sailing of Brother Wanless to be his future assistant or co-laborer. The doctor expresses much satisfaction with the action and issues of the General Conference.

OUR SUNDAY SCHOOL AUXILIARIES.—The action of the late General Conference, directing that the contributions of the juvenile auxiliaries should hereafter have a separate acknowledgment by our treasurer, and in our statistical tables is taking effect. Some of these societies are already sending forward their monthly receipts, and this is the true policy. It is the true policy, because in more than one instance it has reached us that moneys thus collected had been abstracted from the places where they had been deposited. One of the most singular proceedings of some adult friends is going the rounds, and it is said to be more than a rumor. It is this: A party present on the occasion says he heard a letter read from a foreign missionary to inspire the hearts of the youth to solicit missionary money, and after it was contributed the adult friends (?) of the school appropriated it for the purchase of a library for their own school.

GERMANY.—The following are the appointments of the preachers of the Annual Mission Conference of Germany and Switzerland:

Bremen District, E. Gebhardt, P. E.—Bremen and Buntenthor, E. Gebhardt, E. Gertanner. Vegesack to be supplied. Delmenhorst and Neerstedt, E. Pucklitsch. Bemerhaven, J. Von Oehsen.

Oldenburg District, L. S. Jacoby, P. E.—Oldenburg, Varel, and Brake, H. Gerdes. Edewecht and Westerstede, G. Goss. Aurich, F. Klusner. Hamburg, to be supplied. Flensburg, T. Spille.

East District, C. Achard, P. E.—Berlin, C. Achard. Gransee, to be supplied. Colberg and Greiffenberg, A. Luring, A. Prante. Gossnitz, B. Schroder, two to be supplied. Russdorf, to be supplied. Dertendorf, T. Lochen.

Frankfort-on-the-Main District, L. Nippert, P. E.—Frankfort-on-the Main, L. Nippert, F. Paulus. Homburg, to be supplied. Dillenburg, to be supplied. Heidelberg, A. Sultzberger. Carlsruhe and Pirmasenz, E. Diem. Pforzhelm, T. Schneebeli. Lahr and Elsass, C. Weiss.

F. I. Hurst, First Theological Tutor, F. Paulus, Second Theological Tutor of Martin's Mission Institute.

Wurtemberg District, C. H. Doering, P. E.—Heilbronn, C. H. Doering, T. Brieter, to be supplied. Marbach and Beilstein, F. Harle, to be supplied. Ludwigsberg, A. Rodemeyer, Bietigheim, A. Badecker. Vaihingen to be supplied. Calw, H. Mann. Herrenberg, H. Schlaphof.

Zurich District, H. Nuelson, P. E.—Zurich, H. Nuelson, F. Deppeler. Bulach and Aarau, two to be supplied. Ulster, J. Staiger. Horgen, G. Bruns. Schaffhausen, C. Dietrich. Winterthur, C. Raith. St. Gallen, Tœkenburg and Chur, H. Gisler, to be supplied.

Basel District, E. Riemenschneider, P. E.—Basel, E. Riemenschneider. Liestal, F. Kochli. Biel, G. Hausser. Bern, T. Messmer. Lausanne and Geneva, C. Glattle. Paris, W. Schwarz.

Africa.—We have before us a letter from John Adam Clark, dated at St. Paul's river, New Scotland, Liberia, April 30. This young man is a native of Africa, and through the Missionary Society obtained some knowledge of the art of printing at the Methodist Book Concern. He expresses confidence in the present movements of our Church, and also of the State.

GOOD NEWS FROM CHINA.—Letters received advise us of increasing prosperity in our China mission in the vicinity of Foochow. The success is remarkable; indeed it is marvelous. The work is attested by Divine power. Men and women are converted, and become "new creatures in Christ Jesus," and they attest the reality of their conversions by godly lives and triumphant deaths. Surely the pastors and people will turn again to the support of our foreign work as in former years. We have been holding our foreign work as best we can till our missionary interests at home could be brought to a settled, prosperous state. The time has come when we must give decided support to our foreign work, which is wonderfully prosperous in nearly every foreign mission. These remarks have been occasioned by a letter received at the Mission Rooms, dated Foochow, China, April 20. Brother Maclay says:

"You will rejoice to learn that the work of God in this mission goes forward with increasing power. Brother Lowry and I have just returned from a tour through the southern portion of our mission field. Seventy-one adults and five children were baptized during the trip, and the adults were all received into the church. There is a good prospect of continued prosperity in this part of our work."

THAT THEY MAY WIN SOME.—The Baptists have an "Inland Mission" whose members are doing evangelical work in the interior of China, with a real apostolic spirit and much success. They have adopted the Chinese costume—the better to secure the goodwill of the people, and one of them writes:

"To my mind it is most decidedly the right thing to do. We have left off using plates and knives and forks, and have adopted the Chinese basins and chop-sticks. I thought I should never be able to eat with them at first, but soon became quite an expert in using them. I can not help rejoicing with joy and thankfulness that in every step I have taken toward assuming the dress and customs of this people the Lord has given me a blessing in my own soul. It is so sweet to feel that he accepts it as done to him. I do increasingly feel that the more heartily we can throw ourselves into the habits and customs of those around us, the more we shall experience the Divine blessing."

Letters from the Churches.

Rev. H. Grimes writes from Thibodaux, Louisiana, July 28, 1868:

The quarterly conference passed off well; all was harmonious. We had the largest attendance that I have ever seen since I have been here. We have a large field, and much labor is needed. If we could have churches at two other places in the parish great good might be done. I will do all that I can. We are very poor, and my own family are much troubled about means of living. Do all you can to help me live while I try to do my work. We will get along better in the fall. The general condition of the circuit is good, but having only one church, and many of our people fifteen or twenty miles off, is very discouraging. With houses to worship in we could have two thousand as well as some four hundred members. We have had large accessions this quarter, and more coming all the time. I send report of the conference.

Third Quarterly Conference of Thibodaux Circuit, held in the Centenary Methodist Episcopal Church, Thibodaux, July 25 and 26.

Rev. H. Grimes, preacher in charge, in the chair, assisted by Rev. Wm. Murrell, and Rev. C. Downs; Lewis Benjamin, secretary.

Eight members present; six absent; no complaints; eight members were added; four appointments—Thibodeaux, Labadieville, Raceland, Lockport; total members 399. The increase during the quarter is 71. Two Sunday schools; 150 scholars; in bible class 40; Partor has twice preached to the children, and twice catechized them; he reports 27 baptisms; four marriages; two deaths; one large day school in Thibodaux, and one recently organized at New Hope, below Raceland, with a night school, both in charge of Mr. McAuliffe. The day school has 60 children; the night schools 40 adults: These day schools are greatly in need of books; the teachers are poorly paid. The pastor has received $14 90, and his traveling expenses have been $40. Amount raised for benevolent objects $30; raised to purchase a bell $30; church papers taken, five.

Respectfully submitted,

HENRY GRIMES, P. C.

LETTER FROM BATON ROUGE.

BATON ROUGE, July 27, 1868.

DEAR ADVOCATE:

I ask a space in your columns to inform you of the Sabbath day's journey, July 26. We met in Wesley Chapel in Baton Rouge, to pay the last respects to old Father George Gordon, the first colored ordained Methodist preacher in Baton Rouge, one who has labored very hard in the cause of the Lord: and many have been happily converted to God under the sound of his voice. Old Father George Gordon was one of the old stand Methodists, but like many others he left the old Methodist Church and joined the African Church. A few days before Father Gordon left the world, I went to see him, and it seemed that the Lord had worked with him, and he said to me, my son I am on my way back to the old Mother Church, for I feel when I go there that I am among my people, and if I live to see the end of this year and get my business straight, I am coming back to the Mother Church.

But it pleased the Lord on the thirteenth of July, 1868, to call him from a world of sorrow, and when the old soldier had looked over his passport I think he must have found all things right. He then looked to his wife and children, and said to them: "The last battle is fought; all is well—all is well; my way is clear." Also, young sister Martha Knight. She left the world on the twenty-ninth of June, 1868. When she was going down to Jordan she told her mother the old ship was waiting for her and she must go. And to her sister, "Be sure and meet me in heaven." And she bid the world farewell, and though a wet, muddy, and cloudy day, we had a crowded house. Baptists and others came to pay their last respects to the old father and the young saint. But a very few members of the African Church came to tell the old father good-bye, but I am happy to say that we had the best of attention.

Your brother in Christ.

JAMES HAYWARD.

Religious Items.

1. The Methodist Church is founded upon a sentiment or desire of the soul; not upon an intellectual assent to doctrines or theologies.

2. It has the largest church property and the most church members of any religious organization.

3. It has the largest publishing house in the world, and issues more books and papers than any other.

4. It has a most comprehensive system of Sunday schools, comprising 1,089,525 scholars, and 171,695 teachers.

5. It has a wide missionary system, including our own land and foreign countries; to support which in the last four years it has collected $2,457,548. Here, then, is a great organization, established, at work; active, powerful; which in a degree accepts as its task "to maintain vital apostolic piety in the land, and to spread it over the world."

The Second Adventists have fixed for the second coming of the Savior the second day of October next.

THE SABBATH IN CHICAGO.—In most of our large cities the various forms of iniquity are rampant on the increase. Of the work of Sabbath desecration, a correspondent of The Presbyter writes as follows, adding that "the church seems to have lost all moral influence in the matter:"

We have an exceedingly defiant inauguration of Sabbath-breaking this season. The Turners, with their bands and regalia, marched in procession to the prairie in the morning. Several houses were in full process of building all day quite openly. And to crown the business, the directors of the Northwestern Pacific Railroad started on an excursion over their line in their palace cars, utterly ignoring the Sabbath and the feeble scruples of a large number of Christian ladies and gentlemen, their guests, as they habitually trample on the consciences of their workmen by keeping them at work on the Sabbath, in full view of the hundred churches of Chicago. There are now over 10,000 men at full work every Sabbath here.

Summer revivals are more frequently published than formerly, thus disproving the assertion that revivals do not occur in warm weather. Notwithstanding the mercury stood at 92 degrees in the pulpit of the Winthrop street church, of Boston, Sunday before last, a number of persons were induced to ask an interest in the prayers of the people of God, and six joined the church.

The Red River News informs us that an attempt was made on the fifteenth to get up a Democratic display in Natchitoches. A few colored men were induced to take part in it, but the crowd all told scarcely numbered a hundred and fifty. We clip the following from the News:

A cotemporary charges the Republican party as longing for strife.

Did our neighbor ever read the fable of that quarrelsome lamb that muddied the water flowing from the wolf to him, till in his exasperation the wolf must needs eat him up?

Was it Republicans who destroyed the village of Rayville? Was it Republicans who broke up the printing office of the Homer Iliad? Was it a Republican who shot Mr. Orr before his own door in Madisonville? Was it Republicans who, on Monday night, July 6, went from house to house in the parish of St. Landry, killing and cowhiding and threatening men, women, and babes unborn becoming their victims?

Governor Warmoth, as the exponent of Republican sentiments, declares most emphatically in favor of peace and order, and insists on measures being taken to enforce respect for the laws, and social rights of every person in the community. Do the Republicans repudiate Governor Warmoth's position? Until they do let them not be charged as desirous of strife, but let that responsibility rest upon those who do oppose him.

The French Language.

Attention is invited to our French column of original and selected articles.

They will be continued, provided we receive sufficient encouragement. Contributions in French are invited.

In essentials let there be unity; in non-essentials, harmony; and in all things charity, is a good maxim now and at all times.

The Auditor of State, Hon. G. M. Wickliffe, notwithstanding a previous denial in the columns of the Republican, is still maliciously accused of having attempted to incite a riot on Saturday night last past. Mr. Wickliffe has been a consistent advocate of mild and amicable measures in the conduct of the campaign, and will ever be found mustered in the ranks of the supporters of law and order. On the particular occasion in question Mr. Wickliffe was at least a mile distant from the scene of the disturbance, and this fact—again distinctly announced—should put a quietus upon any further detraction of an efficient and worthy State officer.

The following are the State elections in the order in which they occur:

I was in Washington just before Mr. Chase was nominated as Chief Justice, and at Mr. Lincoln's request, called at the White House. "Here I am," said Mr. Lincoln, "surrounded by documents relating to the vacancy on the Supreme Bench, and requests to appoint Mr. Chase. Mr. Chase is a man of ability; as a public officer, of marked fidelity; as a politician, ambitious; on the subject of the Presidency, a little insane. He has said things of me which has sent discord where there should be harmony, but a man in my position should not harbor resentment, and I shall appoint him."

Department Staff.—The following officers are announced as temporarily constituting the staff of the General commanding the Department of Louisiana:

Captain I. D. DeRussy, First Infantry, Aid-de-Camp.
Captain George Baldey, Thirty-ninth Infantry, Aid-de-Camp.
Brevet Brigadier General Thomas H. Neill, Major Twentieth Infantry, Acting Assistant Adjutant General.
Brevet First Lieutenant Nathaniel Burbank, Second Lieutenant, Thirty-seventh Infantry, Acting Assistant Adjutant General.
Brevet Lieutenant Colonel G. N. Lieber, Major, United States army, Judge Advocate.
Brevet Major B. B. Keeler, Captain, Thirty-ninth Infantry, Assistant Judge Advocate.
Brevet Brigadier General C. H. Tompkins, Lieutenant Colonel, Deputy Quartermaster General, United States army, Chief Quartermaster.
Brevet Major General A. Beckwith, Major and Commissary of Subsistence, United States army, Chief Commissary.
Brevet Lieutenant Colonel J. B. Randolph, Surgeon, United States army, Medical Director.
Captain Egon A. Koerper, Assistant Surgeon, United States army, Attending Surgeon.
Colonel Daniel McClure, Assistant Paymaster General, United States army, Chief Paymaster.
First Lieutenant William Hoelcke, Thirty-ninth Infantry, in charge of Engineer office.
Major J. W. Todd, Ordnance Department, United States army, Chief of Ordnance.
Brevet Captain P. H. Moroney, First Lieutenant, United States army (retired), Commissary of Musters.

A. J. Strecter, of St. Paul, Minnesota, appeared on the streets of Hartford, Connecticut, the other day, with a carriage and pair of horses which had, in seven weeks, brought him from St. Paul. He appeared as fresh as when he started on the trip, but the horses showed the effect of their 1500 miles journey.

The Bishop of Rome.

We gladly welcome every help to the cause of truth, for it is wise in the day of battle to refuse no auxiliary who can harm the enemy; still we differ from many of our brethren in regard to the best means of carrying on the contest with Rome, the anti-Christ of the New Testament. Nothing is gained by attacking Popish errors in detail; every truth is best served by bold appeals, like that of Paul—"Ye are saved by faith." A noxious or useless tree is not destroyed by trimming off its branches, but by laying the ax to its root.

Napoleon hurled his forces against the enemy's centre, and won an empire. Papists wisely ignore the boasts and differences of Protestants. They boldly proclaim, "We are the church," and "this is the rock."

Hoary with age and sacred with associations—many of them precious to our common Christianity—Popery intimidates the reason and imposes upon the imagination, by the mere force of its pretensions. We scatter our fire, weary ourselves with questions of comparatively little moment, and about errors whose counterpart, more or less modified, may be found among ourselves.

The Romish doctrines of purgatory, auricular confession, prayers for the dead, invocation of saints, baptismal regeneration, sacramental efficacy, and other unscriptural views, are held by individual Protestants, and some of them taught by their clergy. In these respects we have to fight enemies within as well as without. The Devil laughs at creeds when it is a question of obscuring or corrupting truth and destroying souls.

John Wesley was once applied to by his preachers in Ireland for advice how to meet the priests. Said he, "Live holier lives and save more souls." Our strength will be wasted—certainly in the South, among hereditary Papists, mostly frivolous and unlettered, often careless of their own usages—by exciting their prejudices, abusing their sacred things, and degrading their ancestors and religious teachers. They can sagely retaliate; for there's a skeleton in every house, and the consequence of such a contest usually will be more obdurate error, or still worse, bold infidelity.

The proper line of argument is against the assumptions of the Roman Bishop to pre-eminence among his peers. The argument against this heresy is so plain, so easy of demonstration from sacred and profane history, from reason and the spirit of the Christian system, that few logical, pure-minded men could long resist the conclusion.

What right has Mastai Ferreti to claim such an official superiority over his brethren, the other pastors of the Church of God? We challenge him to the proof. There is one chief Shepherd and Bishop, even Jesus. He is our Pontifex Maximus, the only mediator between God and man.

This proud bishop has no scriptural warrant, no "Thus saith the Lord," for his claim. It has never been admitted by the Catholic Church—never has it received the assent of Christendom. We spurn and denounce his imperious demand to dominate God's heritage, and subjugate all lands, all pastors, all consciences: to be a spiritual, a temporal, and a universal sovereign.

Let those submit who will: but let it be a free choice: we will not be brought into bondage. As Paul of old withstood the ancient Peter to his face, so do we his pretended successor.

When the Bishops of Rome sent out their itinerants to distant regions, they often found established Christian churches, enjoying the sacraments, possessing the scriptures, and having their own properly appointed bishops and pastors; but Rome was a political church, her chief minister sat upon the throne, and wore the purple of the Cesars. She had lost the right to boast "My kingdom is not of this world."

Uniformity was enforced by the sword, the faggot, and the rack; conscience was enslaved and reason ignored to secure such a church union as was never taught by the blessed founder of Christianity or his early disciples.

Rev. Dr. Ross, in an excellent article on Ireland, in a late Christian Advocate, says:

St. Patrick was never a Roman Catholic, nor were any of his successors in the prosecution of the brilliant series of evangelistic labors he inaugurated. There is, indeed, a papal tradition that after beginning his work in Ireland he made a journey to Rome in order to receive full powers and consecration to his office from the Roman Bishop; but this is in all probability one of the fabulous legends of the later monks. For in his "Confession" he makes no allusion to any such journey; in his work he gave no indications of any submission to or consultation of the authority of the Romish See; and the whole animus of the early Irish Church was hostile to the chief trusts of the papal power. "It inculcated no adoration of relics and images; no pilgrimages; no auricular confessions, penances, or absolutions; no mass; no work of supererogation; no adoration of the Virgin Mary; no baptismal regeneration." These facts savor not of subjection to Rome.

Patrick went to Ireland about the year 440, its divinely-called and divinely-fitted apostle. He established missionary schools for the education of the people, and for the training of native ministers and missionaries. From one of them went forth the two best-known successors of Patrick, Columba and Columbanus.

Columba's mission was to the Northern Picts of Scotland, and began in 563. This was more than thirteen hundred years ago, and a whole generation before Gregory the Great matured his plan for the conversion of the Anglo-Saxons.

About the year 590 Columbanus, a pupil in the monastery founded by Patrick at Bangor, feeling within him "that fire which our Saviour says he came to kindle on the earth," took with him twelve of his fellows and went on a mission to France. They established themselves among the pagans of Burgundy, and founded three schools primarily for the instruction of the natives in letters and religion; but, like the institution in which they had themselves been trained, these became schools of the prophets. Such movements could not fail to fix the eye of Rome; but that they were independent of her authority is sufficiently manifest. Columbanus had controversies with two of the Popes. He wrote to Gregory the Great that he ought not to be determined by any deference to the authority of his predecessor, Leo the Great "for perhaps a living dog might be better than a dead lion." He looked for guidance not to Boniface IV., nor to Mary, but to her Son and Lord. He writes: "My Jesus, I pray thee give thy light to my lamp, that in its light the most holy place may be revealed to me, in which thou dwellest as the Eternal Priest, that I may always behold thee, desire thee, look upon thee in love, and long after thee."

Of the Waldenses Dr. Allix tells us, "For three hundred years or more the Bishops of Rome attempted to subjugate the Church of Milan under their jurisdiction, and at last the influence of Rome became too potent for the Church of Milan planted by one of the disciples; insomuch that the Bishop and people, rather than own their jurisdiction, retired to the valleys of Lacome and Augrogue, and thence were called Vallenses or people of the valley."

In their valleys and mountains they have ever since been the subjects of fierce persecution, but at this day they number about thirty thousand.

The Greek and other Eastern Churches from the earliest ages united in protesting against the claims of the Roman Church.

We might pursue the argument further, for history is full of the materials.

Thank God the world moves: religious freedom now prevails almost throughout Christiandom: Rome and Spain are the blemishes on this fair picture; princes and people no longer tremble at a papal menace or shudder to be called heretic.

Yes the world moves, for God is moving it on, and we rejoice that down here in this nineteenth century, on the free soil of America, we can measure arms with her fairly. With her united as brethren—to war against sin and wrong everywhere; or otherwise against and in spite of her, to win souls to Christ and a purer faith.

Let Roman Catholics know that we are protestants against Romish errors and assumptions, but not against the Roman Church; her ecclesiastical organization is just as legitimate as that of the Church of England, the Greek Church, the Baptist, or the Methodist. It has the same right to propagate itself; and we welcome Pope, priest, and Jesuit to an honest contest under the protection of our country's just laws, for the pre-eminence, the honor of being "The church of the future."

We have no fears for the result; no Roman legion is here to awe us: no pontifical spies to dog us; no Papal bull to fright us, no inquisition to immure and torture us. Thousands of its own communion will unite with us in this rejoicing.

The world for Christ is our motto, holiness our aim, the Bible our creed. If Methodism is really what the eloquent Chalmers called it, "Christianity in earnest," let its grit be shown now, for we are entering upon no child's play: Rome means success. If we unwisely go into the camp of Saul, gird ourselves with his cumbrous armor and weapons, the battle is lost; let us rather take the Gospel pebble from the pure brook of truth, in the name of Israel's God, and Dagon's champion will fall forever.

Monster Camp Meeting—Holiness to the Lord.

The Methodist of July 25 has a letter from Manheim, Pennsylvania, concerning the opening of the great national gathering of Methodist hosts in that place: "On Wednesday nearly five hundred tents were erected, and two hundred ministers in attendance. The company kept increasing day by day. Bishop Simpson and his family were on the ground from the first. The particular feature, perhaps, is the general quiet which prevails, and the one idea of the meeting to 'work for God.' Here are representatives from Illinois, Indiana, Michigan, Kentucky, North and South Carolina, Maryland, Delaware, and all the Middle and Eastern States, eager for opportunity to declare what God has done for them, mostly relating a definite experience of holiness. It is to be maintained for two successive weeks." May it be as greatly blessed to the churches as was the Vineland meeting of last year, and more abundantly; a baptism of the spirit of holiness is what the church and nation especially need at this juncture.

The Western Christian Advocate of the twenty-ninth says of the same camp meeting:

The great national camp meeting for the promotion of holiness commenced at Manheim, not far from Lancaster, Pennsylvania, Tuesday, July 14. There was a great outpouring of the people from the various points of the compass, various denominations besides the Methodist Episcopal being represented. Rev. E. Hughes, in a note descriptive of the grounds, says:

The ground is, I think, without exception the finest I have seen for an encampment. The timber is large, and the shade is ample. A very large circle has been laid out, and the tent sites are being rapidly taken up. Bishop Simpson's tent is at the corner of "Asbury avenue," a locality of thrilling interest, rich in Methodist memories. I saw at the head of the ground "Wesley avenue," in memory of our immortal founder; "Fletcher," and "Hedding" and "Hamline" and "Abbott" and "Lybrand" kept in memory. The ground is away from the tumult of large cities, amid rural quiet and beauty—just such a spot as may well be regarded favorable for the contemplation and the cultivation of the beauties of holiness.

The meeting was attended daily by some eight or ten thousand persons, among the number two hundred ministers. Brothers Dubois and Graveson, of this city, who attended, report that the attendance on Sabbath was over twenty thousand. The meeting was remarkable for its good order and its profound and all-pervading religious spirit.

"The Manheim camp meeting has recently closed, and was crowned with success. The arrangements for the meeting were very complete, except the supply of water. On Sunday the wells measurably failed. The tents were elegant, and numbered between five and six hundred. The religious interest was deep and general. Conversions numbered two hundred or more. The congregation on Sunday is reported at ten to fifteen thousand. The design and success of this meeting suggest that as part of a systematic effort to awaken and maintain a deep spiritual life in the church, it has a significance far beyond the immediate results. The extraordinary growth of Methodism in numbers, wealth, and position has justly excited concern, and awakened fears as to whether or not she would meet her present and future responsibilities. She may become like Gideon's host—too many for the Lord. Strength is not in numbers, wealth, position, or intelligence: but life in Christ is the strength of the church, collectively, as well as the individual member. Let it be written on her gates, "Holiness to the Lord," as the prophet saw it written on the "bridles of the horses." Write on the altars, "Our sufficiency of God," and on her walls, "Not by might, nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord." The church must look as much to garrison as to conquest, and without it conquest is of little use.

Methodism holds the moral and political destiny of this country! This is not a boast, but the recognition of a truth of awful magnitude; it is shuddering to contemplate it in view of possible failure to meet the demand. What can atone for a division in our ranks, unless indeed the storms incident to, and producing divisions shall tend to purify the body? But truth can sanctify the many as well as the few, as the sun in heaven gives light to all worlds as well as to the atom. All good men should labor for the union of every branch of the Methodist family, and as earnestly pray for her purification wherever it is needed. There is to be a contest on this continent, as terrible as has ever been waged between truth and error, a contest, the violence of which compared with all preceding ones is as the zephyr to the whirlwind. The blood-dripping wings of the apocalyptic dragon are spreading over this continent, and preparations are being made for a carnival occasioned by the proposed prostration of divine truth, as sumptuous as that to which the nations were called when Magog bowed to the stroke of heaven's vengeance. Blessed are they in Church and State who are found watching!

Wesleyan University, Middletown, Connecticut.

It was stated at the recent commencement of this institution, that Isaac Rich, of Boston, and Daniel Drew, of New York, had each increased their former gifts to $100,000, by which the success of the university is now secured.

The library at the present time contains upwards of eighteen thousand volumes. In the cabinets are 80,000 specimens of shells, 650 of birds, nearly all foreign, and about 1000 coins, with several fine portraits.

Never was the university in a more flourishing condition, and with an increased annual income of over $8000, which will make in all about $20,000, it commences a new era in its history.

The Fourteenth Constitutional Amendment.

Mr. Seward, our Secretary of State, has made the usual official proclamation of the adoption of the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution of the United States. The Legislatures of twenty-three of the loyal States and of six of the lately rebel States—namely, Arkansas, Florida, North Carolina, Louisiana, South Carolina, and Alabama—making twenty-nine States in all—have concurred in the ratification. The whole number of States being thirty-seven, the necessary three-fourths is twenty-eight, or one less than the actual number of States consenting to the amendment. Doubt is expressed by Mr. Seward whether the ratifications of New Jersey and Ohio are valid, their last Legislatures having voted against the amendment. The question will, however, be practically settled by the admission of another Southern State, which will give twent-eight States, without counting New Jersey or Ohio. Most probably an early ratification by the Legislature of Georgia will complete the required number.

The amendment makes all persons born or naturalized in the country citizens of the United States, and of the State wherein they reside, and forbids the States to pass any laws abridging the civil rights of such citizens, or depriving them of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law. It also enacts that if the right to vote is denied to any male citizens over twenty-one years of age, these excluded persons shall not be counted in forming the basis of representation. It affirms, moreover, the validity of the public debt, and forbids the assumption of the rebel public debt by any State, or the United States. It is a most important and necessary amendment of our organic law.

Both Houses of Congress have declared the amendment adopted.

Personal.

Bishop Morris, the venerable senior Bishop, was at the recent session of the Erie Conference, held at Warren, Ohio. He was at the first session of the Erie Conference, and was now presented to the body by Bishop Kingsley. He said:

I have been at many intervening sessions. They do not allow me to preach any more, but I will not complain. I was licensed in 1814; have had my day of toil, and yield my place to others. I feel like an old hulk laid on the dry dock. Yet I am happy, and do not propose to cross "the river" till I come to it. I shall trust in God and abide my time.

At the request of the Conference, the venerable Bishop sang that beautiful hymn commencing,

"My latest sun is sinking fast."

His voice was low and tremulous, but the holy cadence of his tones reached every heart, and as he pronounced the words,

"O, bear me away on your snowy wings," the eyes of many, both old and young, were suffused with tears, and hearty amens went up from every part of the the house, and all felt that it was good to be there.

Dr. Haven, editor of Zion's Herald, has declined the offered chair in the editorial department of the Independent at a salary of $6000 a year. We are glad his pen is not to be lost to the Church by going into the service of an outside paper.

Rev. and General Jesse Hale Moore, presiding elder of Decatur district, Illinois, and late delegate to the General Conference, has been nominated to the House of Congress in the seventh Illinois district.

Rev. Dr. Nast was present at the funeral services of Dr. Poe at Ashland, Ohio, and made a touching address. It is pretty well known that Dr. Poe had been the instrument of Dr. Nast's conversion, and of introducing him into the itinerant ministry, and, therefore, as the Western says, of inaugurating the missionary movement among the Germans.

Rev. Newman Hall, of Surrey Chapel, London, is being eagerly sought to become pastor of the First Presbyterian church, Chicago, as successor to Rev. Z. M. Humphrey, recently removed to the Calvary church, Philadelphia. The Advance says he was offered a good house, rent free, and a salary of $10,000 a year, payable in gold.

This is the church which endeavored recently to secure for its pastor Rev. Dr. Newman, editor of this paper.

Mr. Frederick K. Hyde's excellent letters in the Advocate on temperance are being republished in the Northern Independent, a deserved compliment to our able contributor,

Ministers' Institute.

A letter from Chicago, published in the Watchman and Reflector, gives an account of a course of lectures to ministers, recently delivered in the University of that city—a most desirable and novel affair, well worthy of introduction elsewhere, and to be made permanent. The writer says:

On Friday morning we stepped into a street car (the Cottage Grove line) to visit the University buildings, three miles from the centre of Chicago, on the lake shore, or near it. The college chapel was now filled with ministers from all parts of the State, and also from neighboring States, especially Michigan, busy with notebooks and pencils, listening to one of a course of twenty-four lectures, the programme embracing eight days—three lectures a day. For most of these accommodations were provided in the rooms of the University, now vacated by the students; and so, participating in the hospitalities and socialities of the dining hall as well as the lecture room, more than two hundred ministers have lived together for successive days as a band of fellow students, hearing, discussing, and concentrating their attention upon the chief themes, theoretical and practical, relating to their work.

What a spectacle! profoundly interesting and hopeful. Our first glance at that assembly suggested the thought that they were men of strength, physically as well as intellectually and spiritually. There were no dyspeptics there, apparently; they were all men of healthy nerve and fibre: as we said to one of the sturdy sons of New England who had "expanded" in Wisconsin, that they all seemed to have lived on the very "finest of the wheat," and to have been highly appreciative of the exhiliarating qualities of unadulterated water. Many of them were graduates of colleges in the Eastern and Middle States; and those who had never thus graduated anywhere were self-made men, so to speak, comparatively; they were mostly in the prime of life, ranging from twenty-five to forty-five years of age; they were men in earnest, all alive to the great questions of the day and the hour, estimating the worth of the lectures, in a great degree, by their relative bearing on the issues of the times. Evidently they enjoyed every moment of this novel kind of a vacation. Yet this werd vacation is hardly applicable to the case; for many availed themselves of the railroads to go to their homes on Saturday and return on Monday morning, after a Sunday's work.

At the two hours intervals between the lectures it was well worth one's while to notice the groups gathered beneath the old trees on the college grounds, discussing the subjects of those lectures and their various incidental suggestions. In these off-hand discussions the lecturers themselves would participate as opportunity offered, and would, here and there, be called upon for "additional light" in regard to any position that was questionable, or of which the grounds had not been thoroughly settled. Throughout the session the evening hours were assigned to devotional exercises and conferences of a practical character touching the methods of working, such, for instance—as imparting life to a prayer meeting, developing the resources of a church, and other matters in that line of direction. These free gatherings, these hearty, earnest discussions, all bearing upon life-work achievement, were an important feature of this collegiate reunion, the like of which for magnitude, power, and effectiveness could never have been witnessed at any former period of this nation's history.

Lay Delegation.

At the last session of the Erie Conference, held by Bishop Kingsley, the following action was had on lay delegation:

The report on lay delegation was adopted with singular unanimity. Dr. Kingsley, one of the ablest men of the Conference, remarked that hitherto he had been opposed to lay delegation, but he had been converted, and was in favor of it henceforth, and hoped that it would prevail.

LAY DELEGATION.

Whereas, Great changes have taken place in the magnitude and importance of the work to be done by the Methodist Episcopal Church in the evangelization of the world since its organization; and

Whereas, We recognize the time as fully come when the laymen of the church should come forward and express their desire and willingness to assume the obligations and responsibilities of a position in the legislative councils of the church; therefore,

1. Resolved, That in the judgment of this Conference the action of the last General Conference was commendatory of the principle of lay representation, and that we are highly gratified that the subject was recommended to the godly consideration of the membership of the Church.

2. Resolved, That we, as members of the Conference, pledge ourselves to explain to the membership of our respective charges the nature of the General Conference action, and recommend them to procure and read the discussions and productions of the ablest men in our charge, in order that they may be prepared to vote intelligently thereon.

2. Resolved, That we will, in accordance with the recommendation of the General Conference, use our best endeavors to secure a full and impartial vote upon the question during the month of June, 1869.

4. Resolved, That inasmuch as the General Conference made it the duty of the quarterly conference to appoint tellers for the intended vote, we respectfully request the presiding elders to see that this is attended to in all their charges.

The Rocky Mountain Trip.

Our readers will be pleased to see republished the following gem from Dr. Newman's account of the Methodist Preachers excursion to the Rocky Mountains. We clip it from the Church Union of July 18. On our first page will be found some more results of Rocky Mountain inspiration in the shape of two pieces of excellent poetry by Abbie J. Shaw:

Mr. Newman, of the New Orleans Advocate, writes a glowing account of the trip to the Rocky Mountains. He thinks the company of forty-four enjoyed themselves about as fully as it is possible for mortals in this world to enjoy themselves, and that the trip to the Rocky Mountains, of all the pleasure trips that can be taken, is the greatest and best. Here are a few lines:

"Entering an elegant car, we gradually ascend from Omaha, which is 967 feet above tide-water, to Sherman, the summit of the Black Hills, which is 8262 feet above the level of the sea. From Omaha to Cheyenne, the base of the Black Hills, and a distance of 517 miles, the average ascent is ten feet to the mile, and to the summit of Black Hills, thirty-one and a half miles beyond, and the highest point on the line, it is a fraction more than seventy-one feet to the mile, which is not so great as the grades on some of our Eastern roads. Leaving the initial city the traveler is soon in the great Platte Valley, six hundred miles east and west, and forty miles from the low, rolling hills on the north to the opposite and almost similar range on the south. From its eternal fountains in the Rocky Mountains, and through its southern and northern branches, the Platte river, broad and shallow, flows through this noble valley into the broad Missouri. Its refreshing waters are in sight from Fremont to O'Fallon's on its north branch, and to Julesburg on its southern branch, a distance of three hundred and thirty miles. At North Platte Station the road crosses this noble river over a bridge three thousand feet long."

He concludes with this sentence:

"Without extravagance of rhetoric, or irreverence of expression, we unhesitatingly assert that the Union Pacific Railroad is the grandest missionary enterprise of the nineteenth century."

Le Protestantisme en France Connu Sous le Nom de Methodisme.

Les rapports de la réunion annuelle du Protestantisme en France contiennent les renseignements suivants. Ces rapports sont datés du vingt Juin dernier.

Cependant ses jeunes ministres ne sont pas encore exemptés du service militaire. Quelques unes des chapelles Méthodistes ont été mises sur le même pied que les églises nationales; par example, la dispensation des impots fonciers, etc.

Les ministres desservants des églises locales sont: Révérend E. F. Cook, Rev. J. P. Cook. L'un de ces messieurs est pour Paris, l'autre pour Nismes.

Note Particubiere.—Le Méthodisme a toujours été la religion réformée de France. On peut s'en assurer par les faits nombreux manifestés dans les guerres que le Papisme a suscités contre les frères unis en Jésus Christ.

L'auteur de cette note possède des documents de famille, établissant que dès l'année 1550 deux ministres du saint Evangile prêchaient à Nismes le Méthodisme, tel qu'on le prêche aujourd'hui en Angleterre, aux Etats Etats Unis, et ailleurs. Ces ministres étaient Sire Jean Manuel et Messire Daniel Manuel, dont la famille a subi toutes les fureurs de l'église Romaine pendant l'inquisition.

Ce qui n'est pas moins remarquable c'est que ces deux martyrs de la foi, descendaient eux-mêmes de l'illustre maison de Navarre et des meilleures tiges de l'Espagne. Ils étaient tous deux maitres d'une loge Maçonnique. Dans l'une de leurs maisons est aujourd'hui située l'évêché de Nismes: dans l'autre demeure un petit fils de Pierre de Chazelles, accusateur public devant les commissions sanguinaires, nommées par Louis XIV, et par son infâme successeur, pour exterminer les Méthodistes, sans forme ni figure de procès.

Ces biens, ainsi que plusieurs autres ayant appartenus à cette illustre famille, furent confisqués sur la requête du susdit Pierre de Chazelles et de ses semblables, et mis en ferme pour le Roi entre les mains de l'église Romaine. Ils furent revendiqués en 1790, 1793, 1836, 1843 et années suivantes, par le dernier représentant des Manuel.

Notices of Periodicals.

The Ladies' Repository for August has two beautiful steel engravings: "The Cincinnatti Wesleyan Female College," and a pretty rural sketch, "Children making Garlands." Articles on "Ancient Thebes and Pompeii" are deeply interesting. Strange way marks in time's journey are these old ruins, one city 1800, the other more than 3000 years back in the dim distance; the "Church of the Future" from the Galaxy, judiciously condensed; "Michael Angelo;" "Home;" "Some Good Thoughts on the Pulpit;" "Adulteration of food to scare us from coffee, tea, beer, bread, butter, etc.;" "The Scandinavians in Greenland;" Education of Girls;" "Much Good Reading for the Children;" "Stray Thoughts," and "Monthly Record," full of valuable matter. It is an excellent family magazine. Terms, $3 50 a year.

Our Schoolday Visitor for August, by Doughaday & Co., Philadelphia, has many charming stories for children, plenty of pictures, and a good piece of music called "Make Yourself at Home." Price $1 25 a year.

The Nursery for August, by John L. Shorey, Boston, Massachusetts, $1 50 a year, a beautiful child's magazine, large type, home pictures, and pretty stories. Your eight and ten-year old darlings would be delighted with it.

The United States Musical Review, by J. L. Peters, New York, postoffice box 5429, $2 a year. The August number contains "Songs of Scotland;" "The Bobolink:" Clara Schuman," a criticism; "Our Church Choir," a capital piece on the musical troubles of a country parson; "Congregational Singing;" "Handel;" "Reviews of Music," and four new pieces: "Waiting in the Twilight:" "The Last Sweet Smile;" "Grant's Gallop," very appropriate as the general is said to be a fine equestrian, and "Seymour's March." We are always glad to see the Review.

American Agriculturist, by Orange Judd & Co., New York, $1 50 a year, an old and valued periodical for farm and house use. The August number is well illustrated, and contains the usual amount of excellent reading. We notice a good article on work horses, one on stacking hay, grape vines, strawberries, etc.

Northwestern Farmer, by T. A. Bland, Indianapolis, $1 50 a year. The August number is before us. Contents: "Does Farming Pay?" "Machinery," "Fish Raising," "Feeding Farm Hands," "Professor Taylor, Our New Partner," "Newspapers in Schools. "Others, beside farmers will find it to their interest to read this useful magazine.

Harper's Bazar, of August 1 and 8, beautiful as ever. Illustrations of August 1: "Sweet Summer Time," "Long and Short of It," fashion and small cuts, articles on manners, on toilet, dress, etc. Of the 8th: "The Queen's Garden Party," "Bathing and Other Costumes," and comical illustrations, with articles on crinoline, dress goods, "Serials of Sacristans Household and Household Angel, and other pieces.

Harper's Weekly, August 1 and 8, more than usually illustrated: "Boy and Dog," "Water Sports," "British Lion," "Rush for the Country, etc.," excellent political articles, "Democratic Policy," "Electoral Votes," "Lost Cause;" others on German treaty, "Fall Trade," "Fishermen of Boulogne and Wolf Hunting." A very rich and handsome issue of the 8th. Illustrations of the "Flood in Maryland," "Fourth Ward in New York," and "The Wickedest Man in New York." "Article on Physical Force in the Election," "Recess of Congress," another phase of the "Wickedest Man:" he abuses Mr. Dyer: "Woman's Justice." "Last of the Moonstone," "Interesting Description of a Lobster Factory, etc." More than usually interesting.

How Will the Women Vote?

During the discussions of the late General Conference on the subject of lay delegation, a motion was made to permit the women to vote on this question. Every one who reads the Central knows that we are in favor of allowing women to vote on every question. The proposition was made undoubtedly with the intention to defeat lay delegation, but the friends of the measure are generally progressive men, and enough of them voted for the motion to carry it, and now we give notice that the friends of women and of progress will insist that women shall have hereafter perfect equality with men in everything pertaining to the government of congregations. Having given them the right to vote in one case we intend to give the right to vote in all as soon as we can. That will be one result, and the other we believe will be that the women will vote for lay delegation almost unanimously. Why it was supposed they would vote against it we do not know. We have never yet heard a woman talk against it, and we have taken some pains since the General Conference to find out what is the sentiment upon this subject, and the general feeling is that our women will vote for this generous reform. They are intelligent, sagacious, and progressive. They must see that this cause is essential to the full development of the Church, that the more intimate blending of ministerial lay agency in the councils and work of Christ will be of immense advantage to the Church. We asked an excellent minister and member of one of our Western conferences and a presiding elder, what proportion of the women of his acquaintance would vote for lay delegation. He said, "Every one of them in my district, and in my conference, I think, will vote for lay delegation."

This privilege so unexpectedly extended to women will not result in the defeat of progress. The women of the Church will nobly respond to the expectations of the majority of the General Conference and approve the great measure "commended to their godly judgment." — Central Christian Advocate.

Help Coming.

The Charleston Advocate tells us of a flying visit made by Rev. Dr. Lanahan, of the New York Book Concern, to look after the interests of that paper. We would gladly have one of the angels of our Book Concern fly this way on such an errand, and can promise not so hot a reception as Brother Lewis gave his friend:

Rev. Dr. Lanahan, of the New York Book Concern, was on a flying visit to Charleston the present week. He made his appearance at our office on the fifteenth instant, covered with the dust of a hard siege of travel from New York here by cars, looking like what he is, a stirring working man. He found us frying in the heat of the "Sunny South," with the thermometer at nearly a hundred, and could not say that we did not give him a warm reception. The object of his visit was to look after the interests of the Charleston Advocate, which is greatly needing the attentions which our Book Concern at New York know so well how to bestow. We trust it will be seen by our readers in due time that this official visit of Dr. Lanahan was not in vain.

Judge R. K. Howell.

The numerous friends of this able jurist and Christian gentleman will rejoice at the removal of his disabilities by Congress, and his appointment by Governor Warmoth as one of the Associate Justices of the Supreme Court.

Information Wanted.

By Miss Adeline Gordon, about her sister, Milly Gordon, and her mother, Mahalia Gordon. When last heard of they lived in Missouri.

Address Mrs. Adeline Williams, care of Rev. Henry Green, Winans Chapel, New Orleans, Louisiana.

Frank Blair at Omaha.

Frank P. Blair, Jr., Copperhead candidate for Vice-President, made a speech at Omaha on the sixteenth, in which he said that the Republican party had "put under foot all the people of our (white) race in ten of the Southern States; they have bound a million of people to the earth with their bayonets, and they have put on the top of them this hideous black barbarism; and, my fellow-citizens, feeling that they have lost the confidence of the white race, both North and South, they propose to overcome the charges cast against them at the North in the free States during the last year, by the minority of the South, whom they have made supreme over the white race there, and the question comes up for your decision—for the decision of the whole people of this country—will you permit a minority in both sections to govern the white race? That race, my fellow-citizens, that glorious race of people whose history is the record of intellectual progress among mankind, the only race that have ever shown themselves capable of establishing and maintaining free government. (A voice, "The Blair family, I suppose.") The Blair family will be found on the side of the white race. The Blair family can never be deterred from taking that stand by any man who wishes to assail the fair white race of this country by a mixture with the blacks. My fellow citizens, it is not my intention to detain you by any lengthened remarks. (Cries of "Go on.") I knew very well that what I had to say would not please a certain set of people, and I will say further that I did not intend to please them. If any one is displeased that we, the Democrats, intend to restore the government and the Constitution, they may make their decrees now, for I tell you that after November you will not be able to hear one of them speak."

Blair is still on his high horse; but he will come down in November, when the votes are counted and the Blair family slide into oblivion, never more to vex political parties.

A Genuine Carpet-Bagger.

We copy this from the Portland (Maine) Press:

Speaking of carpet-baggers, what about James Mann, of Gorham, Maine, who goes into Congress as a Democrat from the New Orleans Congressional District? Does he not own a house in Gorham? Does not his family reside there? And finally, what are his qualifications for the position to which rebels have elected him? How will he compare in ability and integrity with Prince, Miller, and other Maine men upon whom the Unionists of the South have conferred official positions? We notice that the happily unconscious Biddeford Democrat fell into a curious statement in its last issue. It spoke of Boyden, the venerable member from North Carolina, as a "carpet-bagger." He is a Democrat! The Democrat acknowledges that there are Democratic carpet-baggers, and what becomes of its thunder?

Ex-Governor Brown, of Georgia, is charged with being the founder of Andersonville prison. He had nothing whatever to do with the Andersonville prison. The place was selected and the tortures and starvation of that Golgotha were devised and superintended by the rebel General Winder, who was sent from Richmond by Jeff Davis for that purpose. At that time Governor Brown, in consequence of his opposition to Davis's tyrannical and centralizing policy, had become so odious to the Richmond authorities that he was neither consulted with nor permitted to have any voice in what was done by the rebel government even in Georgia.

"Tain't de white nor yet the black folks what hab de most influence in dis worl', but de yeller boys," said old Aunt Chloe, as she jingled a few gold coins that had come down from a former generation.

The proportion of officers to men is, in the British army, one officer to twenty-eight men; French army, one officer, thirty-three men; Austrian army, one officer to forty men; Prussian army, one officer to forty-nine men.

Troubles of a Colored Democrat.

ROOM CLOSED AND GAS EXTINGUISHED.

Appearance Before the Recorder.

THE RECORDER MAKES AN ADDRESS.

Escort of the Orator to Canal Street.

THREATENINGS OF AN ANGRY POPULACE.

Governor Warmoth Calms the People.

HIS SPEECH ENTHUSIASTICALLY CHEERED.

It seems from what can be learned that Rollins, the colored orator, attempted to make a Democratic speech in private rooms over a restaurant at the corner of Customhouse and Marais streets, but it not being agreeable to the proprietors of the establishment the latter extinguished the lights and closed up his house. Having no rooms to speak in or from, Rollins made his way up to the Baronne street cars, followed out of curiosity by a few colored men, who made no hostile demonstrations against him, though they did not coincide with his political views.

What followed was related by Corporal Sullivan when Rollins was arraigned before Recorder Becker yesterday on the charge of carrying concealed weapons, "to-wit: a large pistol." This is Sullivan's testimony.

Was standing on Baronne, between Julia and Girod streets, about 9:30 o'clock Saturday night; heard a crowd of persons calling out to stop that car; officer King and I ran into the street and stopped the car; Rollins jumped from the car and ran up Baronne street to Julia; there was a crowd of people, both black and white, calling out "Stop that man—catch that man;" we ran after him; when about half way between Julia and St. Joseph streets accused turned and said: "The first son of a b—h that comes near me I will kill him;" witness then approached him and put his hand on prisoner; asked accused if he had a pistol; he answered that he had one in his pocket; the crowd followed the prisoner, shouting "Stop him!" The crowd appeared excited; some of them had canes.

Officer King's evidence was about the same in substance.

The charge made was carrying a concealed weapon, and the pistol was found on accused, yet Recorder Becker discharged Rollins, and the pistol was returned to him. On discharging the prisoner Recorder Becker addressed him as follows:

"I am a Republican. No man in Louisiana is a better one. You are trying to be a Democrat. You might as well try to make yourself white by rubbing on yourself a coat of whitewash. It would run off in the rain in five minutes. You are a Republican in heart. But you have a right to express such opinions as you choose. You have called Governor Warmoth a thief; you have called the Recorder of the First District a scalawag. No matter for that. I discharge you."

Saturday night, at the time Rollins was searched in the Central Stationhouse, the pistol taken off him was examined, and it was plain to see that the weapon had been recently discharged. The driver of the car asserts that he is quite positive that a pistol was shot off by some one inside the car, but that driver was not summoned to appear as a witness. A lady living on Baronne street, who saw a portion of the difficulty, asserts she saw a flash from the car.

Rollins, the colored orator, was defended yesterday in Recorder Becker's court by Messrs. Sambola, Braughn, and Rogers, eminent lawyers of the Democratic persuasion. After he was discharged by the graceful speech of the Recorder, which his counsel properly acknowledged, the Democratic colored orator was escorted by quite a number of his political friends toward the hall of the "Constitution Club" on Canal street, near Dryades.

The large escort of the champion of Democracy naturally attracted a crowd, which the Times estimates numbered about fifteen hundred, of whom some five hundred were colored. No violence was committed, but there were indications of an attempt by certain turbulent parties to create a riot, and when a knowledge of the threatening aspect of affairs reached Governor Warmoth at his office, he immediately hastened to the scene to quiet the excitement which was rapidly becoming more fearful. He proceeded to the hall, and was greeted with uncomplimentary expressions from the angry crowd, who exclaimed, "Who in hell are you?" "Where did you come from?" "What do you want?" etc.

He addressed the multitudes from the balcony very briefly, but had hardly commenced his speach before he was greeted with cheers from all parties assembled. At the close of his speech, he was lustily cheered by the Democratic Club which had taken the colored orator under its especial charge:

MY FELLOW CITIZENS: If you want others to respect your opinions, you must respect theirs (cheers); every man, white or black has a right to be a Democrat or Republican as he may choose, and no citizen has any right to interfere with him. (Cheers.) The black man here, who claims to be a Democrat, whatever may be his motive, must have the protection of every Republican (cheers), and I call upon you my black fellow citizens, for whom and with whom I fought as a soldier, to stand by me in protecting him and all others, in all their rights and privileges. (Cheers and cries of "We will," "We will.")

And now, my white fellow citizens of all politics, let this lesson teach us that respect for the opinions of every man, however humble may be his position, is necessary to the peace and good order of society. (Cheers.) I pledge you, my fellow citizens, the whole power of the government I represent, to protect you all in your opinions, your rights, and your privileges. (General applause.) I ask you to disperse to your homes like good citizens, and all will be well. (Cheers and cries of "We will," "We will.")

The gathered crowd dissolved quietly and orderly, and in half an hour afterward a stranger would have recognized nothing to denote that an emeute had been imminent, or that citizens had been otherwise engaged than in pursuing the paths of industry and happiness.

The Picayune and Times compliment Governor Warmoth for his action yesterday. The latter paper says the Governor was introduced by Messrs. J. O. Nixon and J. B. Walton.

The newsboys of the Times in selling the evening edition lustily cried out, "Here's Governor Warmoth's Democratic speech!" and many Democrats were zealously contending that the Governor's utterances were on that occasion Democratic, claiming that free speech was one of the cardinal Democratic doctrines. The point could hardly be discovered, taking into consideration the hazard heretofore to which Republicans have been subjected by publicly expressing opinions in reference to slavery and the war that did not suit the fierce sovereigns of the Democratic party.

Later in the evening some of the Democrats who gathered at the corner of Canal and Dauphine streets were discussing the events of the day, and a knot of them asserted that they had "no confidence in any one who would declare that a nigger was as good as a white man!" These gentlemen, however, political progress is so rapid, may to-morrow in the vain hope of winning to their support the votes of a few colored men, advocate equal political rights for all. It is to be hoped that they will, and thus plant themselves upon the Republican plat form.

THE PARISHES.

Ouachita Parish.

We copy these paragraphs from the Monroe Intelligencer:

WEATHER, CROPS, AND RIVER.—During the past week we have had almost daily rains, doing a great deal of good to the crops. The cotton is growing very fast and forming bolls rapidly. With the prospects now before us, a full crop, according to the extent of ground planted, may be expected.

The river is still falling, and is now about three feet above low water mark.

HEAVY TRIPS.—The last trips of the steamers Idaho and Cleona brought up unusually heavy amounts of freight for this point and Trenton. All our merchants have been laying in full supplies of merchandise for the coming fall trade, the present prospects for a good crop being such as to justify them in doing so. We hope they may not be disappointed.

Franklin Parish.

The Monroe Intelligencer also furnishes the following particulars of an assassination in Franklin parish:

Some six weeks ago Dr. Curtis was killed by a young man named Charles M. Henry, in Franklin parish, and after an examination before a magistrate Henry was discharged on the ground of having committed the deed in self defense. We now learn that on the evening of the fifteenth instant Henry was sitting in the house of Mr. Eddin, on the Winsborough and Delhi road, talking to Miss Eddin, to whom he was engaged to be married, when some unknown assassin fired through the window, killing him instantly.

A second shot was fired by the assassin, barely missing Miss Eddin, on whom Henry had fallen after being shot. To show the deliberate manner in which the ruffian who committed this outrage went to work, we would state that in order to reach the window through which the shot was fired he rolled an empty barrel some distance across the yard, stood it on end, and laying a plank across the head, stood on it and carried out his intention. No clue had been found at last accounts.

Morehouse Parish.

The Intelligencer likewise gives us this information from Morehouse parish:

One of the editors of this paper visited various points in Morehouse parish during the past week, and after making pretty extensive inquiries relative to the crops, was pleased to learn from all sources, in addition to what he saw himself, that the crop of cotton never looked better. The corn crop has suffered severely, but it is expected that a sufficiency will be made to supply the parish. The universal opinion regarding the colored people is, that they have never worked more faithful, and that to their industry the present good prospects are greatly due.

The cotton worm has made its appearance at various points in the parish in small numbers, but it is hoped that with favorable weather they will die out before mush damage is done.

As for the crop of fruit we found the market in Bastrop overstocked with it. Apples were a drug at fifty cents, and peaches at one dollar per bushel.

"The Nice Girl."

As with her male congener, locality, to some extent, changes her characteristics. In Boston, for instance, a nice guhl is one whose appearance and actions are marked by the superior intelligence which pervades the air of that favored town; who is pale, frail, and generally flowerlike and interesting; who dances intellectually and not any better than a nice guhl ought who flirts as if it were a moral duty; who admires Mr. Emerson, thinks Katharina a sweet poem, belongs to one of the best families, and lives in a swell front on Beacon street. It is her peculiarity that she may wear spectacles or not without at all affecting her niceness, her nose having just the bridgy curve of beauty which suggests and explains myopia—a perfect pons spectaculorum. Indeed she often adopts the articles without at all needing them; simply for the sake of their intellectual air; but she commonly combines intelligence and coquetry by wearing nip nose glasses. The Philadelphia nice gurl is more difficult to describe, because she leaves on the mind of the beholder no particular impression but one of extreme niceness and evident gurlishness. She ought to have had a grandfather, however, so as to talk about her family, and some relative in the Loyal League. A nice gyurl in Baltimore is extremely pretty and bewitchingly disloyal; adores Harry Gilmor and the Sunny South; sings "Maryland, My Maryland," in a way to ravish all ex-Confederates, and takes every opportunity of confiding to you, in the prettiest way imaginable, her sorrow that you Yankees were not exterminated, and her conviction that Druid Park is several thousand acres larger and several thousand degrees handsomer than Central Park. In Washington there are no nice gyerls; the instant they develop they are either married or depart of their own accord. We have left New York for the last, because, of course, a New York nice gehl is the nicest of all girls, and is known by being prettier, more graceful, and more accomplished, and by doing everything that is to be done better than any other girl in the world.—Round Table.

This writer is evidently unacquainted with the girls of New Orleans. They attend rebel political demonstrations and lament the "Lost Cause."

The telegraph has already informed us of the abortive termination to the inquiry instituted in the Georgia House in reference to the eligibility of members. It is a fact which scarcely anybody denies, that there are in that body about twenty-five or thirty individuals who, under the laws of Congress, are not entitled to seats. The committee appointed to investigate the subject made a majority and minority report. The former declared some two or three members ineligible. The latter declared all eligible, on the ground that members of a State Legislature were not officers! The minority report was adopted—100 to 48. And in this result General Meade, after his great flourish of trumpets over the matter, meekly acquiesced.

Lippincott's for August has a clever paper on "smoking," in which Parton's Atlantic article is neatly reviewed. In answer to the latter's point, that smoking tends to keep its votaries from the society of women, the former boldly claims that the number of cultivated men is indisputably larger than the number of cultivated women, and that in general society the number of cultivated women is very small; hence, as a rule, cultivated men do not go there. There are many pungent and more sensible things in the article, which is evidently written by a gentleman in excellent society, since he tells us that he "can count hundreds of ladies of his acquaintance whose dress costs them each four thousand a year."—New York Commonwealth.

DOTS FOR DEMOCRATS.

Mr. Parton asks, "Will the coming man drink wine?" If he's a good Democrat he'll prefer whisky.

Why is the White House like a plate-glass window? Because there is no need of opening it to Seymour.

The Libby prison has been suggested as a suitable place for a Democratic headquarters during the Presidential contest.

The Dubuque Times says the Western Democrats compose themselves with the reflection that while Pendleton could not be nominated Seymour can not be elected.

Thurlow Weed writes from England: "If I had a thousand voices to raise, and as many votes to cast, they should all be pronounced and deposited for Grant against Seymour."

Henry A. Wise would make a capital Democratic canvasser in all the regions where "John Brown's soul" has been doing so much mischief.

A fit name for those Pendletonians who sorrowfully support the Democratic nominations—"Seymourners." The entire party will adopt it after the third of November.

Up in Vermont they have a disgusted Democrat, who says that he has an old Bell and Everett ticket stowed away at his house, and he is going to vote it at the coming election.

The Quincy (Ill.) Herald mentions, as a recommendation of General Singleton for Congress from the Fourth District, that he had, during the rebellion, the confidence of Jeff. Davis.

"Grant has got to work early if he expects to get a victory," quoth a Democrat. "He 'worked' Early once in the Shenandoah and got one," quoted a Republican.

The Democracy propose not only to repudiate the national debt, but also the fourteenth amendment, the reconstruction acts, the restored State governments of the South, and the war itself.

The World says that the rule of the Democratic party in the coming campaign must be "attack, attack, ATTACK." We greatly suspect that in the early weeks of next November this will prove an attack of paralysis.

The "Wickedest Man" in Albany wears an imitation Panama hat, without a ribbon, has a sty on his eye, and a cherry on the end of his nose, and goes for Seymour. There is no hope for his reformation.—Albany Express.

Seymour's speech to the rioters, Blair's letters, Brick Pomeroy's wood cuts, a file of the New York World, and the official report of the Fort Pillow slaughter are good campaign documents. Circulate the documents.

Seymour, the sniveler, who got up the draft riots in New York, and who called the rioters his "friends," wants to be President. He and the people disagree upon this matter, and the disagreement is not slight, as will be shown in November.

The Hartford Courant says: "While the Southern Democrats were out on their little excursion under Davis and Lee they killed five thousand Connecticut men. The survivors are invited to elect a President to suit the excursionists immediately upon their return."

Governor Seymour in July, 1863, deprecated the draft riots of New York, not because they were an outrageous resistance to law, but because they disturbed the quiet of the city of New York. He was like the railroad engineer who said he hated to run over a man because "it mussed up the track so."—New York Tribune.

Before the Democrats brought on the late civil war a barrel of flour could be purchased for $5, now you have to pay $10, and so in regard to all the necessaries of life. Elect Seymour and Blair and bring on another revolution, as promised by Blair, and what is to become of the country? Let thoughtful men ponder.—New York Commercial Advertiser.

It was a lucky stroke for Hendricks that he failed to be nominated for the Presidency. He is a candidate for Governor of Indiana, and one Waterloo defeat is sufficient for one campaign. Hendricks will come out of the Indiana election like a hen out of a storm—drooping, cold, and sad.

The Wheeling (Va.) Intelligencer says:

"Between Mannington and Hessville are several tanneries by the roadside, which adopt a device very suggestive of their owners' politics. At each a fine Grant and Colfax flag floats from a pole, and underneath the flag, from a sort of spar, is suspended a tanned hide. This hide is intended to symbolize the condition of the Democracy in November."

Now, boys, three cheers for Grant and Colfax hip! –

In soldier columns, firm and true, to battle for the right:
Brave boys are they, and well they know the country's chiefest want:
The air resounds, where e'er they go, with cheers for General Grant.

CHORUS

Hurrah! Hurrah! mislead the Boys you can't;
Forever true, they wore the Blue, and followed General Grant.
Hurrah! Hurrah! deceive them now you can't;
The Boys in Blue, forever true, will follow General Grant.

Hurrah! Hurrah!! Hurrah!!!

Grant, kind Heaven, oft we prayed
When foul-mouth treason ranted:
Grant came, and he our country saved,
Our prayer was humbly granted.
Grant, kind Heaven, another prayer,
For which our soul has panted,
Grant place thou in the nation's chair,
Then our prayer is doubly granted.

In reply to a question of the Albany Argus how the fifteen hundred million of dollars raised by taxation during the last three years has been expended, the Albany Evening Journal says:

"It was expended for powder and ball, for cannon, shot, and shell, for vessels and fortifications, for arms and equipment, to put down a Democratic rebellion."

A Democratic paper asserts that "Governor Seymour never owned a government bond in his life." That may and it may not be true. If it is true it indicates his want of faith in the stability of the government, knowing the purposes and means of his intimate political associates to overthrow it. The tone of his speeches during the war do not indicate great faith in government bonds.

We stated the other day that Frank Blair had been through Yale College—having entered one door and been kicked out of the other. This is literally true, but it is not all. Having been expelled from Yale, he tried Princeton with a like result, and then entered the University of North Carolina, which he left before graduating, to avoid being expelled as before! Frank is a classical chap—a regular bachelor of (black) arts.—Chicago Post.

Complaints have been frequent in England that women are becoming more and more addicted to intemperance. A gentleman writing to the London Star states that "The careful persusal of public journals, a large correspondence with intelligent observers, the testimony of city missionaries, and personal experience in London have led me slowly and reluctantly to this depressing opinion. Workingmen themselves say 'there is more drunkenness than ever amongst women.' This, I may remark, is one reason why some workingmen will not marry, but prefer another mode of life." A similar opinion is becoming prevalent in this country.

Opportunity has hair in front, behind she is bald: if you seize her by the forelock you may hold her, but if suffered to escape not Jupiter himself can catch her again.

CAMPAIGN SONG.

The Boys in Blue are Coming.

BY J. M. ROE, JR.

They are coming, Mr. Seymour, a host of boys in blue,
Fresh from a hundred fields of war, the battle-scarred and true;
Not now with gleaming bayonets and roll of martial drum,
But armed with ballots for the right, in peaceful ranks they come;
To shield the starry flag they love from traitors' hands anew,
They are coming, Mr. Seymour, a host of boys in blue.

They are coming, Mr. Seymour, the loyal boys in blue;
From Maine and from New Hampshire, and the Bay State, ever true;
From the green mountains of Vermont, and Little Rhody's shore,
From the homesteads of Connecticut the hardy veterans pour;
As late when flashing o'er the land the news of Sumter flew,
They are coming, Mr. Seymour, the loyal boys in blue.

They are coming, Mr. Seymour, the loyal boys in blue,
From New Jersey and from Delaware, and Maryland, ever true:
And from the grand old Keystone State, man answering for man,
With pledges for the Star Brigade, the ballot in the hand;
To yield the soldiers' meed of praise to worth and valor due,
They are coming, Mr. Seymour, the loyal boys in blue.

They are coming, Mr. Seymour, the earnest boys in blue,
From shop, and mill, and forge, and field, the steadfast and the true,
The heroes of the Empire State, despite her recreant son,
Who turns to shame and mockery the good that has been done;
To spurn with wrath the devil's faults, the faithless devils too,
They are coming, Mr. Seymour, the earnest boys in blue.

They are coming, Mr. Seymour, the veterans of the West,
From their grand prairies and their lakes, the finest and the best,
From the broad rivers, whose strong waves bear joyous to the sea
The treasures of the continent, and the tribute of the free;
To speak once more, in thunder tones, a people's high behest,
They are coming, Mr. Seymour, the veterans of the West.

They are coming, Mr. Seymour, a host of boys in blue,
Fresh from a hundred fields of war, the battle-worn and true;
Not now with gleaming bayonets, and roll of martial drum,
But armed with ballots for the right, in peaceful ranks they come,
To guard the starry flag they love, from traitors' hands anew,
They are coming, Mr. Seymour, a host of boys in blue.

LOCAL INTELLIGENCE.

A LIVELY CONFIDENCE MAN.—We have repeatedly brought Peter Conrad to the notice of our readers, or rather Peter's little tricks did; and we detailed an instance where he visited E. S. Dumee, 57 Carondelet street, played the cotton planter, and obtained $50 on that account. This successful stroke of financiering proving so easy, he went into the wood and hide business, and wheedled a small sum of money out of C. E. Dirmeyer, Julia street. After this he changed his footing and dived deeper into crime. We do not say that he stole a horse, but an animal had been stolen from Francois Canlon, and immediately afterward Peter was found astride the beast. Of course, Peter was not to blame if a man's horse runs away and makes him get on his back; but then the law is suspicious under the circumstances. By another twist of his wrist accused becomes possessed of a cart up town, and having no use for it, sells it for $30, and was arrested for stealing the vehicle. Wishing more money, and finding confidence in himself and neighbors as good as cash capital, he goes down to Merz, the brewer, and contracts to deliver to him a schooner load of lumber, and, by the way, to make the bargain binding, accepts a small loan. And then comes the gentleman to whom he sold the cart and shoves in his charge. These trifling mistakes send Conrad before the Criminal Court for trial, where, it is supposed, he will sell cheap his chances for a berth in the Penitentiary. When he reaches that institution there is some probability that he will cheat the keeper out of his hat and boots.

CITY COUNCIL—Board of Aldermen.—A regular meeting of the Board of Aldermen was held last evening with the following members present: President Markey in the chair, Aldermen Kaiser, Shields, Prados, O'Brien, Brady, Boguille, and Poynot.

A communication from the Mayor announcing the nominations made by him as Supervisors of the Waterworks, was laid over for executive session subject to call.

A resolution came from the lower Board that two policemen from each stationhouse in the city be detailed and stationed at the different railroad depots to warn and prevent people from getting on moving trains, and requiring every railroad company to place signs and placards in conspicuous places, warning people of the danger in crossing the tracks, or in getting off and on moving trains, was referred to the Streets and Landings Committee.

A report from Alderman O'Brien, chairman of the Finance Committee, advising the abolishment of the office of Assistant City Attorney, and authorizing the Attorney to employ certain employes of his office to collect taxes now collected by the Assistant City Attorney, and praying the Legislature to abolish said office, was discussed at some length, but finally was amended by a joint resolution inserting the words that the "Finance Committee be authorized to memorialize the Legislature to abolish the office," and as amended passed.

A resolution was introduced that the Assistant City Attorney be authorized to enforce the collection of all back taxes and judgments due the city from the year 1862 up to 1867 inclusive.

Alderman Shields informed the Board that the question was now in the hands of the Legislature, and that the resolution, if adopted, would be null and void.

Alderman O'Brien, always ready to say something, said that the resolution was simply offered in order to show the people of the city that the Council were anxious to "shove things through and punch up the Legislature."

The resolution was finally tabled subject to call.

The Secretary announced that the lower Board had concurred in the resolution of this Board, providing for the establishment of a grand trunk railroad on both sides of the neutral ground on Canal street, where depots shall be established by the different lines of city railroads, which will have the effect to concentrate all of the starting points on Canal street. As the resolution required a committee of two to be appointed to confer with the different companies, the Chair appointed Aldermen Brady and Kaiser on the committee.

Alderman Shields offered a resolution that a committee of three be appointed to draw up rules to govern the Board, which are at the present time deliberating without rules, and have fifty copies printed, but was at last tabled, to be taken up in committee of the whole.

The Board then went into executive session and adjourned.

Board of Assistant Aldermen.—This Board met in regular weekly session last evening, Mr. A. Kearney presiding, and present Messrs. Pemberton, Sturcken, Rose, Farrell, Fisher, Aitkins, Walker, Grandpre, Pandely, Wynne, Breen, and Camp.

The Treasurer reports receipts for the week, $76,202 08; balance on hand $308,-835 65.

General Beauregard petitioned for permission to lay tracks on Canal street, to be used in common with others.

Mr. Pandely offered his resignation as Chairman of Workhouse and Prisons Committee. Accepted.

Mr. Rose was elected to fill the vacancy.

The subject of the Carondelet Navigation company against the city was again discussed.

Mr. Camp believed that as Bayou St. John was a natural stream no power could give the company exclusive control over that stream. He moved to lay the subject on the table, but the Board finally agreed to refer the matter to the Committee on Streets and Landings.

Bill of Mr. Welsh for repairs made on Sorapuru market was taken up. Messrs. Camp and Pemberton advocated Mr. Welsh's claim, and voted that the gentleman be paid.

On a vote, resolution was adopted on second reading.

Resolution to make a grand trunk railway on Canal street was referred to a special committee.

The subject of issuing certificates of indebtedness by the city was called up.

Mr. Pemberton was opposed to issuing certificates of indebtedness. The plan he offered last week not only supplied the little good contained in certificates but more. He was aware that if the city issued certificates the brokers would soon purchase them and make more money out of the city and its employes, and they would buy them at a great discount. He was opposed to printing the engraved certificates, but while he was speaking he was informed by Mr. Fisher that the certificates had already been printed. He believed that issuing them is unconstitutional.

Mr. Camp was willing to issue anything by which the city's employes might be relieved of their necessities.

Mr. Pemberton thought that city bills might as well be paid out as certificates—the one would be at as great discount as the other.

The ordinance (915) was then adopted on second reading, but Mr. Pandely gave notice that he would move a reconsideration next meeting.

After considerable wrangling between the active members the ordinance (915) was withdrawn. This unaccountable action was not explained.

Resolution by Mr. Camp that all claimants on the city be allowed to receive city bills if they choose, was laid over until next week.

The proposition to request the State Legislature to abolish the office of Assistant City Attorney of New Orleans was tabled.

A committee reported against the building now used as an Insane Asylum in the Third District, and advised that another building be obtained. They suggested the house now used as a military prison as being the best place to be obtained. Mr. Camp had examined the asylum building, and knew what he was reporting on.

Mr. Wynne also knew, for he "had been in there often." (Laughter.)

Mr. Breen was appointed a committee of one to wait on General Buchanan, to obtain permission to occupy the military prison by insane persons.

An ordinance concerning the wharves of the city, and farming the revenues of the same was referred.

A special committee of was appointed, with power to send for rsons and papers, to investigate several umors and reports concerning certain city contracts.

Messrs. Grandpre, Sturcken, and Camp were appointed.

Mr. Grandpre introduced the resolution sent to the upper Board for concurrence.

The subject of disposing of the right for public flooting baths brought Messrs. Sturcken and Wynne to their feet, and both talked until they got into a decent muddle.

Mr. P. Waterman's proposition to establish floating baths in the Second District was read and adopted on second reading.

Adjourned.

THE LATE DUEL—Dismissal of the Case—The State vs. J. S. Bossier.—It may be remembered that Mr. Bossier on being arrested and brought before the Recorder of the Second District was, by consent of Attorney General Belden, admitted to bail in the sum of $5000 to appear for examination before the proper legal tribunal in the parish of St. Bernard, where the duel took place. The case was brought up yesterday morning at twelve o'clock before Judge Toca, at the courthouse in St. Bernard parish, about fifteen miles below the city. Mr. McKay, District Attorney, conducted the case on the part of the State, and Messrs. Bienvenu and Charvet appeared for the defense.

Messrs. Labatut, Forstall, Marcel, E. Smith, and Drs. Berjot and Rance were examined as witnesses.

From the facts elicited through these witnesses the judge felt justified in dismissing the case, it having been brought only from information received.

The examination did not occupy more than an hour.

The Chicago Republican says there are in the city of Chicago at least seventeen thousand persons who depend upon the profits of the sale of fruit for their living. Included in this number are jobbers and importers, wholesale dealers, wholesale and retail dealers, and retail dealers exclusively, wagon peddlers, hand-cart peddlers, and peddlers from baskets.

DIED:

VAN ORNUM.—Died, July 31, 1868, at the Sparks Place, above the city, FREDDY, only child of William and Ella Van Ornum, aged nineteen months.

Beautiful, precious, and pure, the light and joy of the household, after a brief stay in this sad world the darling one has passed away to its angel home.

"Hark! how he calls his tender lambs,
And folds them in his arms."

LATEST BY TELEGRAPH.

WASHINGTON, July 31.—The postoffice report for the year ending June 30, 1868, shows a deficiency of $8,000,000.

The draft given in payment for Alaska is on the Assistant Treasurer at New York payable at sight.

There was a cabinet meeting session to-day. Absent—Seward and Evarts.

Internal revenue receipts to-day $685,000; for the month ending to-day $16,998,000. The Freedman's Bureau in Maryland, except for educational and bounty purposes, has been discontinued.

John M. Binckley was installed to-day as Solicitor of the Internal Revenue Department.

The Miners' strike in Pennsylvania is again under headway.

A New York court decides a mortgage given on a distillery prior to seizure for violation of revenue laws does not exempt the distillery from seizure.

The stock of the National Life Insurance company has all been taken by capitalists, headed by Jay Cooke. The charter recently granted by Congress authorizes agencies in all the States and territories, and it is proposed to run the machine in connection with the National banks.

The Congressional Globe publishes Butler's reply to Henderson under the bold-faced caption, "Henderson Wounded." Butler captioned the speech himself, and the proprietors of the Globe felt bound to follow copy.

The press generally discredit the Brazilian statement that Humaita has fallen.

An election in Virginia previous to further Congressional action is regarded improbable.

The Commissioner of Internal Revenue has decided in favor of the Tice meter to prevent fraud in distilleries.

The troops in the district are to concentrate at Lincoln depot, and are to be reinforced by Dupont's light battery of the Fifth artillery.

The alleged object of concentration is to form a complete school of instruction.

General Thomas Ewing, Senator Ross, and Baron Stoeckel were among the prominent visitors at the White-House to day. Baron Stoeckel's visit referred to Sitka

WASHINGTON, August 1.—The postoffice accounts are not made up. The recent statement of a deficiency was a wild speculation. The deficiency will not exceed four millions, and is chargeable to expensive routes in the West instead of the Southern service.

The Republican National Executive Committee is in session in New York.

The President has tendered Lieutenant Governor Cox, of Ohio, the Revenue Commissionership, assuring Lieutenant Governor Cox that Mr. Rollins would give way to him and relieve all parties of trouble. Mr. Cox declines on account of engrossing personal business.

A special agent is to be placed in charge of the New Orleans Customhouse.

Admiral Dahlgreen assumes the duties of Chief of the Naval Ordnance Bureau on Monday.

Considerable anxiety is felt regarding the position of the Cabinet. On the subject the New York Times' special says: "The position of the Cabinet in regard to the Democratic nominees is ascertained to be as follows: None of them are satisfied with the nominations, but McCulloch and Browning will probably support them. Messrs. Seward, Randall, and Welles will, unless they alter their present opinions, remain neutral during the campaign, while Messrs. Evarts and Schofield will vote for Grant and Colfax."

The time of converting the seven-thirties expired to day. There are about five millions outstanding, which will be paid in currency at par.

Baron Stoeckel has receipted for the Alaska money.

WASHINGTON, August 3.—General Howard, of the Freedmen's Bureau, started South this afternoon to visit all the principal Bureau stations and perfect arrangements for winding up the concern by January.

The Secretary of the Treasury has decided to receive no more applications for clerkships.

General Rousseau is in town. He will leave in a few days for New Orleans.

It is rumored that an ad interim Commissioner of Internal Revenue may be appointed at any moment to relieve Mr. Rollins, and that the subject of placing General Banks in the Russian mission as an ad interim, vice Cassius M. Clay, is seriously discussed at the White House.

Mr. Evarts, the Attorney General, is away however, and the President has decided to await his opinion on such delicate matters before taking any decisive steps.

Internal revenue receipts over $1,500,000.

Secretary McCulloch has issued orders to heads of departments to classify clerks according to capacity and attention to business with a view to sustaining the more skillful and faithful.

Colonel W. M. Smallwood has been designated by the Postmaster General to take charge of the postoffice at New Orleans.

Colonel Mann, member of Congress from Louisiana, leaves here to night on a short tour North prior to returning to New Orleans.

Solicitor of Internal Revenue Binckley will assume charge of that office to-morrow.

No appointments of gaugers or storekeepers under the new spirit and tobacco tax law have been made. About 120 commissioners for the former have been made out at the Internal Revenue Bureau, but not yet signed by the Secretary of the Treasury.

WASHINGTON, August 4.—Thaddeus Stevens is seriously ill in this city.

The debt statement will probably issue to-morrow and will show a slight increase.

Captain N. B. Harrison, of the Navy, is ordered in charge of the Hydrographic office here.

A Cabinet meeting was held to-day. Four members—Seward, Schofield, Evarts, and Randall—absent.

The Express newspaper of this city appears to-day under the ownership of Jonah D. Hoover and Brother.

Rumors relative to a change in the Internal Revenue Commissionership continue. In response to a second request to accept that office Ex-Governor Cox, of Ohio, to-day sent a telegram persisting in declining the appointment. Caleb Cushing has resigned his position as one of the commissioners to codify the United States laws.

A convention of colored citizens of Border States was held in Baltimore to day.

Returns from all parts of Kentucky show an immense increase in Democratic majorities, and falling off of the Radicals'. Stevenson's majority will probably reach 60,000. In Louisville Stevenson received 8244, and his Radical opponent 492 votes.

Internal revenue receipts to-day $746,600.

The Indian Bureau received a dispatch this morning from Ellsworth, Kansas, dated the third instant, quieting the fears of Indian disturbances.

The Commissioners of the Central Pacific railway report an additional section of twenty miles, terminating 178 miles from the initial point at Sacramento, in good working order.

A Cincinnati paper says that the head of one of the robbing gangs at Seymour, Indiana, the man who is said to have taken the largest share of the $96,000 stolen from the Adams Eexpress company in May, has gone to Europe on a pleasure tour.

Senator Welsh, of Florida, has accepted the Presidency of the Iowa Agricultural College, located in Story county, Iowa, and is to enter upon the discharge of the duties pertaining thereto next spring. His term expires in March.

WASHINGTON, August 5.—Thaddeus Stevens' condition is not considered critical.

Internal revenue receipts to-day $737,000.

Many important executive matters are in abeyance awaiting the return of Mr. Evarts.

Secretary Welles and staff are inspecting navy yards.

A Democratic conference at New York city indicates that Mr. Hoffman will be the Democratic candidate for Governor. He is the Tammany favorite.

Mr. Stevenson's majority for the Kentucky Governorship will exceed 50,000.

Secretary McCulloch and General Rousseau visited the President to-day.

The public debt statement will be issued on Saturday.

The General of armies has recommended the remission of the remainder of the sentences, and the release from imprisonment of all persons now in confinement under sentence of military commissions organized under the reconstruction acts of Congress in the States in which said acts have ceased to be operative.

There are over five hundred applications for the twenty-five supervisorships created by the new tax bill.

The Treasury Department gives no intimation of what the debt statement will show. It is stated that its promulgation is delayed on account of serious errors in its computations.

The following is a well authenticated Cabinet scene:

Secretary Browning led off, declaring himself for Seymour and Blair, following his remarks by the assertion that there should be harmony in the Cabinet. Secretaries Welles and McCulloch followed in the same strain, not, however, so forcibly urging changes in the Cabinet, unless Messrs. Seward, Evarts, Randall, and Schofield, who are absent, act in accordance with the President.

The United States Consul at Porto Rico writes that the requirements for passports has been re-established on that Island. Also that on account of cholera at Havana vessels from that port are not admitted into Porto Rico.

The Intelligencer publishes Seymour's letter in full by telegraph from New York. It covers a column and a quarter.

General Rousseau will not leave for his command until some time in September.

ATLANTA, July 31.—The Senate has resolved to sit in secret session. No reporters are allowed to attend. Members are not allowed to divulge any proceedings.

Proceedings in the House to-day were of a local nature.

Governor Bullock's grand inauguration ball took place at the National Hotel. A large crowd of whites and blacks, numbering some three hundred, gathered in front of the hotel, and cheered for Grant and Colfax, and called for a speech from the Governor, who appeared and said:

"My countrymen and friends—I am glad to see voters for Grant and Colfax awake: hope you will be ready next fall to cast your votes without fear or reward. Thanks, gentlemen, for this distinguished honor. With these remarks I bid you a pleasant good night."

The crowd quietly dispersed.

At Republican Hall Joshua Hill made a speech in favor of Grant and Colfax as the only hope for the country.

MOBILE, July 31.—Accounts from the interior of Alabama and Mississippi give unfavorable accounts of the crops. Heavy rains in all sections. The caterpillar is reported in different sections of Alabama and Mississippi, and is doing considerable damage.

The Warrior river has risen thirty feet at Tuscaloosa, and there is a twenty feet rise in the Alabama and Bigbee rivers, and fears are entertained of an overflow of the low lands.

LONDON, July 31.—Parliament was prorogued to-day. The Queen was not present, but her speech was read by Commissioner. It speaks of foreign relations as most friendly and satisfactory, and says there is no reason to fear war in Europe. No reference was made to the United States. The Abyssinian expedition had vindicated the power of the crown. The cessation of attempts at rebellion in Ireland renders further use of the exceptional powers granted by the two Houses useless. The Queen thanks the House of Commons for supplies granted, and congratulates them upon the passage of the Irish and Scotch reform bills, the public school bill, and the bill for the purchase of the telegraph wire throughout the kingdom. She also announces that a dissolution of Parliament must soon take place in order that the people may reap the advantages of the more extended system of representation recently provided. She is confident of their fitness for their new duties, and that their voices will be for the perpetuation of that civil and religious freedom which is secured by the institutions of the nation and the settlement of the realm.

The Times to-day in a leading editorial says of the session of Parliament that time only will show which of the leaders will retain their status in the change from the old to the new body. Bright will find in the new House of Commons a more congenial audience than in the days of Palmerston or Gladstone, whose popularity may yet continue in a House elected by one constituency, and doomed to satisfy the requirements of another. The House may be satisfied in spite of all shortcomings with such work as the abolition of the Church rates, the punishment of electoral corruption, and the condemnation of political and Church abuses.

PARIS, July 31.—The Moniteur publishes a decree for suspending for three months the collection of tonnage dues from all vessels entering French ports with cargoes of cereals. The decree goes into effect on the first of October.

SHANGHAI, July 4.—Advices from Japan indicate that the civil war is drawing to a close. A compromise has been effected between the Damios North and South, which will lead to a reconciliation betwen the Mikado and the Tycoon.

HAVANA, July 31.—Advices from Hayti state that thirty prisoners who surrendered in a recent fight were shot to death.

OIL CITY, Pa., July 31.—A fire commenced this morning early, and by eleven o'clock fifty buildings had burned, and the fire was still raging.

BOSTON, July 31.—Judge Samuel D. Bell, Ex-Chief Justice of the Judicial Court, died to-day, aged seventy-one.

MONTGOMERY, August 1.—In the Senate to-day a militia bill was passed. It authorizes the Governor to organize the militia when he sees proper.

The disability removal bill was hotly discussed.

Mr. Pennington and other Republicans strongly urged the removal of all disabilities. The native Republicans generally favor this measure, but the Northern members oppose it.

In the House Mr. McCraw, the Speaker, got through a bill removing disabilities from the people of Chambers county. This is hoped to be the entering wedge for a general bill.

The common carrier bill introduced by a colored man from Mobile is a bone of contention. The bill provides that whites and blacks shall ride in the same railroad cars, and on the same steamboat.

AUGUSTA, August 1.—A Republican mass meeting, mostly composed of negroes, was held in the courthouse to-day for the purpose of appointing delegates to the State Convention, to be held at Atlanta. A letter was read from Joshua Hill saying he would stump the State for Grant and Colfax.

DUBLIN, August 1.—All persons arrested under the suspension of habeas corpus, and held without trial, have been discharged.

PARIS, August 1.—The Emperor has prorogued the Senate. The Patrie proposes the joint intervention of France, England, and the United States for the restoration of peace in South America.

LONDON, August 1.—The pending political troubles in Spain have resulted in a ministerial crisis. It is understood that the distinguished Liberal statesman, Don Baldomera Espartero Duke de la Victoria, has been summoned to form a new cabinet, and has gone to Madrid for that purpose. Discontent continues to prevail in Spain, and threatens to break out into armed insurrection at any moment. Disaffection is also apparent among the officers of the fleet.

NEW YORK, August 1.—The steamer Missouri brings details of the Cubans petitioning for the abolition of the censorship of telegraphic dispatches.

The editor of El Pays had been arrested for slandering Santa Anna.

Vera Cruz advices report numbers of small victories over the insurgents. Great excitement prevailed regarding the organization of Santa Anna's emissaries at New Orleans. The government was taking measures to give them a warm reception wherever they might land.

St. Domingo news shows new complications. President Baez has every cell of the public prison full. Baez asks assistance from Spain. Leading London bankers have loaned Baez two million dollars. The late President Cabral is reported advancing in formidable force, and the early fall of Baez is predicted.

Haytian advices report that Salnave still holds out, having repelled several assaults. On Sunday, July 5, Salnave proclaimed himself Emperor of Hayti.

Venezuelan advices represent the revolution a complete success. Mongas is acknowledged provisional head of the government. The acting United States Minister acknowledged him and congratulated him on his victories.

BALTIMORE, August 1.—Reverdy Johnson and family sailed at noon. Mrs. Lincoln, who has been here several days too ill to travel, remains behind.

About a dozen steamers and tug boats, crowded with friends, accompanied the Chesapeake, which carried Mr. Johnson to the Bremen steamer.

NEW YORK, August 1.—Steamship United States arrived from New Orleans.

NEW YORK, August 3.—The following was received this afternoon by the Superintendent of the New York, London, and New Foundland Telegraph Company.

LONDON, August 3, Afternoon.—The cable of 1866 ceased to work at 12.35 this afternoon. Tests show that the fault is at the New Foundland side. The cable has probably been damaged by an iceberg.

(Signed) CYRUS W. FIELD.

NEW YORK, August 3.—Chas. G. Halpine, otherwise known as Private Miles O'Reilly, editor of the Citizen, and late Register of the city, died this morning of an over dose of chloroform, taken for neuralgia.

General Sheridan was arrested at Leavenworth, Kansas, on Saturday last, on complaint of Mr. Dunn for assault and battery. Dunn is Postmaster at Fort Leavenworth, but was ordered off the reservation, a few days ago, for alleged misdemeanor, and refusing to obey he was forcibly ejected, hence the action for assault.

ATLANTA, August 3.—Last Friday an affray occurred between the whites and negroes at Gobey schoolhouse, Gwinnett county, caused by negroes selling whisky at the school exhibition, which caused general indignation among the students, and led to a general melee, in which four negroes were seriously and one mortally wounded.

The Senate and House have passed a joint resolution to elect Statehouse officers on the sixth.

A motion in the House to reconsider the resolution to suspend levies and sales was lost by 60 to 53.

In the Senate Bradley, a negro, introduced a resolution that the Committee on the Militia be instructed to bring in a bill to provide for organizing able-bodied loyal citizens to serve as militia, irrespective of race or color. Tabled.

SAVANNAH, August 3.—Reports from the crops of this section show that the continued rains are injuring crop prospects. Accounts from Florida report worms at work on most plantations.

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., August 3.—The Legislature to day passed a bill requiring all telegraph operators in the State to take the oath of secrecy, and making it fine and imprisonment for divulging any message.

They also passed a bill taking the election of delegates to the Electoral College out of the hands of the people, and placing it in the hands of the Legislature.

The bill giving negroes every privilege of whites on all railroads passed.

A similar bill relating to hotels was introduced and will probably pass.

There was a large Democratic ratification meeting and nominating convention held here on the first instant. W. B. Barnes, of Jackson county, was nominated for Congress. At night there was a large torch-light procession and fireworks.

MONTGOMERY, August 3.—In the Senate the only bill of importance discussed was the disability bill. No definite action was had.

In the House a large number of bills of local interest only were passed.

The common carrier bill created an animated discussion. The Speaker made the point of order that only the original bill could be properly put to the House, and that the Clerk had no right to read from a printed copy. The original could not be found, having been lost by the committee to which it was referred.

This created great confusion. Motions were made and appeals taken in rapid succession. In much disorder the House adjourned until nine o'clock to morrow.

The bill is the pet scheme of the extreme men. Its passage is doubtful.

The rains are doing immense damage, and worms are appearing in all this section. It is estimated that the cotton crop is already cut short one half.

MANCHESTER, England, August 3.—A dreadful accident occurred here night before last. During the regular performances at Largue's music hall the alarm of fire was raised and the audience immediately rushed for the doors, completely blocking up the passage-ways, and the wildest excitement prevailed. When order was at last restored by the repeated assurances of the managers that there was no fire in the building it was found that no less than twenty-three persons, mainly women and children, had been crushed to death in the stampede. A large number had limbs broken and were otherwise injured.

CHARLESTON, August 3.—Alarming reports of the reappearance of the cotton caterpillar are brought in from several of the sea islands.

ST. LOUIS, August 3.—One thousand men are at work on the Colorado Central railroad.

A dispatch from Colfax states that he will not accept any public demonstration on his trip to the Rocky Mountains.

Three gamblers were lynched at Sioux City last week for cheating.

Extensive preparations are being made for the grand encampment of the Knights Templars next month.

Commanderies will be present from all parts of the country.

The recent disturbance in Saline county was greatly exaggerated. A drunken man disturbed the meeting. Only one man was killed and three wounded.

NASHVILLE, August 3.—Thirteen general officers of the Confederacy are in convention to-day to consider ways and means of reconciling the political troubles in Tennessee.

MONTGOMERY, August 4.—The whole day was consumed by the House in a wrangle over the bill allowing access to railroad cars and steamboats without regard to color. The bill passed 44 to 32.

The Senate discussed the bill removing political disabilities, but without any decided action.

NEW YORK, August 4.—Turks Island papers of July 18, report that notwithstanding the rain, the salt pans are in a very forward condition, and an abundant supply on hand, price 10c., but it can be purchased a little below for cash.

Advices from Porto Rico, July 18, report that at Arecibo, the only district where sugar grinding is still busily continued, the produce is quoted at from $4 50 to $5 50 for extremes of quality, and molasses at 20 @23c. ⅌ gallon. Superior flour there is worth $10, with an upward tendency.

Pitch pine lumber in suitable assortments would bring $35, and is much wanted.

According to the Herald's letter from St. Domingo the Dominican cabinet are surprised but not alarmed over the tone of the American press relative to the Alta Vela affair. The Minister of Foreign Relations claims that the Spanish government ejected the American settlers at a time when St. Domingo was being converted from a republic into a Spanish colony because it could not permit a permanent lodging of American citizens so near the new acquisition.

The feeling in Nova Scotia against the Confederation still continues with unabated violence. An appeal to the United States is suggested in some quarters.

The coinage at the Philadelphia mint in July was as follows: Gold $8594, silver $56,848, nickel $148,475.

PORTLAND, Me., August 4.—The International Commercial Convention met here to-day. Over 200 delegates are present. After organizing the convention adjourned till this afternoon.

TORONTO, Canada, August 4.—In consequence of the summary manner in which the vigilance committee have recently dealt with express robbers in the Western States, there have been several arrivals of well-known desperate characters here of late, and the Canadian express companies have taken the precaution to place armed guards on all trains.

An unsuccessful attempt was made to rob the express office at Sherbrooke on Tuesday night. Moore & Co., brokers of this city, were robbed of $2000 in open daylight.

SAN FRANCISCO, August 3.—Chinese Minister Brown sailed yesterday.

COLUMBIA, S. C., August 3.—A bill passed to-day reducing the bonds of State officers.

ALEXANDRIA, Va., August 4.—A locomotive belonging to the Alexandria, Washington and Georgetown railroad exploded its boiler this evening at the depot of the Orange and Alexandria railroad, just previous to starting for Washington, doing much damage to persons and houses in the vicinity. A colored man named Field is supposed to be fatally, and several others seriously hurt.

PARIS, August 4.—An imperial decree has been issued, authorizing the issue of a new loan.

NEW YORK, August 5.—The following is from this morning Tribune's special Washington dispatch:

"Several persons who arrived from New Orleans to-day represent political affairs in Louisiana to be in a very deplorable condition. The power of the Union men in the State is only superficial, while the real power is in the hands of ex-rebels. Since Sheridan and Mower were relieved from command the military there has been used solely to aid the ex-rebels and defeat the laws of Congress.

"After the nomination of Seymour and Blair was made, the Democratic party began a thorough organization, and they now boast that they will carry the State for Seymour if they have to kill every 'nigger' on its soil in doing so. The Seymour Knights and Blair Guards have been organized, and drill as regularly as if they were military. They are disposed in regiments and companies, taking their names and numbers from the various regiments and companies which they furnished to the rebel army in war times. Having seen service in the rebel army is the chief qualification necessary to become an officer of the organization. General Harry Hayes, who figured as the Sheriff of New Orleans at the massacre of Union men in July, 1866, is grand commander of the revolutionary body.

"At the grand mass meeting held in New Orleans the other evening they paraded the streets fully armed with revolvers and bowie knives. With these men fully organized and disciplined, and General Rousseau in command of the United States military forces, the Unionists of Louisiana expect to have hard work to win next November. If the Union men had any arms so that they could cope with their opponents they would apprehend no difficulty."

NEW YORK, August 5.—Governor Seymour has written a letter formally accepting the nomination by the Democratic National Convention, in which he says the nomination was unsought and unexpected, but he was caught up by the overwhelming tide which is bearing the country on to a great political change, and he finds himself unable to resist its pressure. The resolutions adopted by the convention accords with his views.

Men are admitted as representatives of some of the Southern States with declaration upon their lips that they can not live in the States they claim to represent without military protection.

They owe their seats to the disorder at the South, and that very fact prompts them to keep it in anarchy. In vain the wisest Republicans protested against this policy.

Personally, the Presidential office has no attractions for him. During the war he had given sixteen thousand commissions to officers of the army, and he knew they demanded the union they fought for.

He does not doubt a triumph, which will bring back peace and prosperity to our land, and give us once more the blessings of wise, economical, and honest government.

MONTGOMERY, August 5.—In the House nothing of general interest was done.

The Senate passed with one dissenting vote a bill removing all political disabilities. It provides that all disabilities resting upon a citizen shall be removed upon his filing an application with the Probate Judge. No oath is required.

By a vote of thirteen to twelve (the Lieutenant Governor casting the deciding vote) the Senate passed the bill which had previously passed the House authorizing the Governor to select one newspaper in each Congressional District in which all the legal notices of every kind are to be inserted. It is thought the Governor will veto it.

ATLANTA, August 5.—A resolution was offered in the House that all persons holding municipal offices in the State by virtue of any military commission be removed, and all offices thus vacated be resumed by those removed by military commission, and that they be required to act in their respective capacities until the time for holding elections.

AUGUSTA, August 5.—Heavy rains continue.

General Wade Hampton addressed a meeting of the Democracy here to-night.

SAVANNAH, August 5.—Crop reports from middle Georgia show that the cotton plant is very small but healthy. Unless it grows rapidly not over half of what was made last season will be realized.

From Florida accounts represent that the worm is on the increase, especially among the Sea Islands.

LONDON, August 5.—The Times, in an editorial on Mazatlan affairs, says: Though the commander of the Chanticleer was exposed to considerable provocation he should not have resorted to hostility, but should have sought redress through his government. Otherwise headstrong and intemperate commanders will always hold the power of peace and war. Even Spanish American States, insolent and brutal as they are, are entitled to this treatment.

A dispatch from Constantinople reports that Mr. Morris, the American minister, refuses to concur in the protocol of the Sublime Porte allowing aliens to hold, lands in Turkey.

LISBON, August 5.—The Portugese council of state have concluded not to prohibit the royal exiles of Spain from remaining in the country. The Duke and Duchess of Montpensier now reside in Lisbon.

BRIGHTON, England, August 5.—Speculum won the Brighton cup. Five horses started.

HAVANA, August 5.—Marshal Falcon, lately President of Venezuela, has reappeared before Cairo. He contemplates renewing the war to drive Monagas from power.

Haytien advices state that the revolutionists have gained a victory near Jacmel. 4000 revolutionists, well provided with provisions and ammunition, are pressing the siege of Port au Prince.

Dominican troops had crossed the frontier, invading Hayti.

General Boyer and his son have been murdered. Robberies and depredations are reported in various parts of the country.

St. Domingo advices represent the revolutionary movements against Baez steadily progressing under Gen. Laperon, who had gained a decisive victory over the forces sent against him.

FORTRESS MONROE, August 5.—The steamer Tallahassee from Washington, with the Secretary of the Navy on board, passed up to the Norfolk navy yard to-day.

ST. LOUIS, August 5.—The Democratic State Convention organized to-day by electing Amos Shields permanent President.

CHARLESTON, August 5.—General Canby has issued an order officially relinquishing the command of the Second Military District.

THE LAKE BORGNE CANAL.—The following communication from the Chamber of Commerce is an expression of opinion which the whole mercantile community of the Crescent City will sustain:

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE,
New Orleans, August 4, 1868.

At a regular monthly meeting of the Chamber held on the third instant the following resolutions were adopted:

Resolved, That this Chamber has heard with interest and instruction the address of Dr. J. O. Noyes, on the feasibility of the "Mississippi and Mexican Gulf Ship Canal," and is led to believe therefrom, as well as from its own general knowledge, that the plan is perfectly practicable, and will afford a better and cheaper channel to the lakes and Gulf than any artificial way now existing; that it will also be far better, deeper, and cheaper than that now projected by way of Bayou Manchac.

Resolved, That the Chamber cheerfully commends to capitalists at home and abroad an investment in this work, as promising an advantageous increase in the trade of our city, as well as satisfactory dividends on the estimated cost of its construction.

ALFRED MOULTON, President.
ARTHUR C. WAUGH, Sec'y and Treasurer.

A celebrated retired tragedian lately applied to the Heralds' College for a suitable motto for himself. The clerk addressed, who is a "bit of a wit," and also a "full private" in the volunteers, suggested "Mac-ready! Present! Fire!"

In Michigan recently thirty-five men went into a harvest field to cut grain. About 10 A. M. no less than sixteen of them had been sun stricken, the majority of whom died under the exposure. Such an instance of wholesale casuality has hardly a parallel in the history of this country.

THE GERMANIA LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY, established in 1860, and based upon the most approved principles of Life Insurance security, presents its claims for consideration, believing that its solid foundation already secured by the faithful and efficient management of its officers and Board of Directors will give it the preference above all other similar institutions.

It is purely Mutual, as the net profits are distributed among the parties insured, the interest of the capital stock being only five per cent according to its charter.

It assumed the system of cash payments at the commencement of its existence, and maintained it faithfully until now, and promises the same for the future, thereby securing to policy holders the full amount for which they are insured. The advantage of this system over the half cash and half note system is patent to every careful observer, but will be more fully illustrated by the following statement and table:

If a person of thirty years of age insures his life for the amount of $1000 in one of the credit companies, and pays a premium of $28 30 per year, with a note for half of the premium, then by means of this note and interests thereon the amount will become less and less in the following proportions:

| | |
|---|---|
| After 10 years the $1000 will amount to......... | $887 44 |
| After 15 years the $1000 will amount to......... | 795 28 |
| After 20 years the $1000 will amount to......... | 666 02 |
| After 25 years the $1000 will amount to......... | 484 73 |
| After 30 years the $1000 will amount to......... | 250 47 |
| After 33 years the $1000 will amount to......... | 32 53 |
| After 34 years the $1000 will amount to......... | Nothing. |

So that after a lapse of 34 years the whole amount will be eaten up, notwithstanding the parties insured paid their money in good faith.

The large dividend of 40 per cent declared last January is evidence of the care and success with which the Managers have conducted the enlarged and rapidly increasing interests of the Company, and vouches for its future brilliant and permanent prosperity.

Parties contemplating an assurance on their lives will do well to examine the status of this Company, every facility for which will be given by the ## Poetry.

"THIS I DID FOR THEE—WHAT DOEST THOU FOR ME?"

Was placed under a print of Christ in the study of a German divine.

I gave my life for thee,
My precious blood I shed
That th u might'st ransomed be,
And quickened from the dead.
I gave My life for thee;
What hast thou given for Me?

I spent long years for thee
In wearine-s and woe,
That one eternity
Of joy thou mightest know;
I spent long years for thee;
Hast thou spent one for Me?

My Father's house of light,
My rainbow circled throne
I left for earthly night,
For wanderings sad and lone;
I left it all for thee;
Hast thou left aught for Me?

I suffered much for thee,
More than thy tongue can tell,
Of bitterest agony,
To rescue thee from hell;
I suffered much for thee;
What dost thou bear for Me?

And I have brought to thee,
Down from My home above,
Salvation full and free,
My pardon and My love;
Great gifts I brought to thee;
What hast thou brought to Me?

O let thy life be given,
Thy years for Me be spent,
World fetters all be riven,
And joy with suffering blent;
Give thou thyself to Me,
And I will welcome thee!

It is said that Count Zinzendorf was first brought to give to the Saviour by reading this motto:

NOTHING TO DO.

"Nothing to do!" in this world of ours,
Where weeds spring up with the fairest flowers,
Where smiles have only a fitful play,
Where hearts are breaking every day.

"Nothing to do!" thou Christian soul!
Wrapping thee round in thy self-h stole.
Off with the garments of sloth and sin.
Christ, thy Lord, hath a king dom to win.

"Nothing to do!" There are prayers to lay
On the altar of incense, day by day;
There are foes to meet, within and without;
There is error to conquer, strong and stout.

"Nothing to do!" There are minds to teach
The simplest form of Christian speech;
There are hearts to lure, with loving wile,
From the grimmest haunts of sin's defile.

"Nothing to do!" There are lambs to feed,
The precious hope of the Church's need;
Strength to be borne to the weak and faint,
Cigns to keep with the doubting saint.

"Nothing to do!" There are heights to attain,
Where Christ is transfigured yet again;
Where earth will fade in the vision sweet,
And the soul press on with winged feet.

"Nothing to do!" and thy Savior said,
"Follow thou Me in the path I tread."
Lord! lend Thy help the journey through,
Lest, faint, we cry, "Too much to do!"

The Louisiana Intelligencer, of Monroe, says fears are entertained that the bottom bolls of the cotton will be injured if the rains continue.

There is some talk of worms. We hear they have made their appearance in considerable numbers on the Downs plantation. Cotton is beginning to open, and in a couple of weeks picking will commence.

The Intelligencer closes a castigation of the Telegraph man as follows:

The writer of that article in the Telegraph admits too much in the following sentence:

"The people ask only to be let alone, and not to stir animosities between them and their former slaves."

Who has stirred up animosities between the people and their former slaves? Is it to be said that no man can come here and explain to the colored people their rights? This is what is meant by the above. But we contend that this war would have been fought for nothing, on behalf of the Northern people, if the spirit of caste which has prevented this before the war should continue now. We believe that every party has a right to send its speakers into any part of this State without being threatened or killed, and we claim this right for the Republican speakers. We not only claim this right, but we intend to exercise it.

It appears that the Democratic journal has an artist after the La Crosse Democrat model, he gets the following notice from our friends:

SUBJECTS FOR THE PENCIL.—Our cotemporary of the Ouachita Telegraph, is happy in the possession of an artist who uses the pencil with remarkable power. We would very modestly suggest that he try his hand on the scene at Rayville in which the deaf and dumb negro was killed. It would make a striking picture, especially the cutting off of the dead mute's ears.

As his genius is untiring, perhaps after finishing the above, he would favor the public with the taking off of Mr. Small, on Bœuff Prairie,—Madison (La.) Journal.

We would suggest, as fitting subjects, the burning of negro cabins within two miles of Trenton, and the shooting of a Republican candidate for sheriff on his own doorstep in Bienville.

A. J. Streeter, of St. Paul, Minnesota, appeared on the streets of Hartford, Connecticut, the other day, with a carriage and pair of horses which had, in seven weeks, brought him from St. Paul. He appeared as fresh as when he started on the trip, but the horses showed the effect of their 1500 miles journey.

[From the New Orleans Advocate.]

OMAHA, July 29, 1868.

MR. EDITOR:

I have been thinking how few there are of those who have traveled the old world over, visiting every place of interest within the prescribed circle, who know how rich in beauty and grandeur are the scenes of their own land. The historical prestige clinging about foreign places of interest, like the moss and ivy over ruined shrines and temples of a buried age, bring the sight seeing multitude from every quarter of the globe to gaze, wonder, and comment, each in his own way. I once heard an American say who had been an extensive traveler abroad, "Why there is nothing of particular interest in our country, if you except Niagara and the Mammoth Cave." I would like to meet that person to-day upon these prairies west of the Missouri and amid the wild picturesque scenery of those grand old hills which form their back-ground. If he would not pronounce it a picture worthy of the deepest study I should say a want of taste and appreciation of nature prompted his assertion with regard to our beautiful land.

In defense of the home of my childhood on "New England's rocky strand," I will not now speak, as the varied and beautiful scenery of that region is more generally and better known and will speak for itself; but of the home of my adoption, this new and more recently explored country, now opening up its wealth and fresh beauty before the enterprise of the nineteenth century, I would say a few words.

Of Omaha, our fair young prairie city, on the western shore of the "red Missouri," you have heard much. The star of her destiny has steadily increased in brightness for the past fourteen years. Where now a population of some seventeen thousand have their abiding place was but a few years since the hunting ground of the Omahas, the tribe of Indians from which the city derives its name, and where now stand those handsome residences and fine large blocks of stores there might be seen the wigwams of the red man. The dread sound of the war whoop has given place to the peaceful sounds of civilized life, and the shriek of the locomotive on the great Union Pacific railroad has succeeded the death shriek of the victims of savage torture. May this great civilizing enterprise with God's help drive from our plains those fearful sights and sounds.

The location of Omaha is faultless. The streets are regular and wide, those running from the river east and west are named, those running north south are numbered. To the north of the town for miles along the river's bank stretches a wide plateau, with a range of highlands on the west, whose verdant slopes will furnish some of the finest building sites in the country, with natural lawns and terraces that would cause an English nobleman to sigh with envy. To a traveler from the East the scenery about Omaha presents many attractions, the beautiful undulating prairie has such an advantage over the flat, monotonous prairies of Illinois. One feature of the country which strikes the tourist unfavorably is the dearth of trees. I have been shocked to see what quantities of black walnut and cedar are used for building purposes. It can be more easily obtained and at lower rates than pine or oak. Too little attention has hitherto been paid by the people settling in these Western places to the adorning and beautifying their residences with trees and flowers, which ferm the most attractive features of any place, in my opinion. The past two years have witnessed a great change in this respect, and these improvements are going forward more rapidly than ever before. Evergreens of every variety, with many of our popular Eastern shade trees, are taking the place of the cottonwood and other Western trees, where rapid growth induced the early settlers to adorn their places with them.

Sitting at my window, midway up Capitol hill, I command an extensive view of the surrounding country. Just below me lies the business portion of the city on the banks of the river, back upon the heights to the right are many fine residences belonging to the wealthier portion of the community, while far away to the left upon the distant plateau may here and there be seen the neat white cottages of the farming population. I can trace the winding course of the dark waters of the Missouri some forty miles, and the long range of wooded bluffs on the Iowa shore opposite form a charming back ground to the picture, either when lighted by the gorgeous tints of one of our Western sunsets, or the shimmering silver of the "midnight summer moon," or when veiled in the misty splendor of that purple haze, the harbinger of the yellow autumn days. The most beautiful season of the year here, it is generally conceded, is the Indian summer. I spent a week last November in the Black Hills, and the Indian summer days were beyond description. I was impressed with the following article taken from the "Journal of Chemistry." It is a curious fact that the fine particles of "partially carbonized matter, which give the peculiar haze or smoky appearance to the atmosphere of the Atlantic States, during the Indian summer, come from a region entirely across the continent. Those minute atoms examined by the microscope are found to belong to vegetable organisms which are only produced on the plains at the base of the Rocky mountains; and the atoms are wafted thither by some wonderful meteorological agency." Thus it would seem that the plumes of the Indian summer in the East are borrowed. The lovely golden autumn days linger with us here until almost midwinter.

The heat has been intense here this summer, but as the telegraph has brought us such fearful reports of the sad effects of the heat in the East, in the great number of cases of sunstroke, I think we have no reason to complain. We have, with very few exceptions, a cool breeze from over the plains after sunset; the nights are quite cool, and one does not experience that feeling of extreme lassitude which invariably follows a midsummer night in the East.

I can not close this communication without speaking of the event of the week, the arrival in our city of Generals Grant, Sherman, and Sheridan, returning from their Western trip. The "conquering hero comes," and is received by our people with wild enthusiasm, and well does he deserve every mark of honor and respect a grateful nation can pay him. His richly deserved laurels can never fade. The distinguished trio left our city yesterday on the Eastward bound train.

Hail to our chief! and may our Father guide and bless,
Clothing his heart and arm with power of righteousness.
Let this glad pean ring throughout our Western land,
"Grant" that we soon may see our noble
chieftain stand
Beside the helm, to guide our storm-tossed
"ship of state"
Safe through the threatening breakers ere it be too late.
O'er him the star of destiny doth brightly shine
Who led our conquering armies on the well-fought "line."

From the Churches.

Rev. Thomas Kenneday writes from Donaldsonville, Louisiana:

We are now engaged in a protracted meeting, and have been very successful. Five have professed conversion, and the work of God still going on in this place.

The Church at Woodlawn is nearly finished; some ceiling is needed; we ask if you will please send it on.

Our Sunday school is going on finely, but no day-school is now held on account of the hard times. No tuition can be collected, and we hardly collect money enough to buy candles for night meetings.

At Bayou Goula we have organized a board, and the society is prosperous. The last package of books was received.

Rev. S. Armisted writes from Shreveport, Louisiana:

We have a good day school under Mr. Baker, who is poorly paid, as we have no money and I fear it must soon be discontinued. The Bureau helps us some and also in repairing our house. Our Sabbath school has about sixty scholars. The church numbers over two hundred members. The Sunday school will increase rapidly with care. Your package of books and papers was received. We are very thankful for them. There is no difference of opinion about uniting with the Old Church; all are agreed.

I have been going to school, but had to stop on account of the poverty of my family and their sickness. I am sorry to send so poor an account, but our enemies hedge up our way, they give us no work, and do all against us, but in the darkest hour there is hope. "Judge not the Lord by feeble sense," but trust him for his grace. This is our anchor in trouble.

Rev. Mr. Bryan writes from St. Martinsville, Louisiana:

I have just returned from a sixty miles ride around the circuit; rode ten miles south of Lafayette, and next morning two neighbors piloted me to a meeting four miles off. A good congregation was gathered, and the people rejoiced to see a Methodist minister. They had no organization, but many had been Christians for years. We had an excellent class meeting. All the members spoke, and not a dream or vision was told. The work was at the heart. One exhorter could read, another could read and write. They are a sensible people; their names were enrolled — twenty-three members and twenty-one probationers. Since Mr. DeRocheport left, young Mr. Baker is keeping the day school. It is doing well. They had in the Catholic church here to-day first communion. About 200 colored people made their first communion. Our Church is prospering. Souls are being converted. One year ago we had eighteen members, now we have a hundred. A baptismal service is given out for the fourth Sunday in this month. Times are still very hard, but crops are good; no worms in the cotton yet.

Rev. Mr. Ross, of Wesley Chapel, New Orleans, sends us an interesting account of his love feast, held August 10, assisted by Rev. Henry Green, of First Street Chapel.

The body of the house was crowded, over five hundred were below, and from forty to fifty spoke. It was a very happy time. An old man seventy-six years of age, said he embraced religion at the age of eighteen, in a log cabin. He said there is fire in this Methodist religion. I am poor, but I have a home in that city of golden streets, and will soon be there to sit under the shade of the tree of life; have traveled a long way and am almost home.

Lucy Anderson said: "Brethren and sisters I love you all in my heart and soul, and by God's grace will meet you in the kingdom." Hester said: "Let me tell you, way over in Maryland, eastern shore, in the cornfield, in hard trials God found me, thank him for ever. Look at me now a child of God and bound for Heaven." N. B. said: "I got religion in Baltimore and I thank God. They put me in jail the very next day. They did not know Jesus went in with me. Then he came across the briny ocean with me, and he's with me now and has promised to go with me to the end." William C. said: "Brethren let me tell you I was a bad man. I remember coming to this church to make a fuss. A man took me out and put me in jail. I thank that man because within those walls I saw no other way than to pray. God bless the place. When I got religion it was the Parish Prison. John B. said: "Brothers I got religion in the stocks, away up the country in hard times, and Jones took me out of the stocks, and you see me here to thank God."

A creole brother said: "I found this holy fire among dese Metodis. I was a Catholic, but now am a Metodis, I am standing on de rock Christ Jesus." Clarissa C. said: "I've been in the battle field two years, a fighten in Gods army, and feel as fresh to-night as ever; I thank God for the power that's in prayer."

These are but a few of the testimonies given, and briefly stated. The Conference was held July 31, all the members were present, Rev. A. Ross in the chair. We had a glorious time; the Church is in a prosperous condition; peace, harmony, and love prevails; forty-seven members were received in full connection, and one expelled.

Religious Items.

The Delaware Conference held its annual session in Philadelphia, July 23, Bishop Jaynes in the Chair; statistics: members 9055; probationers 746; baptisms: adults 407; children 1508; deaths 169; local preachers 117; churches 133.

The Bishop addressed the brethren on their business habits. On Saturday evening a large audience attended the missionary service, sermon by Rev. G. W. Lybrand, a collection was taken up amounting to over fifteen dollars.—Methodist Home Journal.

(Is not this a typographical error;" can it be possible so small a sum was collected on the occasion.)—EDITOR ADVOCATE.

The Camden Union camp meeting is to be held on the twenty-ninth, commencing with three hundred tents on the ground. A writer in the Methodist Home Journal says:

Let all come to the Camden Union camp meeting with an ardent desire to do good, and to get good, looking, and earnestly praying for a "baptism of the Holy Ghost."

We look for the coming of those whose hearts are all afire with love and who feel specially called to the great work of holiness, for there are multitudes of our Israel to be aroused from the Laodicean sleep into which they have fallen, and to be exhorted to seek a higher state of Christian experience. The work then before us is the conviction and conversion of sinners, and the full consecration and entire sanctification of believers. Let there be united hearts, and united efforts in this great work. Let us guard against all exciting controversies, and remember that the camp ground is no place for polemic display, but for the display of the converting and sanctifying grace of God.

STREET PREACHING.

In New York city these services are conducted by ministers and laymen of all evangelical denominations. A fly tent thirty-seven by seventy-five feet in size, to accommodate eight hundred persons, has been purchased for two hundred dollars. Is there not Christian enterprise enough in New Orleans for such a work?

It is intended to have good singing, and short, earnest, practical, plain preaching by ministers and laymen of all the evangelical denominations. It is expected that during the season Rev. Stephen H. Tyng, Jr., and others, will occupy the stand. We notice that one member of the Executive Committee, a prominent down-town merchant, took the stand at the service in Washington Square last Sabbath. And we know not why many others of our active business men may not engage in this work of evangelism. In London, the Open Air Mission is one of the most popular institutions, and accomplishes a vast amount of good. And we are sure these experiments of the City Mission will receive the hearty support and encouragement of every good citizen.

WELL AND NOBLY SAID.

In his recent response to the dictatorial and offensive protest of Pius IX against the governmental decrees in the direction of human liberty, the Emperor of Austria nobly says:

The hand of iron which your holiness recommends me has reigned for more than fifteen years, but it did not produce that love and satisfaction on the part of my subjects which has resulted now from a wise and mild policy of a few months.

NEW YORK CITY MISSION.

A city missionary says: In passing a liquor saloon, not long since, I noticed a number of young men carousing, and, struck by their apparent intelligence, I entered the saloon and offered each of them a tract, which was politely received, when one of them asked my name, which I gave, with the nature of my duties and the number of my office. A short time after a young man entered my office, representing himself as one who was present when I called at the grogshop, as stated above, and said: "I heartily thank you, sir, for approaching me as you did; feelings were aroused which were almost dead, and I'm now determined by the help of God, to lead a better life."

There are thousands of young men in our city, drawn by company into scenes of dissipation and sin, whose feelings are tender and susceptible of good influences, and who will yield to the pressure of a kind, brotherly hand. Christian reader, will you not try to save one?

All the provinces of the Austrian Empire are open to the free march of the Bible.

A correspondent of the New York Tribune writes from Rome that Protestant services are not tolerated in that city even in private houses. A Scotch clergyman who was holding services in his own private dwelling was threatened with the penalties of the Inquisition for so doing.

The General Assembly of the Old School Presbytherian Church held at Albany, New York, also admitted the colored delegates who sought seats in the assembly. Among the delegates was Rev. Joseph Williams, from Georgia, who, by request, addressed the assembly. He is an old man and has been a preacher thirty years among his fellow slaves. He urged unity of action and intercourse among the ministry of both races, and pleaded for aid from the North. He defended his race from the imputation of indolence and dishonesty. His speech evinced talent, and was warmly applauded.

A committee of ministers, with Rev. Gilbert Haven as chairman, has been appointed to arrange for holding a Massachusetts State Convention of all Methodist churches during the autumn.

A new parsonage has just been completed and furnished at Babylon, Long Island, for the use of the pastor of the Methodist Episcopal church in that village, valued at four thousand dollars, the gift of William R. Foster, of St. Paul's church, New York. Such generosity is worthy of emulation by other wealthy Methodists.

Freedmen's Saving Bank, New Orleans, Office 114 Carondelet Street.

Many of the colored people know very little about this excellent institution, where their hard earnings will be kept safely from accident, waste, or robbery, and bring them a handsome interest.

To encourage children in saving, deposits of twenty-five cents and upwards are received. Interest is paid on all deposits of five dollars and over.

Remember that the richest men in the land a few years ago were poor boys. Save your dimes; buy no tobacco or liquor; no jewelry or gay clothing. Teach your children to save the picayunes and put them in the savings bank. Get ready to buy a homestead, to have a farm of your own. Educate your children, provide comforts for yourself and your families.

In three years four and a half millions of dollars have been deposited in these banks, and of this amount three-fourths of a million are safely invested in United States bonds and drawing good interest.

The crops are promising fair all over the State. Industrious men and women are likely to earn considerable money the coming fall; save all you can.

Let the preachers and school teachers explain, and urge this matter in every parish.

During July last nearly $10,000 were deposited in the New Orleans Bank. This amount could be doubled every month with a little effort.

In Norfolk a mean trick was played by some scamp upon the colored people. The cashier says:

Nearly $2000 were drawn at our Norfolk Branch last month, by colored men from Yorke county—neighbors who, on receiving their bounty last winter, deposited the greater part with us. They stated their object in withdrawing the entire amount to be for the purpose of buying a large tract of land and working in partnership. But from their manner the cashier suspected something was wrong, and later in the day it was revealed that these men had been informed by some one that the Government had stopped paying all soldiers' bounties, and would recall all that had been paid, "whenever the money could be paid," and advising them to draw their money "at once before it was too late!"

A part of the men had left the city before the cashier learned these facts, but the remainder were prevailed on to re deposit their money, and have now full confidence in the bank.

This report was doubtless the work of some scamp, who designed the robbery of their well-earned money. Colored men will do well to avoid all men who speak distrustfully of the Government, or of the "National Savings Bank."

Methodist Recorder of Springfield, Ohio.

Our worthy cotemporary is afflicted just now with a correspondent on "Church Polity," who vigorously defends his own views, and assails the views of others, in a manner calculated to excite controversy. Does he not know there is "a more excellent way." A well-written and timely editorial, entitled "What are we coming to," rebukes the social demoralization of our day: as desecration of the Sabbath, trifling with the sacred marriage relation, and the indulgence of impurity. The prevalent corruption of legislative bodies and office-holders might be added. Sodom and Pompeii are instanced, and medical testimony is presented. Licentious pictures and theatricals, hasty divorces, licensed gambling, shameless Sabbath desecration; these are weakening the moral sentiment and corrupting the conscience of our people. Should not the press and the pulpit sound the alarm faithfully? There are many other noticeable articles in the issue of August 5, as a letter from the land of the Bible, by U. S. Consul J. A. Johnson, very interesting "Bibliology," "Jottings by an Itinerant," etc. We copy from the editorial referred to as follows:

This desecration of the Sabbath extends all over the country. A minister writes from Austin, Nevada: "There is no Sabbath in Austin, nor any of these mining towns. Not only are the drinking and gambling places open on the Sabbath, but all the stores; and a large amount of business is done." He relates that on Sabbath, June 28, a traveling circus made its appearance in the town, traversed the streets, pitched their tents, and in the evening exhibited to a "crowded house." This is the State of things in the far West? What is it in the East? A fact or two shall answer.

On the evening of June 26, but a Sabbath or two ago, the Senate of the United States, in a time of peace, when there was no public emergency to render such a course necessary, openly assembled for the purpose of attending to ordinary legislation and executive business. The President and his Cabinet were at the Capitol for the purpose of presenting nominations, signing bills, etc, On the same Sabbath the Legislature of South Carolina took a pleasure excursion from Columbia to Greenville, returning the next day.

These are samples of what is going on East and West among the high and low. The general desecration of the Sabbath, the open disrespect of it manifested by these in high places, and the hatred and opposition exhibited toward it by infidels and infidel associations should be enough to arouse every lover of God's holy day to the fact that unless a reformation takes place we will soon be without a Christian Sabbath. We may well inquire in view of these facts, what are we coming to? Destroy the sacredness of the marriage relation, and obliterate the Sabbath, and what have we left? Whatever we may have left, we will be without a home—and without a God.

Rebellion!

The Democratic papers throughout the State are counseling rebellion against the laws, and in several parishes the legally elected officers are not allowed to take their places. The situation becomes alarming. Mark the closing sentence of an article below, taken from the Civic Guard, published at Houma, Terrebonne parish, Louisiana:

We learn from the St. Martinsville Courier that Judge Gates is holding court at that place. The Judge, it seems, takes the ground that the reconstruction acts are illegal, being in open violation of the United States Constitution, and believes it to be his duty to hold his office and perform the duties appertaining thereto until a sucessor shall be legally elected and qualified. We learn that all the parish officers in this Judicial District, except those in Terrebonne, will sustain Judge Gates. The Courier is very severe on those officers who have surrendered their offices to the scallawags who claim to be elected under the reconstruction acts. We are not disposed to censure the officers in Terrebonne. They had a motive in surrendering their offices satisfactory to themselves and to their friends generally.

It is true they could have held their offices until the legality of the reconstruction acts is decided by the Supreme Court. The scalawags have no power to dispossess them. Should physical force have been attempted, a thousand men—hundreds of whom have been inured to arms—would have responded promptly to a call for a force to repel force. But such a course would not have been in accordance with the policy being pursued at this time by the conservatives throughout the South. Yet, we admire Judge Gates' determined spirit to not even seem to acquiesce in the reconstruction acts. After all, he is only a little ahead of time.

The same paper contains this gem and threat:

All scalawagdom seems to be coming to Houma. Well, we shall know where to find them when they are wanted.

Boy Democrats.

When Cataline would overthrow the Roman commonwealth, and trample upon the liberties of his country, he systematically debased the youth of Rome. The same policy was adopted by the secessionists of the South with their military companies of boys, and the same course is being now pursued. We clip from the New Orleans Crescent of August 8 the following:

A juvenile Democratic Club honored us with a visit last evening, and after the customary three rousing cheers, marched off amid cries of "Hurrah for me and a hull lot of fellers!" "Step up ahead there, Tough McGulligan!" "Bully for Blair!" Macte virtute, etc.

A club of boys, youthful Democrats, after parading through a portion of the Fourth District the other night, stopped before the residence of one of their patrons, a gentleman who had aided in their outfit, and cheered vociferously. The recipient of the compliment appeared on his gallery and returned his acknowledgments. "Yes, but can't you stand the whisky?" shouted an infantile voice in the crowd.

The juvenile Democracy were out last night in full force. We saw in different parts of town at least a dozen processions—two of the "crowds," the "Morgan Cadets," and the "Boys' Third Ward Democratic Club" were gorgeously gotten up, and their quaintly inscribed transparencies made out of boxes and lettered to all appearance with a blacking brush, were miracles of adolescent artistic ability.

The French Language.

Attention is invited to our French column of original and selected articles.

They will be continued, provided we receive sufficient encouragement. Contributions in French are invited.

Congressman Vidal has sent us public documents, for which we tender our thanks.

Thaddeus Stevens.

The telegraph brought us news on the twelfth that the old war horse of freedom had passed away to the spirit world. This brave and true friend of his country ceased his labors and his life at the same time. Even his bitterest political enemies—and he had no others—accord him purity of purpose and conscientious devotion to duty. His life is his best eulogium.

The Louisiana Democrat of Alexandria says: "The constant rains since July I have greatly injured the cotton, still the crop is a wonderful one, and is bound to be more than an average yield."

The same paper mourns over the backsliding of one Kearney, recently a colored Democrat. He has probably been reading the LaCrosse Democrat.

All the gentlemen selected have irreproachable characters, and will, we doubt not, give intelligent and impartial consideration to all questions and causes which may come before that court for its decision.

Public Education.

We give our readers in another column the New Orleans Republican's excellent synopsis of the act to regulate public education.

Our city cotemporaries have ventilated their old fogy notions and waxed wrathy about this bill. It is certainly greatly in advance of anything before seen in Louisiana, which is rather the fault of the State, and reflects great credit upon the author of the bill. No child is excluded from the schools on account of race, color, or previous condition. Fogy don't like this: the ten or a dozen white children in a district must have a house and corps of teachers, and the one or two hundred children of other colors the same. It is a great wrong, they think, to legislate that every child must be educated. Yet they would exclude the ignorant from the ballot box. They cry out against the Lord's prayer or the Bible in our schools, and yet declare the colored people are going back to fetichism and barbarism.

They are eloquent about the great expense of the new system, and find much fault with the State Superintendent, but these last objections would cease if they had the handling of the funds and some old fogy was placed in charge of the office.

The bill evinces great labor and judgment on the part of its author. Let the Legislature pass it and give every aid in their power to the officer elected by the people to see after the education of their children, and we will thank God and take courage.

The farewell order of General Blair, the present Democratic candidate, to his army corps, previous to its being mustered out, is dated Louisville, July 11, 1865, and recommends the confiscation of Southern lands to provide homesteads for the Union soldiers.

The Blair Knights should have the farewell order printed. It would be especially interesting to those who own lands, and they are respectfully requested to hurra over it.

Blair's Revolution.

The most infernal conceptions of the age is General Blair's proposed overthrow of the new State governments in the South. It has the crowning virtue of boldness, and the crowning vice of baseness. It is the only effectual idea of the Democratic party and the most powerful to win adherents. It has the ring of revolution It is red with blood. It is the red horse of war mounted by death, booted and spurred for destruction. It is the tocsin of a civil strife more brutal and iniquitous than the one out of which we have just emerged. It has touched with hellish power the deeper, baser feelings of humanity, and filled with hope those who live by rapine, and revel in the blood of their victims. It has aroused, as by a new license to crime, the murderous rioters of New York, Baltimore, and New Orleans. Nor has it effected less sensibly the foreign adventurers in our midst, and that large class of restless spirits among us who are happiest amid the frenzy and confusion of revolution.

It is nothing less than the formal announcement of a deliberate purpose to set aside the acts of Congress, and destroy the governments which the people of the South have created for themselves. It is an avowed denial of the rights of Congress to legislate for a State, which had of purpose destroyed its government that Congress had solemnly recognized; it is a denunciation of the loyal people of the South, and a declaration that they are revolutionists and usurpers. Were this all we should treat these declarations of Mr. Blair as a bagatelle, but he proposes to carry his plan into execution by force of arms; to employ the army and navy of the United States to crush its loyal citizens, and elevate traitors to places of trust and power. Such is the theory and purpose of General Blair, and as such we hesitate not to pronounce upon it, as more infamous than the rebellion of the South, and more execrable than the assassination of President Lincoln. And knowing the stuff of which the loyal people of the South are made, the profundity of their political convictions, and their religious purpose to defend their rights, we forewarn the Democratic party that any attempt to overthrow our State government will be resisted by an armed resistance, no matter what may be the sacrifice of life that may follow. Let Mr. Blair and the revolutionists then take warning.

On the other hand we are confident that if the new State governments of the South are not disturbed, their supporters will be wise and generous toward the disfranchised: that the rights of all will be protected: that order will be restored to society: that the courts of justice will be pure; schools of learning opened to all; the altars of religion sacredly guarded, and every branch of industry will be advanced beyond any point attained in the past. Therefore we earnestly call upon all good citizens to vote for Grant, whose election will be the crowning glory of our victorious arms.

WASHINGTON, August 6, 1868.

The fraud bubble alluded to in a former letter has burst, and as then predicted, the charge turns out to be the creation of fancy, or something worse—the result of malignity and ambition. The special committee of Congress, to whom the examination was intrusted, find nothing "worthy of death or of bonds" in any case, and devote a paragraph especially to the exculpation of Mr. E. B. French, Second Auditor, and Mr. C. P. Blackmar, one of the leading clerks in the office. Where these gentlemen are known, the attempt to cast suspicion on their integrity is as foolish as it is wicked.

Two prominent and worthy laymen of the Methodist Episcopal Church in this district, passed last week to their "long home"—Mr. Thomas Woodward and Mr. Edward Lacy. Both had filled the measure of their days, and sat for the picture drawn by Solomon—"The hoary head is a crown of glory, if it is found in the way of righteousness." Mr. Woodward was the son-in-law of the celebrated Rev. Stephen George Rosszel, and for sixty years had retained his place in the church; for many years he was Deputy United States Marshal for the District of Columbia, and through all the virtue-testing scenes incident to that office, he passed without spot. There is a beauty and a moral grandeur investing such a character. Standing out as it does amid the prostrate forms of others who built on sand, which the floods of temptation swept away. If virtue is to shine more brilliantly in one place than another, surely it ought to be among public men, and how sad the truth, public men and virtue are generally divorced. Mr. Woodward's attachment to the Methodist ministry was unsurpassed; no kinder heart ever beat than his. Mr. Lacy was unmarried; he was a man of an eccentric condition of mind, rather baffling analysis when considered in connection with his business capacity on the one hand and his consistent character and large benevolence on the other. A community can ill spare such a man, who, though in one respect lived to himself, yet in the noblest sense he lived for others.

General O. O. Howard left yesterday on a tour of the Gulf States to inspect the affairs connected with his department. Would that all public men, military and civil, were such "prophets" as he.

At this writing Hon. Thaddeus Stevens is very ill.

Through travel has been resumed on the Baltimore and Ohio railroad by the aid of coaches between certain points in the flood district. The railroad culverts in that region suffered more than the track.

The destruction at Ellicott city is appalling. Dr. Owings, the father of six children, had left home for a short time to see a patient. On returning he found the flood between him and his family, though within speaking distance. He directed his wife how to secure herself and the six children. Soon they were driven to the roof of the house and clung to the chimney, but soon the chimney was rocked from its base and fell. Before this, however, another child three weeks old had been committed by its brother, Mr. Marschane, to Mrs. Owings, as it was thought to be safer there than with its mother. The hope was delusive. The resistless flood swept away the house. It lodged against another. A hole was cut through this to rescue the family. The efforts were not vain. Thus the walls of seven houses were cut through by the heroic efforts of Mr. Fountain, till the last in the row was reached. Here were gathered the families of the six houses above; but soon it trembled under the shock; a moment more it fell, and the men, women, and children of six families were seen no more! Dr. Owings stood the agonizing witness of this scene, and was carried from it in a phrenzied state to a hotel. The poor man is still raging in unmitigated anguish.

There is great activity in building in this city this season, though the city government is powerless for good, owing to the failure of the Board of Aldermen to organize. There are six or seven men who seem to think they were elected to serve a certain party and not the interests of the city. It is to be hoped that in an amended charter of this city there will be a remedy provided for such babyism.

"Liberty of speech," it was supposed, had been secured to the Gulf States, but your Canal street mob the other evening would indicate otherwise. When will this detestable spirit of persecution cease? All persecution is of Satan no matter by whomsoever or for what purpose waged. The curse of our times is a disregard of law, of personal rights, and public peace.

A new camp of instruction, it is said, will soon be established at Lincoln depot in this city, and to that all the troops in this district will be transferred.

The season now is most delightful; fields and gardens have revived.

MORDECAI.

Western Advocate.

The Western objects to our placing the name of Grant at the head of our columns. Why? Is the Cincinnati editor opposed to Grant? If he is, let him speak out. There is so much of Christianity involved in the coming Presidential election that we shall consider our church papers recreant to God and humanity if they do not speak out for Grant and Colfax. And this, we trow, they will do, God being their helper. It is no secret that the spirit and letter of our religious press favor Grant's election, and it is only a little more favor to put the great General's name at the head of the column.

When the editor of the Western opposes lay delegation does he "commit the whole church to his policy?" Certainly not. He expresses an individual opinion; and there are hundreds of his readers who neither agree with him in opinion or are convinced by his arguments. Does our Western brother take the ground that a church editor is to advocate only what has been approved by the General Conference, and that which meets the favor of the whole church? Unanimity can not be had on any question. Were this the rule, our church journals would be as stale as the codified laws of a modern Legislature. It is the duty of the editor to lead the people, and it is no less an obligation to control the political opinions of this country than to create moral sentiments. If the Western has Seymour readers, we do not know of a man in the South among our subscribers who is not a Grant man.

Dr. Merrill is quite inclined to write on Southern matters—but not always correctly. Some time since he wrote in favor of consolidating the colored Methodists into a separate organization, which is fostering caste in the church of God, and which would expose the blacks to sad consequences; and now he takes us to task for putting the name of Grant at the head of our column, which is another illustration that he does not understand the situation. A little more time on the editorial tripod will enable him to see things as other men see them. Not less than 50,000 colored voters, directly or indirectly, look to the New Orleans Advocate for political guidance. Only a few of them can read our editorials on the great political questions of the day, but nearly all of them, having learned their alphabet, can spell out the name of Grant in big letters at the head of our column; and were it necessary to secure the election we would fill every line of the New Orleans Advocate with the name of Grant.

[For the New Orleans Advocate.]

What is Your Apology?

Republicanism in its first visits to the South has ever been scornfully received. Its messengers have been murdered, tarred and feathered, imprisoned, disgraced, or scoffed and hooted away from Southern society. But when its brave heralds have secured a foothold, its messages have been derided in all the high places of the South, and compelled to circulate among the poor, the humble, and oppressed. The ruling classes here who are indebted for all they really enjoy to Republicanism, look down with infinite scorn upon the generous and gifted adherents of that cause who wish to bring prosperity and peace to the South.

To chain and lash humanity, to ravage, burn, and rob, to live by rapine like the most ferocious beasts, is esteemed honorable, noble, chivalric, and godlike. The butchers of mankind are the "very head and front" of Democracy in the civilized and professedly Christianized Sunny South. To accumulate wealth by the sweat of the brow, by the actual creation of wealth and by industry, is deemed ignoble and degrading.

To bring forward the purest and highest freedom, to abolish all ignorance, misery and crime, and introduce prosperity and endless ages of human happiness, is an offense against which mobs armed with revolvers, bowie knives, and bludgeons arise, and the fires of rebellion are kindled. The laws of eternal justice, truth, and Liberty are reversed. The highest virtue is esteemed the highest crime, while crime itself is almost canonized.

Rebellion is called holy, and sits in high places, while Republicanism is compelled to seek its audience among the lowly and the poor. Why is this? Does Republicanism come from below or above? Is it lifted from the gutter like a crawling worm, when it is admitted to the society of the South, or does it come, bright with peace, prosperity, universal education, and suffrage, liberty, and equality before the law, and clothed with majestic authority, on a mission of kindness to suffering humanity?

Long, long enough, has the order of justice been subverted. Slavery placed above liberty, robbery above industry, wealth above intelligence, disloyalty above loyalty. Republicanism, the guiding and redeeming power, has ever been proscribed by the tyrants that ruled the Sunny South. Every step of its progress has been made at the point of the bayonet. From the Fourth of July, 1776, down to the late war, its undaunted adherents have been surrounded by a scowling multitude, breathing curses, pouring out anathemas, and threatening vengeance. They have been called "mendicant loyalists," "scallawags," "carpet baggers," "negro worshippers," "devil's preachers," and every ingenious form of language has been used to insinuate charges which could not be openly asserted.

That scowling multitude still hovers around us, but is powerless for mischief.

They must content their domineering spirit by repeating false charges of evil designs.

Yes, after the triumphant demonstration of the late election, we still find editors who are stolid or shameless enough to denounce Republicanism as an evil.

How dare you, sirs, Messrs. Editors of Democrat journals, and orators, denounce what is daily demonstrated throughout the land? How dare you denounce Republicanism, when millions of its advocates rallied around the Star Spangled Banner, to quell the rebellion inaugurated by Southern Democrats and Northern Copperheads?

When all your prophecies concerning the calling of a slave roll on Boston Common, and the success of a Confederacy having slavery for its basis have been falsified, when the Goddess of Liberty and Republicanism has established itself by irresistible demonstration, and universal suffrage and equality before the law have forced themselves upon their most reluctant opposers, how dare you still talk of the Republicans as "scallawags," etc.? Above all, how dare you villify the men who have sustained Republicanism at the risk of their reputation, lives, and all their worldly prosperity, in the face of your opposition?

And now that the advocates of Republicanism have thrown down all your sophistry and outlived all your slander, WHAT IS YOUR APOLOGY for the past, and what are your promises for the future?

F. K. H.

A young French gentleman, five years of age, was approached with childish endearments by an infant of eighteen months. "Don't you see," said the mother, "that the baby wants to kiss you?" "Yes," replied young France, indignantly, "that's because he takes me for his papa."

The Catholic Messenger.

What a lover of truth must be the editor of the above journal. Does he know why the Jesuits were driven from every country in Europe?

Were those "bad Catholics" who were guilty of the massacre of Protestants on St. Bartholemew's day, and was it a bad Pope who ordered a "Te Deum" in all Catholic churches for that and other horrible murders in the interest of the Papacy?

Was Philip Second of Spain a bad Catholic?

Does he know that a few days since the Catholic priest in St. Martinsville, bribed by the persecutors of colored men and school teachers, celebrated a mass to prevent the inauguration of our Republican Governor and Lieutenant Governor elect.

Hear what this editor says:

The church does not interfere in the slightest particular with the legitimate duties and prerogatives of the secular government, whether it be orthodox, heretic, infidel, or pagan. On the contrary, in every case, it throws the sanction of religion around the loyalty of the citizen, even as it insists on the obedience of children to parents whose tenets may be of the same varied character. Persecutions have taken place in Catholic countries, but it was always in opposition to the teaching of the church, and only because the leaders of such persecutions were bad Catholics. In a popular form of government, where all could be heard, it could never happen.

With or without persecution, however, Catholicity must soon be the predominant religion in America. The enthusiasm of Protestantism is dead forever, and Infidelity never had any. Our new continent is under the patronage of the Immaculate Conception, and the light of the beautiful Morning Star will not take long to usher in a cloudless day.

Does he not know that the Rev. Father Ferreti in his late allocution on bulls respecting Austria says: "We reprove and condemn by our apostolic authority the laws enumerated, and everything general and special in those same laws (laws establishing freedom of the press, religious liberty, public schools, legal marriage, and rites of sepulture for all.) We declare those decrees null and powerless in themselves and in their effect, both as regards the present and future."

Is this your non-interference with secular governments, Mr. Archbishop Odin? The Prime Minister of Austion, Baron Von Briest, differs greatly with you, and has forwarded a dispatch to Rome, in which he states that he regards the issue of the recent allocution on the state of religion in Austria as an act of "intermeddling" on the part of the Pope with the domestic legislation of the Empire. We have no quarrel with our Roman Catholic fellow citizens and brethren, but we ask in all kindness, is their hoped-for and prophecied predominance to be gained by the means employed in their New Orleans organ?

Notices of Periodicals, etc.

Peter's Monthly Gleehive for August, $3 per annum, New York, contains "Hail, all Hail to Love," for three voices and in three languages, "Popping Corn," a quartette, "Think Mighty God," "Great the Joy," "Sleep Well, Sweet Angel," for guitar, "Beautiful Girl of the South," a quartette for guitar, "She Dwelleth now in Heaven," "Faithless Swallow," a hive of sweet melodies.

Peter's Parlor Companion contains "La Belle Helena," quadrille, "Grand Duchesse," galop, fifteen pages of music.

The American Artisan and Patent Record, with a great variety of information for engineers, machinists, inventors, and philosophers, solid reading, and illustrated by wood cuts in abundance. Published by Brown, Coombs & Co., New York, at $2 50 a year.

Appleton's Railway Guide, August. Price twenty-five cents. New York. All the new and old routes of travel, anecdotes and incidents, guide to watering places, index of 8000 towns, etc., list of hotels, large map. A valuable traveling companion.

Harper's Bazar of August 15 contains "Summer Toilets," "Netting Devices," "Embroidery," "Pelted with Roses," "Stop the Hanging," "Victims of the Fair." Articles on "Vacations," "Manners," "Ride in the Dark," "Paris Correspondence," "Household Angel." A charming number.

Harper's Weekly, August 15. Beautiful illustrations, as "Reconstruction," "Emigrants at Castle Garden, New York," "Up Among the Nineties," "Village Depot," "Zouave Drills," "Out of Town," "The Lost Cause," humorous and instructive pictures. Articles on "Views of a Democrat," "At the Point of the Bayonet," "Naturalized Citizens," and other telling leaders. Stories "Pluck and Luck," "Shannon's Model," and much other good reading.

The Household for August. This welcome serial contains articles on diet, etiquette, fashion; a good paper by our friend, Dr. C. B. White; "A Talk about what we Read;" one on "Ventilation," on "Care of Infants," "Blisters," "Lottery Tickets." Published by Milliken & Crowell, Brattleboro, Vermont; $1 a year.

The Cretan, with colored map of the island, and devoted to information about the struggling Greeks, with earnest appeals for aid. Those who have means and hearts to feel may send to S. G. Howe, 20 Bloomfield street, Boston, Mass.

The Prodigal Son, by Punshon, has been largely noticed by the press. Is a well gotten up pamphlet of ninety-six pages, published by Roberts Bros., Boston; full of Gospel marrow and fatness.

An Address, by John A. Riddle, on "Sterility," delivered before the Bedford (New Hampshire) Farmers' Club. Briefly and simply, the farmer is taught lessons of wisdom about his crops.

Sixteenth Annual Report of the New York Young Men's Christian Association. Spacious rooms are provided, a large library, classes for different studies, courses of lectures, and committees to see after young people under all circumstances and lead them to Christ. There are more than 500 such associations now in America doing a vast amount of good.

Catalogues are received of the Pittsburg Female College and of the Lasell Female Seminary, Auburndale, Massachusetts, showing goodly lists of pupils and offering large inducements to patrons. Both are old and valued institutions.

Immoral Legislation.

Certain parties have endeavored to bribe the good people of Louisiana with $40,000, and probably with smaller sums various members of the Legislature, to give them a monopoly of the lottery gambling business for twenty-five years. The bill has passed both Houses and gone to the Governor who will not tarnish his splendid record by signing it. We give below the noble protest of Speaker Lowell on placing his name to the iniquity as required by law, and the less pronounced but decided protest of Lieutenant Governor Dunn. Never had men a grander opportunity to earn a patent of nobility, and make lasting records of honor and patriotism than the members of this Legislature, most of them for the first time in public life. Let them not disappoint their friends and gratify their enemies who are the foes of liberty, justice, and the Union. Already they are taunted as mercenary and unprincipled. Much indulgence should be accorded them in their new role of legislators, their citadel in the enemies' camp and amid the perplexities of a bankrupt commonwealth, forced to make brick without straw. In the main they have done nobly, and we do not doubt that these men of the people will prove themselves worthy of the confidence their constituents have placed in them.

SPEAKER LOWELL'S PROTEST.

I desire to place upon the journal of the House my objections to House bill No. 66, entitled an act to increase the revenues of the State, and to authorize the incorporation and establishment of the Louisiana State Lottery Company, and to repeal certain acts now in force.

The bill legalizes and sanctions what I consider a great wrong, fosters immortality and vice, and encourages crime; lotteries never being productive of any good, but always conducive to evil, robbing the poor by their seductive charms and infatuations.

This bill creates a monstrous monopoly without any safeguard or assurance that it will not be abused immeasurably. If a lottery is to be established by law there should be a board of control to examine and supervise the conduct of the same. By the provisions of this bill a wholesale robbery can be committed without restriction.

The House passed the bill when there was no quorum present in the bar of the House, undertaking themselves to adjudge what a quorum consisted of, when the constitution expressly states that a majority of the members of the House shall be necessary for a quorum; and the same constitution says that the House of Representatives shall be composed of 101 members.

LIEUTENANT GOVERNOR DUNN'S PROTEST.

I will state to the Senate that House bill No. 66, known as the Lottery Bill, is before me for my signature. The law requires me to sign it, but I do so under protest. I regard it as a monopoly and a detriment to the financial interests of the city and State. I wish my protest spread upon the minutes.

The Church Union.

A notice of this mammoth sheet four feet six by three feet four inches, is quite an undertaking. Dr. Thompson's excellent sermon on the Theocratic principle fills six of these enormous columns, and well rewards perusal. His argument is that the religion of the Bible is our only safety as a nation. The divine command, "thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself" must be regarded.

Close communion gets another deserved castigation.

"The treachery of Andrew Johnson" is fairly dealt with.

Speculations about the age of the Saviour, contending for fifty-two and a half instead of thirty-three years as commonly believed. Beautiful articles on "The Conversion of Children." Mr. Hammond's method. Nearly six columns about the "Wickedest man in New York," more fairly and christianly treated than in Harper or other secular papers. Many other excellent articles.

Correspondance Particuliere de France.

PAR B. GALLIENNE, FILS.

Lundi matin je pris la malle pour aller à Paris. Mon épouse en fut si ravie qu'elle voulut être de la partie. Elle insista même que notre jeune enfant restât sur mes genoux le long du voyage. La malle n'est autre chose qu'une diligence divisée en trois compartiments pour la commodité et selon la bourse des voyageurs, dont le nombre n'est jamais moindre de vingt à vingt-cinq, exclusif du bagage, qui y trouve une place en sureté. On ne fait pas attention à une demi-douzaine de gardes qui se placent comme ils peuvent sans gêner personne.

La première ville d'importance que nous vîmes fut Montpélier, célèbre par son école de médecine et par une infinité de monuments qui lui restent des siècles derniers. Nous nous y arrêtâmes comme des voyageurs curieux et bien disposés à mettre à profit le temps que le conducteur leur donne pour se rafraichir.

Entr'autres choses que nous rapporterons ici c'est l'élégance, la propreté et la bonne police des stations de chemins de fer. Le voyageur prend son cachet sans être obligé de se mêler à aucune foule. Puis il voit peser et charger son bagage; puis il passe dans un salon élégant, où il attend le signal du départ. Arrivé à destination vous n'avez nullement à vous occuper de votre bagage; il est en sureté à la place que vous avez indiquée.

Je passe sous silence toutes les merveilles qui s'offrirent à nos yeux pendant notre voyage de Montpelier, où nous quittâmes la diligence pour prendre le chemin de fer jusqu'à Paris. Je dirai simplement que ma femme s'écria "déjà!" en voyant cette capitale devant nous.

Nous y arrivâmes assez tôt pour assister aux réunions des différentes sociétés Protestantes. C'était au mois de mai dernier. J'assistai d'abord à la conférence annuelle des ministres orthodoxes et des anciens de toutes les églises Protestantes libres. Environ 150 de ces messieurs étaient présents dans la salle qui est réservée dans l'oratoire pour le service de l'église Protestante nationale. Quel spectacle digne d'admiration! Là étaient les vénérables Grandpierre, de l'église nationale; Fisch, de l'église libre; là était le célèbre Bost, dont la musique sacrée est chantée dans les églises Protestantes aussi bien que dans les salons les plus élégants de France. L'histoire de chacun de ces hommes vénérables serait un digne monument de progrès social actuel pour les générations futures. Mais, hélas! je ne reconnais que ma faiblesse devant ces génies immortels! Le texte dont je me souviens c'est: Justification par la foi. La veille un jeune ministre luthérien avait traité ce sujet d'après le rite arménien. Il dit: "Nous n'allons pas copier les réformateurs, mais nous suivrons leur principes. Nous opèrerons selon des formes nouvelles." Il continue en soutenant que la foi est une base essentielle au salut de l'âme, et que le repentir, l'amour de Dieu et du prochain ne sont pas moins essentiels que l'obéissance. Les autres sujets de controverse ne servent qu'à établir un seul point: c'est que le calvinisme en France perd son autorité; le méthodisme le remplace presque partout. J'ai assisté ensuite à la conférence annuelle de la Société Biblique de Paris. Guizot y présidait. Il fit un long discours dans le style académique, où il raconta les commencements de cette société, ses moyens, ses ressources et son influence biblique.

Mais ce qui m'a le plus intéressé c'est la réunion de trois mille enfants chantant les louanges de l'Eternel et étudiant sa parole dans le livre saint. Monsieur Paumier, au nom de l'Impératrice, a fait présent à cette assemblée de chérubins d'une bannière en soie verte, garnie de broderies en or tracées avec un art et un gout exquis. Monsieur Jaulmes, ministre méthodiste, a répondu à son discours avec tant d'esprit et d'à-propos que l'honneur de la journée lui est resté.

The Lafayette Advertiser, of Vermillionville, takes us to task for a communication we copied from the Republican regarding disorders in that parish. We have no data for the matters referred to, but can place little reliance on the Advertiser's indorsement of his friends, while the diabolical murderers of the colored man referred to are at large, and another murderer is let out on bail, as the editor admits. As to the man and woman reported killed and others wounded last month, we are informed it did occur in Lafayette parish. The former owner of some colored people sold them beef not his own, and when likely to be exposed endeavored to kill the witnesses, one of whom escaped. Several white men were engaged in the outrage, one of whom was arrested but discharged on bail. Our friend's zeal for his good name is commendable. We are glad to say that his parish is far more quiet than some others, and it is probably owing in a great degree to the "white skin bipeds" he is so anxious to drive off, and whose stay he proposes to "make so unpleasant that they will leave."

The Proposed New System of Public Education.

The proposed new system of free public education for this State attracts universal attention. On no question is the public mind more deeply interested than on this.

The failure of the former school system; the vast number of inhabitants in this State who are unable either to read or write; the utter disregard of the aristocratic element in regard to public education, and the warm desire of the poor for it, all tend to make the question one of deep, universal interest. The old system lacked harmony, and consequently it could not have been efficient. The power of the State Superintendent was gradually taken away by successive Legislatures so that he could exercise no salutary influence or control over the schools. The Police Juries were generally neglectful of their duty in regard to education in their respective parishes, and the Treasurers of the school funds, in not a few instances, were either allowed to pocket them or divide them among a company of favorites who used to run the local machines in the various districts.

The new system proposed on Monday by the House committee, and prepared, as we understand, by Mr. Conway, the present State Superintendent, aims at a complete remedy of all the old evils from which the State has suffered so long and so terribly. The old school laws of the State are entirely ignored. Not a line of them is preserved. A completely new system is offered. It first proposes a State Board of Education, consisting of the Lieutenant Governor as chairman, and six others, to be appointed by the Governor and confirmed by the Senate. To this Board will be given the power to manage the public schools of the whole State, and to receive and disburse all school moneys. It then prescribes the powers and duties of the State Superintendent, who is declared, in accordance with the constitutional provision, to be vested with the power of control and supervision of all the public schools of the State, and who shall be the executive officer of the State School Board.

It provides for the appointment in each city and parish of a Board of Public School Commissioners to be appointed by the State Superintendent, and confirmed by the State Board, in like manner as the appointees of the Governor on the State Board, are confirmed by the Senate.

It provides for the division of the State into six General School District, each general district to embrace several parishes, and for the appointment to each of a General District Director who shall be to each district so created what County Superintendents are to the Northern States, where free schools have been worked up to a degree of success almost without parallel. These General District Directors are to be appointed by the State Superintendent, and confirmed and their salary fixed by the State Board.

It provides for a division of each parish into school districts of not more than ten miles square.

It provides for a uniform system of text-books to be used in all the public schools of the State, and for a State Normal school; for high schools in each parish, or for a number of parishes combined; and for a system of scholarships for the encouragement of young men and women whose desire may be to fit themselves for the work of public school teaching in this State. Each scholarship shall amount, if a high school or Normal school scholarship, to two hundred and fifty dollars per annum; and if a college or university scholarship, to three hundred and fifty dollars per annum. There shall be two for each member of the House of Representatives, and one for each Senator—two hundred and thirty-eight in all. The students entitled to receive this encouragement shall be nominated by the respective Parish Commissioners, and appointed by the State Superintendent.

The system also provides, like that of Prussia and the State of Massachusetts, for compulsory education. No child, whether he be an orphan or an apprentice, or with parents who are capable of supporting and educating him, can be allowed to grow up in ignorance, and such as are wholly neglected by parents or guardians may be taken by the justice of the peace and turned over to the care of the State School Board, whose duty it shall be to educate them at least six months in each year.

In addition to the poll tax authorized by the State Constitution for public school purposes, it is proposed to levy a tax of twenty-five cents on each hundred dollar's worth of property throughout the State, which shall be collected as other taxes are, and at the same time. The schools are to be free to all, regardless of color, and certain penalties are prescribed for those who interfere with them in the pursuit for which they are established.

We consider the system as complete as it is simple and practicable.

That it will be adopted with but little if any alteration, we can scarcely doubt.

The author of the bill must have given the subject a vast amount of careful study.

If it be adopted, we can hardly see why a thorough system of education may not be in operation in this State within the next year.

The labor necessary to the success of a system of public education, in this State particularly, is very great, and we are glad to witness a disposition on the part of the Legislature to give the State Superintendent all needful aid in this regard.

The American Tract Society, Boston, Massachusetts, has generously given us notice that the little Freedman paper, which is so highly prized and is doing so much good in our Sunday schools throughout Western Louisiana, will be supplied as heretofore without charge until the close of the year. This favor is highly appreciated because in many places the poverty of the people is such that even the postage is paid with difficulty.

LAWS OF THE UNITED STATES,

Passed at the Second Session of the Fortieth Congress.

[PUBLIC—No. 66.]

AN ACT to incorporate the National Hotel Company, of Washington city.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That George H. Calvert, R. C. Weightman, James C. McGuire, Zeph English, George H. Calvert, jr., and Charles B. Calvert, their associates, successors, and assigns, are hereby created a body corporate and politic by the name of the National Hotel Company, in the city of Washington, in the District of Columbia, and by that name they are made capable of taking, holding, managing, improving, purchasing, leasing, for the sole purpose of erecting and maintaining a hotel as aforesaid, real and personal estate within said city of Washington, not exceeding five hundred thousand dollars in value; said corporation to have a common seal, and the same may break, alter, and renew at pleasure; may prosecute and defend suits before all proper courts and tribunals; may make and ordain by-laws for the government of said corporation, and may have and enjoy all of those privileges and be subject to all of the liabilities which corporations for the holding, management, and improvement of real estate in the city of Washington, in the United States, usually enjoy or are made subject to.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, [That] the capital stock of the said company shall not be less than two hundred and twenty-seven thousand dollars, be divided into shares of five hundred dollars each, and shall be deemed personal estate, and be transferable upon the books of the said corporation.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, [That] the officers of the said corporation shall consist of a president and treasurer, with a board of directors, of whom the president and treasurer may be members, but the number of the directors may be fixed by the shareholders in the by-laws of the corporation. The president shall preside at the meetings of the corporation, sign certificates of the stock issued to stockholders, and shall have a general oversight over the business and affairs of the corporation; the treasurer shall safely keep and disburse all of the moneys of the corporation under the direction of the board of directors; the directors shall manage and control the property of the corporation, and make contracts in relation thereto; the treasurer, or other officer appointed by the by-laws, shall keep the records of the transactions of the corporation, and shall countersign the certificates of stock issued to the stockholders.

SEC. 4. Be it further enacted, [That] all the officers of the said corporation shall hold their offices for one year, and until their successors are elected and qualified to act, unless they shall be sooner removed by the directors. The first meeting of the corporation may be called by any person named herein by giving previous notice of not less than five days, to all the other persons herein named, of the time and place of such meeting. The annual meetings hereafter shall be called by the treasurer or other officer designated by the board, and be held in the city of Washington, at the National Hotel building, on the first Wednesday in January in each year, notice of which shall be sent to the postoffice address of each stockholder for ten days before the time for the holding of such meeting; and special meetings of the corporation may be called in the manner and time to be prescribed by the stockholders.

SEC. 5. And be it further enacted, That each stockholder shall be individually liable for the debts of the corporation to the amount of stock held by each respectively; and Congress hereby reserves the right to amend, alter, or repeal this charter at pleasure.

Approved July 13, 1868.

JOINT RESOLUTION to correct an act entitled "An act for the relief of certain exporters of rum."

Be it resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the word "and" where it occurs in said act after the word "export" and before the words "actually contracted" be changed to "or" so that the corrected act shall read "intended for export or actually contracted for."

Approved July 7, 1868.

[PUBLIC RESOLUTION—No. 40.]

JOINT RESOLUTION in relation to the erection of a bridge in Boston harbor.

Be it resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Navy shall detail two competent and impartial officers of the navy, and the Secretary of War shall detail a competent and impartial officer of the engineer corps, who shall compose a commission, whose duty it shall be to make careful examination of the harbor of Boston, and shall report to Congress at its next session in what manner the commerce of said harbor, and the interests of the United States in the navy yard at Charlestown will be affected by the construction of a bridge over the water between the main land in the city of Boston, and East Boston, in the manner provided in an act of the Legislature of the State of Massachusetts, entitled "An act to incorporate the Maverick Bridge Company;" and no bridge shall be erected by said company across said water until the assent of Congress shall be given thereto.

Approved July 17, 1868.

[PUBLIC—No. 65.]

AN ACT to incorporate the Connecticut Avenue and Park Railway Company, in the District of Columbia.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That Augustus B. Stoughton, John Little, John L. Kidwell, George H. Plant, Le Roy Tuttle, G. W. Hopkins, R. M. Hall, and their associates and assigns, be, and they are hereby, created a body corporate, under the name of the "Connecticut Avenue and Park Railway Company," with authority to construct and lay down a single or double track railway, with the necessary switches and turnouts, in the city of Washington, in the District of Columbia, through and along the following avenues, streets, and highways: Commencing at the intersection of Seventeenth street west and Pennsylvania avenue, along the west side of Seventeenth street to its intersection with H street north, thence along Seventeenth street west to its intersection with Connecticut avenue, thence along said avenue to Boundary street; also, from the intersection of Boundary street and Connecticut avenue along the county road from such intersection, thence on any road opened, or which may hereafter be opened, west of the Fourteenth street road to within or through the proposed public park, or to the county line of Washington county, with the right to run public carriages thereon drawn by horse-power, receiving therefor a rate of fare not exceeding six cents a passenger for any distance on said road: Provided, That should a majority of stockholders so elect, said road, after reaching the intersection of Boundary street and Connecticut avenue, instead of continuing from said intersection up the county road now opened, may be constructed along Boundary street in the direction of Meridian Hill to any county road opened, or which may hereafter be opened, west of Sixteenth street west, and thence along said county road by the most practicable route to the terminus near, at, in, or through the proposed park, as hereinbefore provided.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That said road shall be deemed real estate, and together with other real and personal property of said body corporate, shall be liable to taxation as other real estate and personal property, and to license for their vehicles or cars in the city and county aforesaid, except as hereinafter provided.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That the said railway shall be laid in the centres of the avenues and streets in the city, (excepting Seventeenth street, there it shall be laid as hereinbefore provided for,) as near as may be without interfering with or passing over the water or gas pipes, in the most approved manner adapted for street railways, with rails of the most approved pattern to be determined by the Secretary of the Interior, laid upon an even surface with the pavement of the streets or avenues; and the space between the two tracks, when two are laid, shall not be less than four feet, nor more than six feet; and the carriages shall not be less than six feet in width, the gauge to correspond with that of the Washington and Georgetown railroad. That the railway in the county shall be laid in such manner as will least interfere with the ordinary travel of the roads on which the said track shall be laid.

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That the said corporation hereby created shall be bound to keep said tracks, and for a space of two feet beyond the outer rail thereof, and also the space between the tracks, at all times well paved and in good order without expense to the United States, the city, or county of Washington.

SEC. 5. And be it further enacted, That nothing in this act shall prevent the government at any time at their option from altering the grade or otherwise improving all avenues and streets occupied by said road, or the city of Washington from so altering or improving such streets and avenues and the sewerage thereof, as may be under their respective authority and control; and in such event it shall be the duty of said company to change their said railway so as to conform to such grade and pavement.

SEC. 6. And be it further enacted, That this act may at any time be altered, amended, or repealed by the Congress of the United States.

SEC. 7. And be it further enacted, That nothing in this act shall be so construed as to authorize said body corporate to issue any note, token, device, scrip, or other evidence of debt to be used as a currency.

SEC. 8. And be it further enacted, That the capital stock of said company shall not be less than fifty thousand dollars, nor more than two hundred thousand dollars, and that the stock shall be divided into shares of twenty five dollars each, and shall be deemed personal property, transferable in such manner as the by-laws of said company may direct.

SEC. 9. And be it further enacted, That the said company shall place first-class cars on said railway, with all the modern improvements for the convenience and comfort of passengers, and shall run cars thereon during the day as often as every ten minutes, between Pennsylvania avenue and Boundary street, and through the day and night on the entire road, or such portions as may be completed, as often as the public convenience may require.

SEC. 10. And be it further enacted, That the said company shall procure such passenger rooms, ticket offices, stables, and depots, at such points as the business of the railroad and the convenience of the public may require. And said company is hereby authorized to lay such rails through transverse or other streets as may be necessary for the exclusive purpose of connecting the said stables and depots with the main tracks. And the said company is hereby authorized to purchase or lease such lands or buildings as may be necessary for the passenger rooms, ticket offices, stables, and depots above mentioned.

SEC. 11. And be it further enacted, That all articles of value that may be inadvertently left in any of the cars or other vehicles of the said company shall be taken to their principal depot, and entered in a book of record of unclaimed goods, which book shall be open to the inspection of the public at all reasonable hours of business.

SEC. 12. And be it further enacted, That within thirty days after the passage of this act the corporators named in the first section, or a majority of them, or if any refuse or neglect to act, then a majority of the remainder, shall cause books of subscription to the capital stock of said company to be opened and kept open, in some convenient and accessible place in the city of Washington, from nine o'clock in the forenoon until three o'clock in the afternoon, for a period, to be fixed by said corporators, not less than two days, and said corporators shall give public notice by advertisement in the daily papers published in the city of Washington of the time when and the place where said books shall be opened; and subscribers upon said books to the capital stock of the company shall be held to be stockholders: Provided, That no one individual shall be allowed to subscribe for more than one hundred shares of said stock: Provided further, That every subscriber shall pay at the time of subscribing twenty-five per centum of the amount by him subscribed to the treasurer appointed by the corporators, or his subscription shall be null and void. If at the end of two days, a larger amount than the capital stock of said company shall have been subscribed, the books shall be closed, and the said corporators named in the first section shall forthwith proceed to apportion said capital stock among the subscribers pro rata and make public proclamation of the number of shares allotted to each, which shall be done and completed on the same day the books are closed: Provided further, That nothing shall be received in payment of the twenty-five per centum at the time of subscribing except money. And when the books of subscription to the capital stock of said company shall be closed, the corporators named in the first section, or a majority of them, and in case any of them refuse or neglect to act, then a majority of the remainder, shall, within ten days thereafter, call the first meeting of the stockholders of said company, to meet within ten days thereafter for the choice of directors, of which public notice shall be given for five days in two public newspapers published daily in the city of Washington, or by written or printed personal notice to each stockholder by the clerk of the corporation. And in all meetings of stockholders each share shall entitle the holder to one vote, to be given in person, or by proxy.

SEC. 13. And be it further enacted, That the government and direction of the affairs of the company shall be vested in a board of directors, seven in number, who shall be stockholders, and who shall hold their office for one year, and until others are duly elected and qualified to take their places as directors. And the said directors (a majority of whom, the president being one, shall be a quorum) shall elect one of their number to be president of the board, who shall also be president of the company; and they shall also choose a treasurer, who shall give bonds with surety to said company, in such sum as the said directors may require, for the faithful discharge of his trust. In case of a vacancy in the board of directors by the death, resignation, or otherwise, of any director, the vacancy occasioned thereby shall be filled by the remaining directors.

SEC. 14. And be it further enacted, That the directors shall have full power to make and prescribe such by-laws, rules, and regulations as they shall deem needful and proper, tending the disposition and management of the stock, property, estate, and effects of the company, not contrary to the charter, or to the laws of the United States and the ordinances of the city and county of Washington: Provided, That the directors of said corporation shall have power to require the subscribers to the capital stock to pay the amount by them respectively subscribed at such time, after the first installment, in such manner and in such amounts as they may deem proper; and if any stockholder shall refuse or neglect to pay any installments, as required by a resolution of the board of directors, after reasonable notice of the same, the said board of directors may sell at public auction, to the highest bidder, so many shares of said stock as shall pay said installments, and the highest bidder shall be taken to be the person who offers to purchase the least number of shares for the assessment due, under such general regulations as may be adopted in the by-laws of said corporation, or may sue for or collect the same in any court of competent jurisdiction.

SEC. 15. And be it further enacted, That there shall be an annual meeting of the stockholders, for choice of directors, to be holden at such time and place, under such conditions and upon such notice as the said company in their by laws may prescribe; and said directors shall annually make a report, in writing, of their doings to Congress and to the stockholders.

SEC. 16. And be it further enacted, That the mayor, council of said city, and the levy court of said county, and the several officers of these corporations, and the said corporations, are hereby prohibited from doing any act or thing to hinder, delay, or obstruct the construction or operations of said railway, as herein authorized.

SEC. 17. And be it further enacted, That the said company shall have at all times the free and uninterrupted use of the road-way. And if any person or persons shall willfully and unnecessarily obstruct or impede the passage or destroy the cars, depot stations, or any other property belonging to said railway company, the person or persons so offending shall forfeit and pay for each such offense the sum of ten dollars to said company, to be recovered and disposed of as other fines and penalties in said city or county; and shall remain liable, in addition to said penalty, for any loss or damage occasioned by his, her, or their act, as aforesaid; but no suit shall be brought unless commenced within sixty days after such offense shall have been committed.

SEC. 18. And be it further enacted, That unless said corporation shall make and complete their said railway or railways between Pennsylvania avenue and Boundary street within eight months after the company shall have been organized, then this act shall be null and void, and no rights whatsoever shall be acquired under it; and that the remainder of said road shall be completed within four years to its proposed terminus in the county of Washington.

SEC. 19. And be it further enacted, That there shall be no regulations excluding any person from any car on account of color.

SEC. 20. And be it further enacted, That each of the stockholders in the "Connecticut Avenue and Park Railway Company" shall be individually liable for all the debt and liabilities of said company to an amount equal to the amount of stock held by such stockholder.

SEC. 21. And be it further enacted, That it shall be the duty of said company, when said road is completed between Pennsylvania avenue and Boundary street, to have prepared tickets for passengers on their cars, and to keep them at their office for sale by the package, at the rate of ten for fifty cents, and twenty for one dollar.

SEC. 22. And be it further enacted, That all the provisions of the act incorporating the Washington and Georgetown Railroad Company, requiring reports of expenditures, earnings, and otherwise, shall be applicable to the company herein incorporated, which shall make reports as in said act required.

SEC. 23. And be it further enacted, That all acts and parts of acts heretofore passed, which are inconsistent with any of the provisions of this act, are, for the purposes of this act, hereby repealed, so far as the same are inconsistent herewith.

Approved July 13, 1868.

[PUBLIC—No. 71.]

AN ACT to facilitate the settlement of certain prize cases in the southern district of Florida.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed, upon the execution and delivery to him by the administratrix of the estate of James C. Clapp, deceased, late United States marshal for the southern district of Florida, of a proper written release of all claims and demands for, or on account of, all costs, charges, fees, and expenses due, or claimed to be due, the said Clapp as marshal aforesaid, or to his estate, in any prize or other cases in said district, to accept from said administratrix the sum of fifty thousand dollars in full satisfaction of all claims and demands of the United States against the estate of the said James C. Clapp, and against the sureties in said Clapp's official bond, and that said sum of fifty thousand dollars when paid, together with the sums now on deposit with the assistant treasurer in New York to the credit of the said Clapp, and to the credit of the United States district court for the southern district of Florida, shall be deposited with the assistant United States treasurer at Washington, District of Columbia, subject to the order of the United States district court for the southern district of Florida, for the purpose of meeting decrees of distribution or restitution in the following prize causes pending in said district: Schooner Lucy No. 1, the cargo of the steamer Adela, schooner Alicia and cargo, schooner Isabel and cargo, the steamer James Battle, schooner Diana and cargo, schooner Sea Lion and cargo, the cargo of the steamer Nita, steamer Pearl and cargo, schooner Teresa No. 2, steamer Union, steamer Victor and cargo, and schooner John Williams.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized and directed to deposit with the assistant United States treasurer at Washington, District of Columbia, the appraised values of the prize steamers Adela and Nita, condemned in the said district court, and taken into the naval service, and after deducting all proper charges and expenses, a moiety of the same shall be distributed under the decree of the said district court, according to law, among the captors entitled to share in said prizes, the steamers Adela and Nita respectively, and the remaining moiety of the same shall be subject to the order of the said district court, as hereinafter provided.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That of the moneys mentioned in the first section of this act, when deposited as herein provided, there shall be retained by the said district court a sufficient fund to await final decrees in those of the cases enumerated in the first section of this act, wherein appeals have been taken to the Supreme Court of the United States, and that the balance of said moneys, together with one-half of the appraised values of the prize steamers Adela and Nita, mentioned in the second section of this act, shall be distributed as prize money among the captors in those of the cases enumerated in the first section of this act, in which final decrees of condemnation have been entered, and which are ready for distribution, without reference to the interest of the United States in and at of the said cases, which said interest of the United States in each of the said cases, and the proceeds for distribution therein, as well as the interest of the United States in the appraised value of the prize steamers Adela and Nita, is hereby relinquished for distribution to the captors in those of the cases enumerated and mentioned in the first section of this act wherein decrees of condemnation have been or shall be entered, and for payment to the claimants in those of said cases wherein final decrees of restitution have been or may be passed; and that in each of said cases wherein final decrees of condemnation and distribution have been or shall be entered, the sum to be paid into the treasury of the United States for distribution to the captors shall be one-half of the gross proceeds of sale in said cases, less the costs taxed and allowed by the court; Provided, That any sum or sums remaining after execution of all decrees of distribution and restitution as hereinbefore provided be paid into the treasury of the United States to the credit of the navy pension fund: And provided further, That nothing herein contained shall be deemed an admission on the part of the United States of any liability for the defalcation of the said Clapp as marshal aforesaid.

Approved July 20, 1868.

[PUBLIC—No. 72.]

AN ACT authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Missouri river upon the military reservation at Fort Leavenworth, Kansas.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That it shall be lawful for the Kansas and Missouri Bridge Company, a corporation having authority from the State of Kansas, to build a railroad, transit, and wagon bridge across the Missouri river, upon or near the military reservation of Fort Leavenworth, and that when constructed all trains of all roads terminating at the Missouri river at or near the location of said bridge, shall be allowed to cross said bridge for a reasonable compensation to be paid to the owners thereof. And in case of any litigation arising from any obstruction or alleged obstruction to the free navigation of said river, the cause may be tried before the district court of the United States of any State in which any portion of said obstruction or bridge touches.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That any bridge built under the provisions of this act shall not be in any case of less elevation than fifty feet above extreme high water mark, as understood at the point of location, to the bottom chord of the bridge; nor shall the spans be of less than two hundred and fifty feet in length, in the clear, and the piers of said bridge shall be parallel with the current of the river, and the main span shall be over the main channel of the river, at low water.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That for the use of railroads leading to said bridge from either side of the river there is hereby granted a right of way through said Fort Leavenworth military reservation not exceeding for all of said roads three hundred feet in width: Provided, That said roads do not in any way interfere with the public buildings on said military reservation.

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That the Kansas and Missouri bridge be and the same is hereby established as a post road, and that said bridge company shall have the right to take from said reservation, at such places as shall be designated by the Secretary of War, all stone, timber, and earth necessary to use in the construction of said bridge.

SEC. 5. And be it further enacted, That the right to alter or amend this act, so as to prevent or remove all material obstructions to the navigation of said river by the construction of bridges, is hereby expressly reserved.

SEC. 6. And be it further enacted, That it shall be lawful for the Saint Joseph and Denver City Railroad Company, a corporation created by the laws of the State of Kansas, to build a bridge over and across the Missouri river at Saint Joseph, Missouri; and all the rights and privileges conferred by sections 1, 2, 4, and 5 of this act are hereby extended, so far as they are applicable, to the Saint Joseph and Denver City Railroad Company, and the restrictions, limitations, and conditions contained in said sections are hereby made applicable to said company.

AN ACT concerning the tax commissioners for the State of Arkansas.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the acts and proceedings which have been had or performed by any two of the tax commissioners, in and for the State of Arkansas, shall have the same force and effect as if had and performed by all three of said commissioners.

Approved July 20, 1868.

[PUBLIC—No. 75.]

AN ACT amendatory of an act approved July twenty-six, eighteen hundred and sixty-six, entitled "An act to authorize the construction of certain bridges, and to establish them as post roads."

Whereas the St. Louis and Illinois Bridge Company, organized under the laws of the State of Missouri, and the Illinois and St. Louis Bridge Company, organized under an act of the general assembly of the State of Illinois, have been consolidated, in pursuance of the authority granted to the said Illinois and St. Louis Bridge Company, in their act of corporation, and the authority granted to the St. Louis and Illinois Bridge Company, by an act of the general assembly of the State of Missouri, approved March nineteenth, eighteen hundred and sixty-eight: Therefore,

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the company formed by this consolidation, under the name and style of the Illinois and St. Louis Bridge Company, is hereby recognized and declared to be a corporation by that name, with full power and authority to construct a bridge across the Mississippi river opposite the city of St. Louis, in conformity to the act of which this act is amendatory, with all the rights, privileges, and powers granted and conferred by the several acts of the general assemblies of the States of Illinois and Missouri to the respective companies by the consolidation of which the said Illinois and St. Louis Bridge Company was formed, and not inconsistent with the provisions of the act to which this act is amendatory: And provided further, That in constructing said bridge there shall be one span of at least five hundred feet clear between piers.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That the said corporation may execute a mortgage and issue bonds payable, principal and interest, in gold, and their bridge across the Mississippi river and approaches thereto, when constructed, shall be a post road to carry the mails of the United States, and enjoy the rights and privileges of other post roads.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That said corporation may hold their meetings in either the State of Illinois or the State of Missouri, as the board of directors may elect, and the directors may be citizens of any of the United States; and said corporation may sue and be sued in any circuit court of the United States: Provided, That nothing in this act or in any previous legislation affecting the premises shall be so construed as to deprive the legislatures of the States of Illinois and Missouri of the right to regulate the tolls and fares which may be charged by said company for the use of such bridge: Provided further, That the tolls now fixed by the legislatures of Illinois and Missouri shall not be increased.

Approved July 20, 1868.

[PUBLIC—No. 76.]

AN ACT providing for the sale of a portion of the Fort Gratiot military reservation in St. Clair County, in the State of Michigan.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to sell, at such times as he may deem most advantageous to the interests of the government, and in such manner as hereinafter provided, all that portion of the military reservation known as Fort Gratiot, in St. Clair county, in the State of Michigan, which lies south of a line running due west from the south end of the Grand Trunk railroad wharf on the St. Clair river, until it intersects the road known as the Lexington road, and all that portion which lies west of said Lexington road.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That all that portion of the above described lands which lies east of a line running due south from the point of intersection with the Lexington road, mentioned in the foregoing section of this act, shall be divided into blocks and lots of convenient size for building purposes, with public streets conforming as near as may be, without detriment to the interests of the government or the State, to the public streets of the city of Port Huron, adjoining such ground, and sold by lots at public auction, at the city of Port Huron, to the highest bidder, public notice of such sale having first been given for thirty days by advertisement in all the papers published in the city of Port Huron, and in at least two papers published in the city of Detroit, Michigan. A plat of this division, made in accordance with the laws of the State of Michigan, shall be filed with the register of deeds of the county of St. Clair, State of Michigan. The remaining portion of said military reservation, for the sale of which provision is made in the first section of this act, shall be sold at public auction at the city of Port Huron, after due notice, as prescribed in the foregoing paragraph, at such times and in such parcels as may be deemed most advantageous to the interests of the government, by the Secretary of War.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That the proceeds arising from the sale herein provided for, shall be paid into the treasury of the United States in the same manner as the proceeds from the sale of other public lands.

Approved, July 20, 1868.

TREATY BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA AND THE KING OF PRUSSIA.

By the President of the United States of America;

A PROCLAMATION.

Whereas, A treaty between the United States of America and his Majesty the King of Prussia in the name of the North German Confederation, was concluded and signed by their respective plenipotentiaries at Berlin on the twenty second day of February, eighteen hundred and sixty-eight, which treaty, being in the English and German languages, is word for word as follows:

The President of the United States of America and his Majesty the King of Prussia in the name of the North German Confederation, led by the wish to regulate the citizenship of those persons who emigrate from the North German Confederation to the United States of America, and from the United States of America to the territory of the North German Confederation, have resolved to treat on this subject, and have for that purpose appointed plenipotentiaries to conclude a convention: that is to say, the President of the United States of America, George Bancroft, envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary from the said States near the King of Prussia and the North German Confederation, and his Majesty the King of Prussia, Bernhard Konig, privy counselor of legation, who have agreed to and signed the following articles:

ARTICLE I.

Citizens of the North German Confederation who become naturalized citizens of the United States of America, and shall have resided uninterruptedly within the United States five years, shall be held by the North German Confederation to be American citizens, and shall be treated as such.

Reciprocally: Citizens of the United States of America who become naturalized citizens of the North German Confederation, and shall have resided uninterruptedly within North Germany five years, shall be held by the United States to be North German citizens, and shall be treated as such. The declaration of an intention to become a citizen of the one or the other country has not for either party the effect of naturalization.

ARTICLE II.

A naturalized citizen of the one party on return to the territory of the other party remains liable to trial and punishment for an action punishable by the laws of his original country, and committed before his emigration; saving, always, the limitation established by the laws of his original country.

ARTICLE III.

The convention for the mutual delivery of criminals, fugitives from justice, in certain cases, concluded between the United States on the one part and Prussia and other States of Germany on the other part, the sixteenth day of June, one thousand eight hundred and fifty-two, is hereby extended to all the States of the North German Confederation.

ARTICLE IV.

If a German naturalized in America renews his residence in North Germany, without the intent to return to America, he shall be held to have renounced his naturalization in the United States. Reciprocally: If an American naturalized in North Germany renews his residence in the United States, without the intent to return to North Germany, he shall be held to have renounced his naturalization in North Germany. The intent not to return may be held to exist when the person naturalized in the one country resides more than two years in the other country.

ARTICLE V.

The present convention shall go into effect immediately on the exchange of ratifications, and shall continue in force for ten years. If neither party shall have given to the other six months previous notice of its intention then to terminate the same, it shall further remain in force until the end of twelve months after either of the contracting parties shall have given notice to the other of such intention.

ARTICLE VI.

The present convention shall be ratified by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate of the United States, and by his Majesty the King of Prussia in the name of the North German Confederation; and the ratifications shall be exchanged at Berlin within six months from the date hereof.

In faith whereof the plenipotentiaries have signed and sealed this convention.

GEORGE BANCROFT. [SEAL.]
BERNHARD KONIG. [SEAL.]

Berlin, the twenty-second of February, 1868.

And whereas the said treaty has been duly ratified on both parts, and the respective ratifications have been exchanged:

Now, therefore, be it known that I, Andrew Johnson, President of the United States of America, have caused the said treaty to be made public to the end that the same and every clause and article thereof may be observed and fulfilled with good faith by the United States and the citizens thereof.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

Done in the city of Washington this twenty-seventh day of May, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-eight, and of the independence of the United States the ninety-second.

[SEAL.] ANDREW JOHNSON.

By the President:
WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

[PUBLIC—No. 63.]

AN ACT to continue the Bureau for the Relief of Freedmen and Refugees, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the act entitled "An act to establish a Bureau for the Relief of Freedmen and Refugees," approved March three, eighteen hundred and sixty five, and the act entitled "An act to continue in force and to amend 'An act to establish a Bureau for the Relief of Freedmen and Refugees,' and for other purposes," passed on the sixteenth of July, anno Domino eighteen hundred and sixty six, shall continue in force for the term of one year from and after the sixteenth of July, in the year one thousand eight hundred and sixty-eight, excepting so far as the same shall be herein modified. And the Secretary of War is hereby directed to re-establish said bureau where the same has been wholly or in part discontinued: Provided, [That] he shall be satisfied that the personal safety of freedmen shall require it.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That it shall be the duty of the Secretary of War to discontinue the operations of the bureau in any State whenever such State shall be fully restored in its constitutional relations with the government of the United States, and shall be duly represented in the Congress of the United States, unless, upon advising with the Commissioner of the bureau, and upon full consideration of the condition of freedmen's affairs in such State, the Secretary of War shall be of opinion that the further continuance of the bureau shall be necessary: Provided, however, That the educational division of said bureau shall not be affected, or in any way interfered with, until such State shall have made suitable provision for the education of the children of freedmen within said State.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That unexpended balances in the hands of the Commissioner, not required otherwise for the due execution of the law, may be, in the discretion of the Commissioner, applied for the education of freedmen and refugees, subject to the provisions of laws applicable thereto.

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That officers of the Veteran Reserve Corps or of the volunteer service, now on duty in the Freedmen's Bureau as assistant commissioners, agents, medical officers, or in other capacities, who have been or may be mustered out of service, may be retained by the Commissioner, when the same shall be required for the proper execution of the laws, as officers of the bureau, upon such duty and with the same pay, compensation, and allowances, from the date of their appointment as now provided by law for their respective grades and duties at the dates of their muster-out and discharge; and such officers so retained shall have, respectively, the same authority and jurisdiction as now conferred upon "officers of the bureau" by act of Congress passed on the sixteenth of July, in the year eighteen hundred and sixty-six.

SEC. 5. And be it further enacted, That the Commissioner is hereby empowered to sell for cash, or by installments with ample security, school buildings and other buildings constructed for refugees and freedmen by the bureau, to the associations, corporate bodies, or trustees who now use them for the purposes of education or relief of want, under suitable guarantees that the purposes for which such buildings were constructed shall be observed: Provided, That all funds derived therefrom shall be returned to the bureau appropriation and accounted for to the treasury of the United States.

SCHUYLER COLFAX,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.
B. F. WADE,
President of the Senate pro tempore.

[NOTE BY THE DEPARTMENT OF STATE.—The foregoing act having been presented to the President of the United States for his approval, and not having been returned by him to the house of Congress in which it originated within the time prescribed by the Constitution of the United States, has become a law without his approval.]

[PUBLIC—No. 64.]

AN ACT prescribing an oath of office to be taken by persons from whom legal disabilities shall have been removed.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That whenever any person who has participated in the late rebellion, and from whom all legal disabilities arising therefrom have been removed by act of Congress by a vote of two-thirds of each house, has been or shall be elected or appointed to any office or place of trust in or under the government of the United States, he shall, before entering upon the duties thereof, instead of the oath prescribed by the act of July two, eighteen hundred and sixty-two, take and subscribe the following oath or affirmation: I, A. B., do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I will support and defend the Constitution of the United States against all enemies, foreign and domestic; that I will bear true faith and allegiance to the same; that I take this obligation freely, without any mental reservation or purpose of evasion; and that I will well and faithfully discharge the duties of the office on which I am about to enter. So help me God.

Approved July 11, 1868.

[PUBLIC—No. 69.]

AMERICAN MUSICAL CLASS BOOK,

Designed for Female Colleges, Institutes, Seminaries, and Normal and High Schools. Containing Elementary Instructions, Vocal Exercises and Solfeggios, and a valuable Collection of Duets, Trios, and Concerted Pieces.

By T. Bissell—Price 75c.

Among the numerous works of the kind this cannot fail of a prominence, since its peculiar features are such as will commend it at once to the patronage of those for whom it is chiefly intended. Its rudimental lessons proceed with a regularity of precision that cannot fail to fix permanently on the mind of the pupil the essentials of success in future studies. The exercises are in a form to attract the attention, and the selection of music is one of the best if not the superior of all similar collections. Principals of Educational Institutions, Music Teachers, and others interested in books of this class, will find it advantageous to examine this volume. THE GERMANIA LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY, established in 1860, and based upon the most approved principles of Life Insurance security, presents its claims for consideration, believing that its solid foundation already secured by the faithful and efficient management of its officers and Board of Directors will give it the preference above all other similar institutions.

It is purely Mutual, as the net profits are distributed among the parties insured, the interest of the capital stock being only five per cent according to its charter.

It assumed the system of cash payments at the commencement of its existence, and maintained it faithfully until now, and promises the same for the future, thereby securing to policy holders the full amount for which they are insured. The advantage of this system over the half cash and half note system is patent to every careful observer, but will be more fully illustrated by the following statement and table:

If a person of thirty years of age insures his life for the amount of $1000 in one of the credit companies, and pays a premium of $28 30 per year, with a note for half of the premium, then by means of this note and interests thereon the amount will become less and less in the following proportions:

| | |
|---|---|
| After 10 years the $1000 will amount to......... | $887 44 |
| After 15 years the $1000 will amount to......... | 793 28 |
| After 20 years the $1000 will amount to......... | 666 02 |
| After 25 years the $1000 will amount to......... | 484 73 |
| After 30 years the $1000 will amount to......... | 230 47 |
| After 33 years the $1000 will amount to......... | 32 53 |
| After 34 years the $1000 will amount to......... | Nothing. |

So that after a lapse of 34 years the whole amount will be eaten up, notwithstanding the parties insured paid their money in good faith.

The large dividend of 40 per cent declared last January is evidence of the care and success with which the Managers have conducted the enlarged and rapidly increasing interests of the Company, and vouches for its future brilliant and permanent prosperity.

Parties contemplating an assurance on their lives will do well to examine the status of this Company, every facility for which will be given by the ## Poetry.

"I'M OLD TO-DAY."

[An aged man, on reaching his seventieth birthday, like one surprised paced his room, exclaiming, "I am an old man! I am an old man."]

I wake at last; I've dreamed too long.
Where are my threescore years and ten?
My eye is keen, my limbs are strong:
I well might vie with younger men.
The world, its passions, and its strife
Is passing from my grasp away;
And though this pulse seems full of life,
"I'm old to-day—I'm old to-day."

Strange that I never felt before
That I had almost reached my goal.
My bark is nearing death's dark shore;
Life's waters far behind me roll:
And yet I love their murmuring swell,
Their distant breakers' proud array,
And must I—can I say "Farewell?"
"I'm old to-day—I'm old to-day."

This house is mine, and those broad lands
That slumber 'neath yon fervid sky;
Yon brooklet, leaping o'er the sands,
Hath often met my boyish eye.
I loved those mountains when a child;
They still look young in green array;
Ye rocky cliffs, ye summits wild,
"I'm old to-day—I'm old to-day."

Twixt yesterday's short hours and me
A mighty gulf hath intervened:
A man with men I seemed to be;
But now 'tis meet I should be weaned
From all my kind, from kindred dear;
From those deep skies that landscape gay;
From hopes and joys I've cherished here:
"I'm old to-day—I'm old to-day."

Oh, man of years, while earth recedes,
Look forward, upward, not behind!
Why dost thou lean on broken reeds?
Why still with earthly fetters bind
Thine ardent soul? God give it wings
Mid higher, purer joys to stray!
In heaven, no happy spirit sings,
"I'm old to-day—I'm old to-day."

Woman.

"Mrs. Livesey, wife of Rev. William Livesey, supplied the pulpit of the Methodist church at Middletown, Massachusetts, in the absence of her husband on Sunday, week before last."

The above quotation leads us to consider how much women can do for the propogation of Christian principles. The Gospel is full of illustrations on that subject. Never woman deserted Christ in his agony. They followed him till after his death. It is especially in critical times that women are inspired for common good. Let them be attached to their country, to their family, or to their Church, they do more and better than man. In times of plenty as well as in scarcity they occupy the place of angels among men. I shall take one illustration from the old times when Methodism was preached in France. Its authenticity is guaranteed.

In 1635 the King's attorney had obtained from the Bishopric of Nismis the condemnation to death by fire of six hundred Huguenots. Hugues is for the French what Wesley is for us in matter of public worship. The priest was already blessing with Latin, songs, and sprinkling of water, which he called holy, the fire where six hundred human beings were to be burned alive. The archpriest named Chamboran, held a young child in his hands, and was about to fling him into the holy fire of the Catholic Church when the King's attorney stopped him, saying: "See that woman! See! She reads some pages which the devil has just handed to her. I have seen him.' I swear to it!" The archpriest stopped and looked. The woman pointed out to him was one of the victims of that day. In order to make her agony keener the priest had snatched the child from his mother. The pages which that mother was reading were the fragments of a Bible which the condemned victims had divided among themselves when they thought that they had been betrayed to the priest. Chamboran let the child fall to the ground, and rushed upon his prey with raised cross in hand. Priests had then as now a cross for each different service. The one used on that occasion was a poignard, whose handle was a cross. The woman looked at him, and after a short prayer to God, she asked him. "Which will you destroy, the word of God or me?" The priest directed his fury toward the word of God. But the woman, whose agony he had made acute, became his avenger. His poignard met her hand. The priest fell dead to the ground with the cross in his breast.

The crowd of fanatics who had come there in procession were first struck with horror at seeing a priest stricken to death, by a woman, too. But soon that horror was changed into admiration. The intended victims of that moment found means of freeing themselves from the chains which the priest had put on them. They fell on their knees, and after thanksgiving to the Great Architect of the universe, they read the pages which the King's attorney had pointed to the priest as the devil's gift.

The personages of that scene have not all died in the memory of man. Pierre De Chapelles is well remembered by the Protestants of France with sentiments of horror. I have seen a list of over six thousand Huguenots whose condemnation he obtained from the Bishopric of Nismes. That woman's name is Mary Manuel. Her child has been the ancestor of several ministers of the Gospel. Those pages are yet a relic of those times. They are in the archives of the writer in Paris.

Letter from New York City.

NEW YORK, August 10, 1868.

We arrived Saturday night in New York on one of the Hudson river steamers, after a most delightful trip on this the most beautiful river of the country. There was nothing of special interest to engage our attention for the remainder of the evening after our arrival, but early Sabbath morning we arose, and going forth for a walk, soon came to what is called the "Tombs," where the transgressors arrested by the police during the night are brought to answer for their misdoings. As they came in from the various precincts we noticed their countenances as they passed into the building. What a terrible sight! Here were old hags from whom it seemed every mark of God, in the way of purity and modesty and goodness, had been wiped out. Old men, or those looking old, but perhaps only broken down in their prime by a life of sinful indulgence, with matted locks and haggard faces, came staggering sullenly along, not seeming to know or care where they were going, or what was to become of them. Poor, hopeless, aimless creatures! Then came women, drunk and in rags, with bruised faces, quarreling with each other by the way, and expressing their anger in the coarsest language. These were followed by those younger in years, less beastly in appearance, yet doubtless steeped in sin. Traces of beauty still lingered about them, but no trace of modesty. Next come two young men, decently dressed but handcuffed and carefully guarded by the officers who have them in charge. One of the officers carries in his hands some burglar's tools, which tell the offense of the criminals. Another officer bears a large butcher knife in his hands, from which we infer that his prisoner had meditated if not committed violence upon a fellow mortal. A foppishly dressed man passed in, and from appearances we set him down as the adroit pickpocket. Twenty-five or thirty in all, perhaps more, pass in, some to be imprisoned for a few days, some for months, and some perhaps for years, and some doubtless to be allowed to depart after a warning word from the judge. As we passed on our way we could but say, "The way of the transgressor is hard."

The hour for morning service arriving, we went to worship with the Bedford street Methodist Episcopal Church. The congregation was good, but doubtless much diminished by the camp meeting now in progress at Sing Sing.

A VISIT TO THE FIVE POINTS MISSION SABBATH SCHOOL

In the afternoon tells us that much may be done for the abject poor, the dwellers in the surrounding garrets and cellars. This institution, under the charge of its worthy and efficient superintendent, J. N. Schaffer, was built on the site of the "Old Brewery" about eighteen years ago. It has done and is now doing a noble work for the poor. Twenty-one families, mostly those of poor widows, are given rooms free of rent, but required to support themselves and to attend the public means of grace. The day school, which is free to all, has an average attendance of about four hundred and fifty, and the Sabbath school about three hundred and fifty. They have a fine piano to accompany the singing. Mrs. Governor Wright, the widow of our late minister to Berlin, is the first directress. She faithfully attends the Sabbath school, and visits the institution much during the week. The Sunday school teachers come from the up-town churches, and both the young ladies and young gentlemen who give their time and labor to this worthy Christian enterprise are of the first families. Beautiful, wealthy, and accomplished, they do not feel themselves above toiling for Jesus, even among his lowliest creatures. Noble souls, they shall not be without their reward, for these little ones that they win over to virtue and to God shall be stars in the crowns of their rejoicing. This institution is truly an honor to Methodism in this city.

STREET PREACHING,

Among the religious notices in the daily papers was one announcing that Rev. Stephen H. Tyng, Jr., would preach in the street at the Howard city mission station at 5 P. M. We had a curiosity to see and hear this noble, independent worker for Jesus, who dare obey his Master's command, "Go ye unto all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature," even though it might bring charges against him from a Stubbs and Boggs, and call down upon his head the censure of a ritualistic bishop.

Reaching the locality about half an hour before the time appointed for preaching, we found a temperance meeting in progress in the street. The speaker was illustrating the evils of intemperance, and urging them all to sign the pledge. Never having visited that part of the city before, we walked around two or three squares, looking at the tenement houses and the crowds of men, women, and children of all nationalities that thronged the streets in front of them. Oh! we thought, how enviable is the lot of that one called to proclaim the glorious gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ, who finds a home in this great city, where one does not have to seek long for opportunities of doing good, but where on every hand there is constantly a pressing demand for the laborers of Jesus. When we returned to the stand again we found that our temperance lecturer had concluded his remarks. We, therefore, did not learn how he succeeded in his efforts to obtain signers to his pledge. Another man, a minister, now occupied the platform, and was delivering a brief but earnest exhortation to the assembled crowd.

At the hour of five, we saw approaching a young man with a fine intelligent countenance, with auburn hair and whiskers, and eyes all gentleness and love: but whose nose and chin, and breadth of upper lip showed that with all his mildness and cordiality there was a great deal of "pluck," that he had the moral courage to stand up for the right against the greatest odds. Though we had never seen him, we set him down for Tyng, Jr., the Episcopal hero. We were not mistaken, for as he came near to where we were standing, his cordial greetings of friends, "How do you do, brother" so and so, and the response of, "How do you do, Mr. Tyng," assured us that this was the speaker that we had come to hear.

The other one concluded his remarks, and Mr. Tyng mounting a wagon in the street, opened his services. He wore no gown, had no boys present to bear candles, nor did he go through the form of bowing and crossing himself, which neglect might not have pleased his extreme ritualistic brethren, if any were present.

After singing and a brief extemporaneous prayer, he announced his text from Hebrews 2, iii: "How shall we escape if we neglect so great salvation," He called their attention to the great salvation offered men through Jesus Christ. He said: "If a man should fall into the river, and should just be sinking down, and one should rescue him, that would be a great salvation. He is saved from ruin and death. If a man by sickness is brought down to the verge of the grave, and the physician visits him and heals him, that is a great salvation. But the great salvation spoken of in the text is not from any danger seen, but from danger unseen and eternal. As to our future and utter ruin, as sinners, it is sure. For God is against us, and all the powers of heaven are against us. Certainly we are sinners, and what we show of sin in our daily transgressions is not all the sin connected with us. The water that we see of the fountain that comes bubbling up out of the ground is not all the water there is there, but a spring of it is deep within the earth. So there is a heart of sin within us. We are not as bad outside as we are inside. We all know this. Now we want to love God, who loves us, and thus obtain this great salvation, but we can not do it by ourselves alone. A man falling in the river might as well attempt to pull himself out by the hair of his own head as to save himself by his own efforts merely. God only can save us."

He then spoke of the greatness of the salvation by the price paid to obtain it. Not silver or gold, but the life of the Prince of Peace was given. It was great, too, because of the multitudes saved thereby. Yet tell all that we might of this great salvation, the half could not be told. How then shall we escape if we neglect it? Do you ask if the danger is real? It is. What is medicine for, if men are not sick? What is the Bible for if man does not need instruction? What is a Savior for, if there is no danger and ruin to be saved from. Yes, the danger is real.

But suppose it is only probably real, or possibly real, what then? What do you do in other matters under such circumstances? Suppose that several cases of cholera are reported in the city, and near your door is a quantity of filth. Do you neglect to clean it up? No! there is a possibility of its engendering the disease, and you attend to it. So when there are indications of a storm at sea. It may possibly come. What does the wise captain do? He prepares for it.

Surely there are indications throughout all the world that man has fallen, and that his utter ruin is not only possible, but that it is sure. Act, then, with wisdom in the matter. Do you say that all things continue as they were, that you see no signs of danger? It may be delayed, but there is danger coming. Go with us to the bedside of the wicked in his death, and hear the gurgling prayer for mercy. What is it that he would be saved from? Go to the field of battle. Hear the wicked in his death. Why does he cry, "God have mercy on me?" It is condemnation come beforehand to his soul.

The speaker then showed them the course of sin in the heart: that its course was slow but sure; that men went on from bad to worse: that when they became guilty of the sin of neglecting this great salvation, they were on their way to the commission of every other sin. He then appealed to them to neglect no longer. The sermon was about half an hour in length, and was clear, practical, and earnest. The congregation, which was about two or three hundred in number, and composed of all classes, listened attentively, and good was no doubt accomplished. And doubtless Jesus approved of this young minister as he thus lifted up his voice to warn sinners, though ritualistic priests and bishops may see much in it to condemn, and declare it altogether undignified.

The day was finished up by our preaching for Rev. D. Foster, in the Fourth street Methodist Episcopal church.

The camp meeting at Sing Sing is now in progress. We hope to spend a day or two on the ground, from which place we may write again. It was announced that on Sabbath, the 10th inst., Rev. Mr. Punshon, Rev. Dr. Newman, and Rev. Henry Ward Beecher were to do the preaching. Truly an able trio, and those who were permitted to be present may feel themselves highly favored.

A Rev. Doctor from South Carolina, of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was announced to preach Sabbath evening at John street Methodist Episcopal church. I wonder if the same courtesy, of being invited to preach, is ever extended to our ministers by the Church South, when they are visiting Southern cities?

The funeral of Brevet Major General Halpine (Miles O'Reilley), whose spicy newspaper articles all have read, took place on Saturday last. It was very largely attended.

The weather for the last two weeks has not been uncomfortably warm throughout this State, but the last day or two the heat has been increasing.

Letter from Chicago.

DEAR ADVOCATE:

I guess your editor, Dr. Newman, has already, or will soon, come to the conclusion that the undersigned is not a man of his word, as a promise was made to the editor some time since that an occasional letter from this point should find its way to the Crescent City for publication in your columns.

It is true that the promise has not been as faithfully kept as it was intended it should have been when made, but the apology or excuse is that I have been waiting for something wonderful or interesting to occur with which to entertain your readers, but nothing of the kind having transpired, or likely to transpire, I have had to fall back on common-place topics of every day life.

And first, in reference to the weather. And concerning this I can say that the "oldest inhabitant," whoever he may be, and however far advanced in years he may be, has never experienced such a "heated term" as we have had since the twenty-fifth of June. During all this time the thermometer has ranged from ninety to one hundred degrees in the shade, and sometimes rising half-a-dozen degrees above a hundred. The result of the terrible heat is the death of scores of persons by sunstroke, particularly in the cities. Not nearly as many, however, have died in this city as in the Eastern cities. In New York particularly the mortality has been frightful.

Another and much more pleasant result of the excessive hot weather is the wonderful rapidity with which the corn crop has been brought forward toward maturity. Two months ago corn was scarcely to be seen above ground. Now it has attained its growth, or nearly so, while the ears are rapidly maturing; and the promise is for a more abundant harvest than was ever gathered before. In fact, harvests of all kinds, specially wheat, were never more abundant than this year. These Northwestern States will be able almost of their surplus to feed the balance of the world.

I suppose there are some farmers who grumble as usual this year, the sight of a potato bug or a shrunken kernel of wheat being sufficient to blind their eyes to all the bountiful provisions with which Providence has supplied them; but if there are any such this year they should be banished to Alaska to try their hand at cultivating Mr. Seward's recently purchased farm.

Since the adjournment of the General Conference matters in Methodistic circles in this city have been very quiet, albeit the several pastors are attending to their regular duties with fidelity. Since then Grace M. E. church, on the north side, has been completed, with the exception of the spire, and dedicated. This is one of the finest church buildings in the city, and one of the most earnest, devoted, and laborious societies to be found any where. On the day of dedication over thirty thousand dollars were secured to relieve the church from its indebtedness. Under the pastoral care of Brother Jutkins, who was transferred last fall from Troy Conference to this, the church is enjoying prosperity.

Dr. Hatfield, of the Centennary M. E. church, is stirring up the wrath of the Roman Catholics, and those politicians who are counting the vote of the Catholics, by a series of earnest sermons on the subject of the Pope's Allocution. The Democratic papers of this city denounce him in the severest style, which is pretty good evidence that the Doctor's hot shot are doing effective service.

Rev. Robert Bently, pastor of the Indiana street M. E. church, has been transferred by Bishop Scott to the California Conference. He preaches his farewell sermon to-morrow morning, and leaves early next week for the Pacific coast. We are sorry to lose Brother Bently from our Conference, as he is one of the most promising of our young men.

Our annual camp meeting commences the twenty-fourth instant on the beautiful grounds of the association, on the banks of the Desplaines river, sixteen miles from the city, on the line of the Wisconsin division of the Chicago and Northwestern railway. The experiment is to be tried this year of holding the meeting between the Sabbaths, commencing on Monday and closing on Saturday. So near to such a large city, it has been found difficult to prevent the Sabbath from being desecrated. We try it, therefore, this year on the other plan.

The Joliet camp meeting, which is held on the line of the Chicago, Rock Island, and Pacific railroads, thirty-five miles from the city, commences the twenty-eighth, to be continued over the Sabbath. This association also own their grounds, which are the most beautiful I ever saw, and are fitting it up like the Chicago grounds with permanent buildings.

In politics "all is quiet on the Potomac." No great excitement is yet manifested. I am satisfied the great majority of the people have had enough of war, and are anxious for peace, consequently have made up their mind to vote for a man who conquered a peace, and will if elected President maintain peace.

The nomination of Blair, while it may be acceptable to the rebels of the South, with his threats, if put into power, of dispersing the "carpet-bag governments" at the point of the bayonet, is nevertheless a bitter pill to the Democrats of the North. The Republicans delight in unearthing his old abolition speeches made all through the North eight and ten years ago, in which he often stated he "would rather sleep with a negro than a Democrat," and throwing them into their Democratic neighbors' faces.

Colfax passed through the city Wednesday evening last on his way home to South Bend, where a magnificent reception was given him on Thursday. He goes next week in company with a few personal friends to the Rocky Mountains, where General Grant is also at present.

LEAD PENCIL.

Chicago, August 1.

From the Churches.

Rev. J. R. Fenner writes from Monroe, Louisiana:

I am very sorry there is no good news to write you; my work is in a bad fix at this time. I have not been out on the circuit since March. The condition was bad then, a wonderful breaking up and moving from place to place, so that I had to begin anew. But I have a large church body on the island, about two hundred members. Brother Andrew Hazen has them in charge and is preaching for them. He reports several converts, and many are ready for baptism, but I can not go from Monroe, because they blame me all through the circuit for the colored people voting and being Radicals. Word has been sent me that the white people have sworn to kill me the first time they catch me out in the country. Our people have advised me for the present to stay here until they send me word. At Monroe the membership is very weak, all but very few of the members have gone away. Nearly all the strength I have is the sister's help me to bear up the Church. We have had a protracted meeting, but did very little good. My wife's health is very poor now, but I am very well. I am teaching school in the church, and the children learn quite fast. My large work below Monroe is all scattered and gone except a few, and no place of worship yet. Satan and trouble has done the harm. Brother Sims is here, driven off his circuit, and is tending a little store. I saw some of the Bastrop people lately, and they told me they were trying to do their best in their troubles. A great many complaints come in here from the Bœuf river about the Ku Klux killing off the colored people. Our people are all very poor, but we are trying to keep together and do all the good we can by God's help. Pray for me that I may hold out faithfully to the end.

Rev. E. Hayward writes from Natchitoches, Louisiana:

I am getting up again, after several days of hard fever; am very weak, but trying to get about. We are waiting anxiously for the books you sent. We would be glad to have them. The times are very hard, but we are getting along pretty well. Brother Turner is also doing well in Sabine. He has a good set of people. I lost one of my appointments by the house burning down on the third of July, but by the help of the Lord and good friends we have it up again, and ready for preaching. Some of the white people seemed much hurt, and said they would help us get lumber for the flooring. There is a great congregation, and need much care. I have no preacher for them, and can only go once a month to some of them, but class and prayer meetings are kept up faithfully. It is about sixteen miles from here.

Rev. S. M. Small writes from Alexandria, Louisiana:

My church is doing very well for the times. It is a hard matter to get the people to church on account of the present state of things. The sisters stand most firm and attend most regular in the midst of our troubles. I am regulating the Alexandria and Pineville churches. I have to do all the preaching, for the people will not hear the others, who have done so bad in the present matters. It will come up before the whole class next Sunday. My Sunday schools are doing well. The day school may start in September. Mr. Mills made a great blunder by breaking the contract that we made. He only taught about ten days after getting the ten dollars you left, and is to get ten more from the Bureau, which is not right, after his behavior. I have not yet been out on the circuit. Matters are unsettled and life is not safe. You know how it is in this parish since election.

Rev. M. Dale writes from Cypremort, Louisiana:

I am not well, but am so as to be around. The work of the Lord is going on in our midst. We have received into the church twenty-three converts within the last three weeks, all adults, and giving evidence of a change of heart. They are still coming. Last Sabbath our altar was crowded with anxious souls. I felt much encouraged, seeing the Lord is blessing our little efforts. I have not yet had an opportunity to visit Franklin, and do not know when I can go, seeing we have so many here anxiously inquiring the way to be saved, and I am trying to point them to the Lamb of God. My Sabbath school is very interesting, numbering 115. Pray for us.

Rev. J. M. Vance writes from Houma, Louisiana:

The state of things in this village is not the best. A colored Democrat came here on the eighth, and made a speech. Some colored men who had been members of our Church joined the Democratic club. They give balls and drink whisky, and carry on all kinds of evil ways. The people, or some of them, seem to have forgotten who freed them. No negro can be really a Democrat, whatever they may say. I forward the Quarterly Conference minutes, and letter.

Third Quarterly Conference of Houma Circuit, held August 4, 1868, Rev. J. M. Vance in the chair, opened with singing and prayer by Samuel Williams. Present, Brothers Jones, Haskins, Williams, Murray, Dowling, Wright, Hicks. Six members absent. All but three passed a good examination. Pastor reported expenses $45; church expenses $14 35; the quarterly collection, $3 55; membership 86; probationers 9; baptisms, 2 adults; 16 infants; one good Sunday school. No out appointments reported, as it was not in my power to go around my circuit the past quarter; but the local brethren have generally attended to their work.

Mr. S. H. Smothers, teacher of day school in the colored Baptist church, Shreveport, Louisiana, writes to us August 5:

I closed the first session (six months) of my school on the thirty-first of July. We had quite an interesting examination. The whole session was, all things considered, a very interesting one. The pupils made rapid advancement. The attendance from March till the close of the term was from forty to fifty-five. My pupils made creditable proficiency in the study of arithmetic—a branch which I regret to say has been, and is still, almost entirely neglected in the other schools here. My opinion is, that by the time a pupil has read through the Third Reader he should have a pretty thorough knowledge of the fundamental rules of arithmetic. I shall have vacation till the first of September. We still keep up our Education Society, and it is prospering finely. The Methodist churches are both in a prosperous condition. We all, both members and friends of the Church, rejoice because of the consolidation. I am greatly obliged to you for the books, tracts, Sabbath school tickets (or cards with Scripture texts printed on them.) If you can send us a package of the tickets we will be greatly obliged. Our Sabbath school is prospering tolerably well. Average attendance almost fifty. We have no library, and need one badly.

"MAN OF SOCIAL HABITS."—We see in the daily papers announcements of the sudden death by apoplexy of men of "social habits." Our readers perhaps do not generally know that this is the polite way of saying that another drunkard has reached his end, to wit, suicide, final disgrace, and everlasting shame. The story is still sadder when we hear that the "man of social habits" leaves a wife and four children to mourn his loss. It is true he spent the whole day at his office and at the saloon, and his nights at the theatre or the gambling house, for he was a man of "social habits." His wife and children nevertheless mourn, and well they may. A thousand times better for them is the present state of things—the social man's death gives them great quiet at home. He is missed most by the saloon keepers who sold him the poison that killed him. He is the chief loser and ought to be the chief mourner. The man of social habits does not stand this hot weather very well. His brandy soaked brain gives way. His bloated body melts. We need not lift the curtain any farther—this man is gone to the drunkard's place in the world to come. He has made a total failure in life. His intellect is blighted, his soul maddened by passion, and stained by sin. Poor man—he is lost. There is no polite phrase that is filled with half the horrors of this—"He was a man of social habits."

MISCELLANEOUS ITEMS.

Reunion of old friends—The Chelsea (Mass.) Blair party has its headquarters in Fremont Hall.

Certain European photographers have been selling General Butler's photograph as authentic likenesses of President Johnson. Severe on Butler.

Mr. Seth Boyden, the strawberry culturist of Newark, believes that in the course of twenty years he could raise strawberries as large as pineapples, and of equal delicacy with those now grown.

A Tennessee editor notices with regret the necessity he was lately under to refuse an order for job printing. The customer wanted a quantity of postage stamps.

The Chicago Journal has this paragraph: The Seymour electoral ticket of Louisiana has a very black-and-tan look. The first man on the list is Sambo-la, the last is Black-man. Besides these there is a Garrett, a Cole man, and a Brig-ham. If there is anything in names, this is anything but a "white man's ticket."

Judy says a Belgravian mamma, who has succeeded in getting her own seven daughters "well off her hands," has determined to extend to others the benefit of her "system." She is going to open a "class" for the instruction of young ladies in the art of husband catching. It is to be called the "School of Design."

Captain Robert H. Pierson, formerly of Portland, but more lately of San Francisco, left a will in which he bequeathed to his "cousin, Lieutenant Charles W. Roberts, Adjutant of the Seventh Maine volunteers, two thousand dollars in currency for his gallant conduct in the service of his country, having lost his right leg in the battle of Gettysburg."

Ada Webb, the youngest of the well known Webb sisters, has retired from the stage, and will be married, early in September, in Brooklyn, to Mr. Skea, a young gentleman of the Pacific slope, who is possessed of considerable means, and who is said to have a healthy income of $5000 a month from an enterprise in Virginia City. The fair Ada intends accompanying her husband to the golden shores of California.

Ames Methodist Rpiscopal Church.

There will be preaching every Sabbath at 11 A. M. in Dr. Newman's church, corner of St. Charles and Calliope streets, and social meetings for conference and prayer every Sunday and Thursday evening from eight to nine o'clock in the lecture room. You are invited.

Camp Meetings.

We glean from exchanges some interesting camp meeting items, which will be found in another column. At the Sing Sing encampment Rev. Dr. Newman preached on Sunday afternoon, and, we learn, took a liberal collection for our "Orphans' Home." God bless the kind friends who remembered our little ones. The Church may hope for large blessings from these glorious, old style camp meetings all over the land.

New Cotton.

The new cotton is coming into market, and proves to be of excellent quality. No worms have appeared, and if the Ku Klux will suspend operations for a while, picking and forwarding will soon be lively. Mr. J. P. Smith, of this city, has received a dispatch from New York, dated 17th instant, stating that his bale of new cotton had sold at fifty cents per pound, so that there is a prospect of good prices.

Love Feast at Ross Chapel.

Camp Parapet, August 9.

We had a happy time. There were about fifty members present; about twenty spoke. It was good to see the old grey-headed fathers and mothers come forth to the altar, and talk about the Lord, and tell what God had done for them; telling how blind they were once, but now they see. Three persons received in full membership. The Church is in a prosperous condition. JOSEPH GOULD,
Pastor.

Programme of Murder.

We copy one of several articles in the Louisiana Intelligencer (Republican) relating to the murderous threats with which not only his Democratic neighbor's paper is filled, but the entire rebel press of this State. We are satisfied that the only way to save the lives of thousands of loyal citizens in our country parishes, and save the State from anarchy, is for the Legislature to cast the electoral vote for President and Vice President. These men are threatened with assassination on their return to their parishes. Let them before returning do what they can constitutionally to place in power an administration which will protect them and their constituents.

Teaching the Republicans.—The Telegraph says that if the Republican members of the Legislature would come home the Democrats would learn them a thing or two. Well, the Republicans are willing to learn anything that is useful. Among the things that they have learned is the good old Democratic doctrine, to the victors belong the spoils. Another thing they are going to learn from old South Carolina, and that is, that the Legislature of a State having the right to fix the manner of electing Presidential electors, can elect these in joint session on the day fixed by law. We also propose to learn a thing or two from the editor of the Telegraph, and will let him know what it is as soon as the proper time arrives.

[Editorial Correspondence.]

I arrived at Sing Sing camp meeting on Thursday afternoon, August 6, where I met many old and cherished friends, clerical and lay. A personal friend, Rev. G. S. Taylor, gives the following graphic description of the grounds and their arrangements:

The camp ground lies on the crest of the ridge east of the river, and commands a magnificent view of the great valley through which the mighty river, here four miles wide, sweeps like a silver sea. The grove comprises about eight acres, and is covered by a well-grown hard wood forest, mainly of maple, beech, oak, and hickory. The undergrowth is cleared from the ground, and nearly all of it is available for pitching tents. It is regularly laid out in avenues, streets, alleys, places, etc., and the names of these are much better posted than are the names of a majority of the streets in the neighboring town of Brooklyn. The number of tents now erected is estimated at about three hundred and fifty, being a greater number than on any previous year. Centrally situated is the circle for public services, from which the principal avenues radiate. This "circle" comprises about three-fourths of an acre of land, surrounded by tents facing inward upon it. In front of these tents runs a broad aisle, like a band, encircling the seats. The seats are of stout plank on strong scantling frame work, and are arranged in concentric circles divided into segments by aisles converging upon the pulpit. The "stand," which contains the pulpit, is a tasteful gothic building, two stories high, gabled and pinnacled, and painted a light lavender color. Along the front of its first story runs an open porch, with doors opening inward to the room. In the centre of the porch is a projection similar to a bay window, except that it is without walls. This is the pulpit, and by it the preacher is thrown forward toward the audience, while his clerical brethren form his background next the wall. The rooms of the stand are fitted up with cots and bunks for the accommodation of the ministers. There is also a neat private office for the president of the meeting. The seats have capacity for accommodating about three thousand people. There are also four large preaching tents or chapels on the ground, in each of which a good sized church full of people can he seated to hear the sermons in case of rain. Many of the tents are capacious and elegantly fitted up, with fine carpets on the floors, bedsteads, tables, mirrors, and whatever other furniture is necessary for temporary comfort. The ground is owned and the temporalities of the meeting are controlled by a corporation of lay trustees, incorporated by a a special act of the State Legislature. These trustees are divided into standing committees among whom the care of the meeting is so divided and methodized that everything is like a well ordered military encampment, and confusion is next to impossible. The patriotism of the worshipers is manifested by the presence of the national flag, which is seen in every direction upon the tents. The public services are under the charge of Rev. Hart E. Pease, presiding elder of the New York district of the New York east conference.

Unfortunately the rain has sadly interfered with the public services of the meeting, such as preaching from the stand, but the time has been well improved by meetings for prayer and exhortation in three or four large tents. It was in one of these that I heard the experience of a converted Catholic lady, which should be published throughout the land. Bitterly opposed by her parents, she was compelled to attend our church without their knowledge, where she found peace to her troubled soul. On the day of her conversion her mother had followed her to the church with the intention of compelling her to return home, but as she entered the house of God the congregation were singing:

Hide me, oh, my Savior, hide."

When the poor penitent said: "Jesus hides me, my mother can't find me." And the Savior did hide her beneath his protecting wings, and today she is a shining light. Her description of the confessional was remarkable. She had often gone and confessed, but did not feel that she was a sinner, and when the priest said, "Your sins be forgiven you," she knew they were not, because she did not feel that they were. She could not have faith in the Virgin Mary, for she felt the "Mother of God" could not save her, but when Christ was revealed to her understanding her faith saved her. I have never before felt so forcibly that the poor Papists are not saved, and that they have devotion without godliness. They confess but are not penitent; they worship but know not whom; they trust in Mary but not in her Son, Jesus Christ. How can such be saved? Will God wink at their ignorance? Are they not rather like other sinners, called to the same conditions and appointed to be judged by the same laws?

BOSTON CORBETT.

The man who shot the assassin of President Lincoln is one of the notable characters on the camp ground. I first saw him in a prayer meeting, and was attracted by his peculiar prayer, in which he prayed for the writer that he might be protected, for President Johnson if he had not sinned away the day of grace, and for the conversion of General Grant—our next President. Mr. Corbett is a slight built man about thirty years old, has a pale face, large bright eyes, which have a peculiar expression, and parts his soft, brown hair in the centre of the head, which gives him a womanly appearance. He is a hatter by trade and now resides in New York. Last winter the tragedian Booth requested Corbett's employer to call and make for him a theatrical crown, but the employer could not go, and young Corbett lost the opportunity to make a crown for the great actor. He relates the killing of the assassin in a modest manner, and says when he saw Booth through a crevice in the side of the barn, he obeyed the impulse of his heart to rid the land of such a wretch; that the ball struck him behind the ear and he fell bleeding to the floor. This messenger of justice has received from the government $1650 as his share of the reward money offered for the capture of Booth, but he does not regard this his only reward. While in the army he suffered much persecution because of his religious zeal, and was otherwise misused, "but the Lord," he says, "lifted my head above all my fellows by making me the minister of His justice." He is now a member of the Protestant Methodist Church, and those who know him have all confidence in his sincerity and piety. When he prays he has such an explosive manner of speaking that his rapid, quick spoken words sound like the discharge of rifles.

Some remarkable conversions have taken place since my arrival. Last evening a gentleman sent a note to a lady friend of mine, saying: "I have but twenty minutes to remain, and I must be converted before that time." He was invited to a prayer meeting and in ten minutes he was happily converted to God, when Boston Corbett exclaimed: "Jesus is always in time!"

Washington Correspondence.

Washington, August 12.

A clever "carpet bagger" set himself down in a little box called an office in Albany, New York, about the fourth of a century since; the appointments of said office corresponded with its size, and the wardrobe of its proprietor. A few days since this same "carpet-bagger" dedicated with appropriate ceremonies a magnificent young woman's seminary on Cayuga Lake. The building cost $200,000, and is surrounded by large and beautifully improved lands. But another monuement, if not perhaps as benevolent in design, yet of deeper and broader foundation and more imperishable structure, perpetuates the name of this noble man, Henry Wells. He was one of the originators of the American Express Company; wide as commerce his name is known; and all lands have felt the power and shared the benefits of a system projected in the little room seven by nine feet.

On Thursday of last week Mayor Heath and family passed through this city, in good health. Mrs. Heath was suffering a little inconvenience from cold.

But few members of Congress remain in the city. The books of the Connecticut Avenue Railroad company were opened on the third. Stock is being taken readily, and work will soon be commenced. This additional convenience to the people along that beautiful avenue will open to improvement the most commanding environs of Washington, and surpassed by few in any locality. The project has been suggested that the different States secure ground, and build for their United States Senators suitable residences.

These Senatorial residences would be a good investment for the States owning them. The Senator has a broader field to cultivate than the member who merely represents a district in Congress. His term is six years, involving serious interruption to his business, and frequently its entire prostration. His attention must be divided between his duties here and his family, distant a thousand or more miles in many cases. How often does affliction or death call the Senator, or hurry him to his far away home, when measures of the highest importance to his State are to be acted on; and the labors of half a term are defeated for want of his presence. Let no one ask, can not the Senator carry his family to Washington, and live in his own or hired house? The answer is no, except in a few cases. The salary of a United States Senator, large as it seems, will not allow him the companionship of his family during the session. The labor of a legislator is not confined to the hours in session, but in his library and the committee room he elaborates the measures to be enacted into laws.

Home is man's earthly sanctuary; and public men need its moral influence even more than others. If the proud State of Louisiana shall take the lead in such a praiseworthy enterprise she will not only be indemnified by the beneficial results, but set an example as influential as it is statesmanlike. As the States have executive mansions, so let them have Senatorial. Congress should appropriate money for the residence of the Vice-President.

The temperance cause continues to receive attention in this community. Sunday out-door services are still held, and well attended.

The Young Men's Christian Association continues also to hold religious services in open air, both on Sunday and week evenings. These earnest efforts secure to some a more regular attendance at the churches. The building of the association is to be one of the architectural ornaments of the city. It is progressing cleverly. Would it were finished that a more suitable place for their meetings might be enjoyed. Daily prayer meetings are now held at their rooms at half-past six o'clock P. M.

Relief for the sufferers at Ellicott City was obtained in several of our city churches last Sunday. We hope the amount was preportionate to the demand. The desolations of that place are beyond description. The ministry of our city have generally remained at their posts during the warm weather. Some few have been compelled to suspend labor to recruit their health.

Hon. Thaddeus Stevens.

At precisely twelve o'clock last night this remarkable man bowed to the sceptre of death. The hour was significant—the threshold of two days, connecting the past and future. It is difficult, if not impossible, to put in a brief paragraph words sufficiently descriptive of such a man. The work he proposed to do fixed his purpose, and commanded his extraordinary talents. The system he labored to found is so nearly completed that its stately structure is ready for the "top stone to be brought with shoutings of grace, grace unto it!" Mr. Stevens was without religious creed. The pretended administration of baptism by Sister Loretta ten minutes before his death, and while speechless, and no doubt as unconscious, is so ridiculous as to shield it from the charge of religious mockery. Mr. Stevens never married. He had lodgings during the session at Capitol Hill, his household consisting of himself, two nephews, and a housekeeper. He had been the great friend of the hospital under the direction of the Sisters of Charity. Hence, I suppose, the pretended baptism above alluded to. "A great man has fallen!"

Mrs. Senator Trumbull is improving, and is considered out of danger.

The Industrial Home of this city is doing a good work, though on a limited scale, for want of funds. It is managed by some benevolent ladies, and gathers in children for whom no one else cares. They are thus rescued from vice and death, and are employed in learning, and light, useful employments. At suitable age homes are obtained among the humane, where the morals and other proper training may be secured. Here are some forty or more who but for this home would be thrown on the community as street beggars, thieves, and vagabonds. Street begging is a scandal to any community. If the persons thus employed are needy, common Christianity demands their relief; if they are impostors the community should be protected against them as against all other forms of villainy. Our streets are infested with these forms of want or vice.

The weather is very pleasant. Thunder showers are frequent; but a warm temperature is maintained.

The case of Commissioner Rollins will have reached you by telegram before this comes to hand.

A Loyal Press.

The Weekly Register, of Marksville, Avoyelles parish, Amos S. Collins, editor.

The Baton Rouge semi-weekly Courier, W. H. Van Ornum, editor; Van Ornum & Co., publishers.

We have received the neat looking prospectuses of the above Republican papers, and cordially welcome them as auxiliaries in the work of reconstruction and the fight for freedom. We know the editors well. They are of the right stripe and mean to do their whole duty. For the first time since the war we are getting a fair start. It has been a struggle against heavy odds. The entire State press, with one or two exceptions, was against us, the offices all held by our enemies. They owned the land and claimed to control the labor. The prestige of power was with them, and the Southern pulpit breathed blessings upon them, but we were victors in the election for the people were with us and God was on our side. What a contrast is the present to the dark days of three years ago, when the editor of the Advocate unfurled in New Orleans the banner of freedom—freedom to worship God and to love our country. Our colors are nailed to the mast. During the time named we have seen the parishes gradually occupied by a loyal ministry, land secured, churches and school houses erected, brave Union soldiers elected to office, and now the Press is taking its place as the artillery of right, to thunder its truths through the land. These parish papers will educate the people, encourage the timid, inculcate loyalty, alarm the evil doers, and aid largely in constructing "the new South." God has written upon the doors of the pro-slavery Church, "Ichabod, thy glory has departed," So it can be said of the Ku Klux press, "Your occupation is gone." Requiescat in pace.

The "Empire Parish."—We welthis exchange to our sanctum. It is just received, and is the first issue of the official organ of Plaquemines parish. Patrice Leonard, editor. Pictures of Grant and Colfax appear at its head, (not, however, flattering likenesses). It has a goodly amount of valuable reading. According to the editor fifty thousand barrels of rice will be the yield in that parish this year, with full crops of sugar, corn, sweet potatoes. An excellent sermon is reported from the text, "Love your enemies," in which the worthy Vicar presents Bible truths.

The General Assembly.

Speech of Mr. Campbell.

Mr. Campbell: I wish, sir, in a few words to reply to the objections made by the Senator.

In the first place, as to the powers of the police in inspecting houses, junk boats, lotteries, gambling places, etc., as to that I need say nothing, because every Senator in the house has probably examined that bill; and as I remarked to the Senator during the course of his speech, the very things to which he objected are in the New York bill, word for word. They are the provisions found necessary in all great cities.

As to the gentleman's objections on the score of economy, I have already shown the Senate, and I repeat that I have here a tabular statement compiled by a gentleman for use here showing the expenditures of the city police as now organized, from a comparison of which with those contemplated by this bill, it appears that the latter will only exceed the former $82,987, while it embraces a much larger territory. The police force under this bill will be cheaper than the present force, because of the additional territory and the additional tax list embraced in it.

As to the gentleman's objections in regard to the annuities to policemen and rewards for special services, the bill replies for itself. They are not paid by taxes upon the people, but by moneys resulting from seizures, etc. These items will not cost the people a single cent in the way of taxes.

With regard to the objection that it takes power out of the hands of the people, that is the same objection that has always been made in all large cities. The experience of New York and other cities shows conclusively that this is the best and only way to remove the police from all political influences.

Now, sir, with regard to the assertion of the gentleman that the people will not submit, I will simply say that the gentleman does not represent all the people of New Orleans. Republicans on this floor also represent people who are property holders, and as much interested in the financial prosperity of the city as those whom the gentleman represents.

If this bill is not passed we shall submit in peace; if it is passed, the people he represents will submit in peace.

The New Orleans Times, whose editor is absent and seriously ill, contains in its issue of the eighteenth an attack, by some irresponsible scribbler, upon Rev. Dr. Newman, who has been traveling West and North at his own expense to raise collections for the helpless colored children, orphaned and impoverished by the friends of said scribbler. However, a dog may bark and snarl at a lion, and it is perhaps undignified to notice such attacks. We allude to it simply to say the Church property the Doctor is accused of holding is either held by trustees of the churches, or by the Missionary Society temporarily for the people, as may be learned from the acts of sale duly recorded.

Separation of Church and State in Europe.

M. Louis Veuillot writes in the Univers as follows:

The Bull convening the Ecumeuical Council does not invite sovereigns to sit in that high legislative council. The omission has been remarked, and it is indeed remarkable. It implies that there are no longer Catholic crowns, that is to say, that the order in which society has lived for the last four hundred years no longer exists. What has been called the Middle Age has come to an end. June 29, 1868—the date of the promulgation of the Bull "Eterni Patris"—is the date of its death, of its last sigh. Another era begins. The Church and State are separated in fact, and both recognize it thus we can understand why the Pope has departed from the precedent of the Council of Trent, and has not summoned the representatives of the temporal authority.

Thus it appears that the leading Roman Catholic writer in Europe (M. Veuillot) recognized the great change in the Catholic claims incident to her real loss of control among the civil powers. Verily, the world moves!

Abandoned Men.—We are startled at the statistics given from time to time ot the number of women fallen from an estate of purity and happiness. We should be still more startled at a correct statement of the number of abandoned men that throng our cities. Of these many bear upon their countenances the marks of drunkenness and licentiousness, but many, very many more in respectable circles. Altogether, the name of the fallen of the stronger sex is legion, and any effort to reclaim or reform them, and that failing, to expose them to the scorn and contempt of all good people, deserves success.

Camp Meeting Items.

Results at Manheim.—In addition to the items previously published, we give the following concerning the meeting at Manheim, Pennsylvania:

There were about three hundred and fifty preachers present during the progress of the services, among them several presiding elders. All came to be personally benefited, and to do good, and the blessing of God seemed to rest upon them in large measure. Each day at 6 P. M. they held a special meeting for prayer and for the relation of personal ministerial experience, and each season was of precious interest. As a remarkable feature of the meeting is mentioned the fact that from the beginning the religious influence seemed to affect non-professors as well as those in the Churches, and often during prayer almost the entire people in attendance knelt. The services constantly gained in interest up to the very close, and on the last evening there were very many conversions. The order throughout was all that could be desired. Some of the prominent citizens of the community were among the number who sought the Savior. Near the close of the meeting a suggestion was made that a purse of of five hundred dollars be contributed for the purpose of establishing mission services at Manheim by the Methodist Episcopal Church. The people promptly gave the sum asked for, and it is understood the presiding elder, Rev. W. L. Gray, will provide a minister for the work.

Incidents at the National Camp.

The Lancaster Express says:

The children's meetings, which are held at regular hours each day, are of very great interest and importance. Little ones are here from New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Reading, and Lancaster, as well as from the surrounding country. Many of these children, by intelligent words of experience, give evidence that they understand the nature and dutics of experimental and practical piety.

An interesting scene, the baptism of a small boy, who had been converted, was performed by Father Boehm. What a beautiful and solemn scene it was. Many children were present, and the mother and several holy women stood up with the lad during the service of baptism. Father Boehm then made some affecting remarks, and at some one's suggestion all the children shook hands with the old patriarch, a privilege appreciated by the little folks, and perhaps the last time, as the old man is now in his ninety-fourth year.

It was evening. God had been down upon the encampment during the afternoon. Thousands had realized his presence and rejoiced in his saving power. About two hundred and fifty sat down about half-past five o'clock in a spacious boarding tent to tea. God was with them. Near the writer sat three ladies, two of whom were rejoicing in the newly received blessing of perfect love, and one in that of pardon. Some of us near them sympatized and shouted with them. The fire spread; tears flowed, and songs of praise were sung, and now the holy spirit came down upon an interesting looking young woman. She arose to her feet, and in rich, glowing eloquence told how she had been prejudiced against the doctrine of holiness, and how God had broken down her prejudices and led her into the blessing. Eating was now out of the question. The most rose to their feet, shouted, wept, or were silent in loving wonderment at the great power of God. We soon left the tables, our meal uneaten, and went out to gather up the fast falling manna that Jesus was shedding forth upon the encampment.

God was every where. In this tent a family group were weeping in each others' arms. In the door of that one a young woman, with face lustrous with celestial light, was thrilling a crowd around with a recital of her fresh given experience, and with songs of praise to Jesus' name. And there was a group of ministers, not smoking, not jesting, but shouting and telling how fully the blood of Jesus saved them, then and there. It was a time of wonders, of miracles. Monday afternoon and evening will be memorable evermore to thousands.

Camp Meeting at Sing Sing.—This meeting commenced on Tuesday, August 14, and continues to increase in interest from day to day. Rev. W. M. Punshon visited the camp, and preached a sermon of rare beauty and great power and profit to the people. The Sunday morning service opened with a love feast, conducted by Dr. and Mrs. Palmer. Rev. G. Lansing Taylor, of Brooklyn, preached at ten A. M. and Dr. J. P. Newman, of New Orleans, in the afternoon. Previous to the afternoon service at the stand a children's meeting was held, supervised by Rev. D. O. Ferris, and addressed by Rev. Messrs. W. C. Smith, C. H. Applegate, and W. Anderson. Besides these there were various meetings held in the tents. Crowds were present, and all the services were deeply impressive and interesting. In connection with the services at the stand fifteen conversions were reported. It was rumored in various quarters that Henry Ward Beecher was to preach during the day, but that gentleman did not make his appearance.

Missionary Camp Meeting in Holland.—For several years past (five, we think), a large missionary camp meeting has been held annually in some part of Holland. It has been always attended very numerously, with increasing interest and growing success, and has been the means of awakening in Holland not only fresh interest in missionary work, but in all Christian labor. The meeting last year was held at Vogelenzang, near Haarlem, after the termination of the alliance meetings in Amsterdam. This year the meeting was appointed to be held at Ellekom, near Arnheim, adjacent to the Castle of Middachten, whose owner, the Lady Dowager Baroness Bentinck, (born Princess of Waldeck), kindly invited the meeting to assemble in her beautiful grounds. It is, perhaps, the most lovely spot to be found in the whole country. The railway passes close by, and the trains from Amsterdam, Rotterdem, Leyden, and the Hague are to stop not half a mile from the spot, and from all towns lying between these places extra trains would bring those who desire to come to the camp. A band of music was to accompany the psalmody. The meeting began on Wednesday, July 29.

La Bible et le Pecheur.

Le Pécheur. Je trouve ma conduite fort bonne, et je n'aime pas qu'on vienne me reprendre.

Le Pécheur. Pourquoi me parler ainsi? Je ne vaux pas moins que mon prochain.

La Bible. Ils ne considèrent pas qu'ils se mesurent eux-mêmes par eux-mêmes, et qu'ils se comparent eux-mêmes avec eux-mêmes. 2 Corinthiens 10: 12.

La Bible. Quiconque aura gardé toute la loi, s'il vient à pécher dans un seul commandement, il est coupable comme s'il les avait tous violés. Jacques 2: 10.

Le Pécheur. Qu'est-ce que la loi?

Le Pécheur. Je sais tout cela; mais il est impossible de conformer sa vie entière à cette règle.

La Bible. Celui-là péche qui sait faire le bien et qui ne le fait pas. Jacques 4: 17.

La Bible. Il n'y a point de juste, non pas même un seul. Romains 3: 10.

Le Pécheur. Tout ce que je fais est donc mauvais?

La Bible. Tu as fait le mal autant que tu as pu. Jérémie 3: 5. Chaque voie de l'âme lui semble droite; mais l'Eternel pèse les cœurs. Proverbes 21: 2.

Le Pécheur. On ne me persuadera jamais que mon cœur soit mauvais.

La Bible. Celui qui est plein de confiance en son cœur est un insensé. Proverbes 28: 26. Le cœur est trompeur et désespérément malin par dessus toutes choses: qui le connaîtra? Jérémie 17: 9.

Le Pécheur. J'espère que Dieu ne me maudira pas.

La Bible. L'Eternel ne tient nullement le coupable pour innocent. Nahum 1: 3.

La Bible. Comment éviterez-vous le jugement de la géhenne? Matthieu 23: 33.

Le Pécheur. N'y a-t-il donc aucune voie pour échapper à une si terrible condamnation?

La Bible. Jésus dit: Je suis le chemin, la vérité, et la vie; personne ne vient au Père que par moi. Jean 14: 6. Il y a un seul Dieu et un seul médiateur entre Dieu et les hommes, Jésus-Christ homme. 1 Timothée. 2: 5.

Le Pécheur. Puis-je espérer d'après cela que si je fais de mon mieux, Jésus-Christ fera le reste?

La Bible. Christ vous devient inutile à vous qui voulez être justifiés par la loi. Galates 5: 4.

Le Pécheur. Que dois-je donc faire?

La Bible. Amendez-vous et vous convertissez afin que vos péchés soient effacés. Actes 3: 19.

La Bible. Christ nous a rachetés de la malédiction de la loi. Galates 3: 13.

Le Pécheur. Tous seront donc sauvés?

La Bible. Celui qui croira sera sauvé, mais celui qui ne croira point sera condamné. Marc 16: 16.

Le Pécheur. Comment croire?

La Bible. On croit du cœur pour obtenir la justice. Romains 10: 10.

Le Pécheur. J'ai fait mon possible pour croire; mais....

La Bible. Il est impossible d'être agréable à Dieu sans la foi. Hébreux 11: 6.

Le Pécheur. Encore une fois que faut-il donc que je fasse pour être sauvé.

La Bible. Crois au Seigneur Jésus-Christ et tu seras sauvé. Actes 16: 31.

Le Pécheur. Mais Jésus-Christ peut-il me sauver?

La Bible. Il peut toujours sauver ceux qui s'approchent de Dieu par lui. Hébreux 7: 25.

Le Pécheur. Est-il certain que Dieu veuille me sauver?

La Bible. Je suis vivant, dit le Seigneur l'Eternel, que je ne prends point plaisir en la mort du méchant; mais plutot à ce que le méchant se détourne de son train et qu'il vive. Ezéchiel 33: 11.

Le Pécheur. Mais je suis si indigne de sa bonté que je crains qu'il ne veuille point me recevoir en grâce.

La Bible. Je ne mettrai point dehors celui qui viendra à moi. Jean 6: 37. Mais vous ne voulez point venir à moi pour avoir la vie. Jean 5. 40.

Le Pécheur. Il me semble cependant le vouloir.

La Bible. Si vous entendez aujourd'hui sa voix n'endurcissez point vos cœurs. Hébreux 3:7, 8. Voici maintenant le temps favorable, voici maintenant le jour du salut. 2 Corinthiens 6: 2.

La Bible. Ne te vante point à jour du lendemain. Proverbes 27: 1. Cette même nuit ton âme te sera redemandée. Luc 12: 20.

Le Pécheur. Je sais qu'on peut toujours mourir; mais ne peut-on pas se repentir et trouver grâce à sa dernière heure?

La Bible. Parce que j'ai crié que vous avez refusé d'ouïr,... quand votre effroi surviendra,... on criera après moi, mais je ne répondrai point. Proverbe 1: 24-28.

Le Pécheur. Que deviendrai-je si je meurs sans me repentir?

Intelligence from Our Mission Rooms.

A DEPARTED FRIEND.—We should be unjust to ourselves and to the whole church were we to omit an expression of the profound sense of loss we feel at the departure of Gabriel P. Disosway. No prefix or suffix would now, and never did add anything to the value of his name. Commencing his public missionary efforts so early as 1816 in our Sunday schools, he was still more prominently before the Church in organizing with his now regained companion, John Summerfield, in the month of August, 1819, the Young Men's Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, auxiliary to the Parent Society just then formed. His language, as their Secretary, to the Secretary of the Parent Board was: "Happy are we to unite with our fathers in the furtherance of the Bible and missionary exertions, a work so glorious in its nature, so extensive in its operations. We believe the work of missions to be holy in its object, pure in its means, and charitable in its end; for it has the glory of God for its object, the gospel and the Bible for its means, and for its end the temporal and eternal welfare of mankind." We believe it to be susceptible of proof that he was the first layman in our Church who conferred with Dr. Bangs, of precious memory, on the necessity of extending our mission work into foreign lands among the heathen. He also was one of a deputation of the young men who went to Philadelphia to confer with the venerable Bishop M'Kendree on the appointment of a missionary to Africa. This led shortly afterward to the commencement of a mission to Liberia, and the appointment of the immortal Melville B. Cox as the first foreign missionary of the Methodist Episcopal Church. For many years Brother Disosway was a member of our Board of Managers, and always, from youth to gray hairs, he was on hand in the Churches as an advocate for every advance step proposed by the society. No obloquy—and he lived in the time of it—which Methodism passed through ever moved him in any other way than to strengthen and settle him in his devotion. His education, his social position, his ready utterance, the fitness of his speech, utterly devoid of either cant or unkindness, made his presence an acquisition on all occasions of general interest to our Church. No citizen of our Zion more thoroughly comprehended the forces for good existing among us, or gave them a more cheerful support. Few, if any, among us have been more extensively known within our gates, and few upon entering Paradise will meet with a larger acquaintance.

SCANDINAVIAN DOMESTIC.—It is gratifying to us, and will be to the whole Church, to know that this branch of our home work is still increasing. A new mission has been opened in Chicago for the special benefit of the Norwegians. There has long been a Church there for the Swedes, where the Norwegians have also been partially benefited; but, having a different literature from the former, they will be more satisfactorily and perfectly served than heretofore.

MRS. REV. DR. MACLAY.—Our readers will have noticed in the papers that Mrs. Maclay and her children had arrived at San Francisco on their way to the Northern States, her purpose being to place two of her sons in college, for which her husband and herself have prepared them. We had been advised of their coming by a note from Dr. Maclay, from which we make the following extract:

"I arrived in Hong Kong with my family, Wednesday, May 20, and during our stay there we were very kindly entertained by Rev. Mr. Turner, of the London Missionary Society. Yesterday, May 26, my family went to sea in the steamship China, and are now on their way to San Francisco. This morning I left Hong Kong in the steamer Kin-kiang, and arrived in Canton this afternoon at half-past two o'clock. I am now stopping with Rev. George Piercy, Superintendent of the Wesleyan Mission here, and expect to spend to-morrow in this city trying to gain some information concerning the work of the missions here."

ARE THERE NOT OTHERS?—We have been in the receipt annually for many years of fifty dollars from a lady of another religious community than ours, in memory of a dear deceased mother and brother, who were members of the Methodist Episcopal Church. This note may remind some of our able members whose pious parents or other relatives used to add to the funds of the missionary treasury that by their bereavements this cause is also suffering somewhat. Who in this respect are baptized for the dead?

REV. E. A. WANLESS.—We learn incidentally of the presence of this missionary in London on his way to Constantinople. He goes by way of Marseilles, leaving that port July 18, expecting to reach his destined field July 24 or 25. Brother Wanless expresses the greatest satisfaction with the captain and findings of the good steamer Colorado, Williams & Guyon, agents. In this he is but the voice of all the passengers, including four clergymen, one United States Minister, and four consuls, who deputed him to make such an expression to the captain.

MISSIONARY ADVOCATE FOR AUGUST.—The contents for the August number are: 1. An account of a missionary trip in China, by Rev. N. Sites, followed by an account of the prospects of our new field in the same country, that is, Kinkiang. 2. We have a graphic account of a prosecution which had to be made against some disturbers of our peace in Switzerland. 3. A letter from Africa from Rev. Othello Richards. 4. An article relating to the German colonies in Southern Russia, followed by some account of the German Church of the Evangelical Association in the United States. 5. About Zenana schools in India, followed by an interesting account of the inhabitants and languages of India, by Rev. T. J. Scott. 6. Most interesting matter concerning our work and prospects in Bulgaria. 7. Brief accounts of the foreign Scandinavian work and of our Indian missions at home. 8. The ladies' department has the exceedingly valuable observations of Mrs. Gracey continued.

More Outrages in the Parishes.

FURTHER REPORT OF DETAILS.

Many Colored People Murdered.

SPIRIT OF REBELLION RAMPANT.

WILL GENERAL BUCHANAN REPORT?

In St. Landry parish, between the first and tenth of July, near Grand Coteau, a band of men disguised fired into a house where colored people were assembled at a party, killing one woman and two men and wounding three others. Parties fully identified by some of the colored people were arrested and examined before a justice of the peace; but they conveniently proved an "alibi" and were discharged.

In Lafayette parish, about the same time, a colored man who had testified in court against a white man was called out of his house at night by a party of four white men, who were known to him, and told by them that he must go to Vermillionville and testify in the same case, because his testimony at Abbeville was good for nothing. They took another colored man along with them and went about forty yards from the house, when they shot at both the colored men.

One of them was killed. The other was wounded, but escaped. The wounded man identified the parties, one of whom has been arrested and held to bail to await trial, not on the charge of murder, but on the less serious charge of "intent to kill." He being at large, of course advises the other three desperadoes to keep out of the way till the excitement is over.

In Calcasieu parish a white woman and a colored man were both found one morning murdered in the house where they resided. The civil authorities have made no effort whatever to investigate the matter.

In Donaldsonville on Thursday last a colored man, sitting in his own cabin, was approached by a raftsman, who pointed a revolver at him, and asked him if he was afraid of that. The colored man replied that he was not, whereupon the raftsman asked him to come outside. He did so, and the raftsman again pointed the revolver at him, and again asked: "Are you afraid of that?" He replied that he was not. The raftsman then exclaimed, "God damn you, then, take that!" and shot him through the left shoulder, fortunately inflicting only a flesh wound.

The raftsman was arrested and taken before Justice Dubois, of the Second Ward. When asked what he committed the deed for he replied, "He is a damned nigger!" The Justice remanded him to jail for appearance before the District Court, Judge Beauvais.

To two other colored men who witnessed the shooting the raftsman said, "Get out of the way, or I'll shoot you."

In Franklin parish perhaps we may recapitulate some cases that have already been reported. Moses Munger, colored, was murdered on the twenty-eighth of July, and his house fired. On the twenty-ninth a colored man was whipped by rebel ruffians, and another colored man wounded in the leg by a pistol shot.

In the same parish about the tenth of July freedmen were leaving the parish on account of the outrages perpetrated upon them.

In Franklin parish between the tenth and twenty-first of July seven colored men were killed and four wounded. Four white men were also killed during the same time, one of whom was Mr. Small. No arrests were made by either the civil or military authorities.

Between the twentieth and thirtieth of July two terrible outrages on freedmen were reported, but the civil authorities did not punish or attempt to punish the perpetrators.

On the fourth a white man was killed in Franklin parish, and yet no arrest of the assassin or assassins has been made.

Many of these reports have reached General Buchanan officially, but we have yet to learn that he pays the slightest attention to the cases of assassination brought to his notice. The records of his office could a tale unfold that would make the blood curdle with horror. But he refuses to give the details reported in them to individuals, or to the public. Why? Is it because the publication of the truth would expose the inefficiency, imbecility, or criminal negligence of his military administration?

OPINIONS OF THE NORTHERN PRESS.

Political Effect of Rebel Outrages—The Northern People Aroused—Republican War of the Ballot.

The boastful spirit of the Democratic press of the South has nothing to sustain it. All indications tend to show that the sentiment of the North is united in the determination to prosecute with the ballot a most vigorous war for the success of the Republican Presidential ticket. The people of the North are quite as united now in resistance to the demonstrations of the Southern Democracy against freedom of political action here as they were in resistance to armed rebellion against the government of the United States.

To illustrate the temper of the North we copy the following editorials from influential papers there:

[From the Milwaukie Wisconsin.]

CRIME IN THE SOUTH.—The statements which come up from the South of the prevalence of assassination and outrage are truly appalling. The state of things existing in Louisiana as detailed in Governor Warmoth's appeal for troops, which we have published, is without a parallel in civilized countries. Even if one-half he stated is true, his demand for troops should be immediately complied with, and the most stringent means employed to rid the country of the assassins who infest the State. Let there be a sufficient military force distributed through the country to insure the prompt arrest and summary punishment of these bloodthirsty villains; and let the work go on until life and property and personal liberty shall be as secure in every one of the Southern States as they are in the North. It is one of the most imperative duties of Government to see to it that the era of crime which has marked the history of the South, and which would disgrace barbarism itself, shall forever cease. And if it be necessary in order to accomplish this to order the whole army into the South, and to recruit its numbers ten or a hundred fold let it be done, but let the retribution which shall be meted out to these Southern thugs and outlaws be so swift and terrible that the memory thereof shall remain evermore as a terror to evil-doers. Too long has the Government closed its eyes to the shocking persecutions for opinion's sake which have prevailed in the Southern States. The "chivalry" must be taught respect for law, and the tolerance of freedom of opinion and speech, let it cost what it may.

It is a fact which speaks volumes that all the villains and organizations who commit these crimes are avowed supporters of Seymour and Blair; that they are committing these crimes for the purpose of intimidating Union men or driving them from the States, so that they may be carried for the Democracy at the approaching election. Governor Warmoth says that there have been one hundred and fifty murders perpetrated in the last month, and the murderers are so bold and defiant, and have the sympathy of the rebels to such a degree, that it is impossible to bring them to justice. Officers dare not serve processes, and judges dare not hold courts. Such are the Democrats of the South, and such is the effect produced by Democratic utterances. Let every candid voter ask himself if the country has anything to hope from the success of a party which inspires men to such deeds of darkness as we have detailed. Let Democracy succeed this fall and a Union man could no more live at the South than he could in the Cannibal Islands.

[From the Philadelphia Inquirer.]

"SEE WHAT YOU HAVE DONE!"—The appeal of Governor Warmoth, of Louisiana, to President Johnson, sounds very much like the reproof, "See what you have done!" The Governor states exactly what has been the result of the President's "policy" in Louisiana. The New Orleans riots were direct products of that policy. The removal of General Sheridan was in the interest of the secessionists and to accomplish the work of giving over the State to the control of the men who had come home from the rebel army in order to manage civil affairs at home in the spirit which had endeavored to triumph during the war. General Hancock was appointed in order to give the mastery to the ruffians and assassins who are consigning that State to a condition of terror; and General Buchanan has assisted in the plot by making small effort to keep down the mutterings of disaffection. Governor Warmoth says that throughout the State assassination is triumphant.

Men are murdered on the high roads and at their own homes, and frequently no effort is made to bring the guilty to trial. Even if arrested, such is the demoralization consequent upon the original crime of rebellion, it is impossible to obtain fair trials of the murderers, or the vindication of justice. Governor Warmoth says that in six weeks one hundred and fifty persons have been murdered in Louisiana. Judges who are native Louisianians can not hold courts for the trial of offenders without the protection of troops; and officers who affiliate with the party of disorder, the Democratic party, are compelled to resign, because they find that it is impossible for them to discharge their duties honestly. Louisiana is given up to a reign of terror, and it is to be observed that at no period during the rebellion has the spirit of disorder been as rampant as now. Hancock addressed himself during his commandership to the encouragement of this violent and bloody spirit. Buchanan emulated his example, and the result is that the State is given up to the most wicked atrocities, apparently with the concurrence of officers of the United States army, who have loaned themselves to the work of restoring the supremacy of the parties who were foremost in the rebellion. The appeal of Governor Warmoth comes to the President like the protest of an accusing spirit.

If Andrew Johnson has any conscience he must deeply accuse himself of the disastrous consequences attendant upon his usurping plans. When he assumed office, after the death of Mr. Lincoln, he found the South humiliated, imploring, asking only moderation in punishment. Instead of standing up for the laws and their vindication, instead of endeavoring to "make treason odious," his sole effort during the last three years has been to restore the leaders of the rebellion to places of vantage and power. He has rekindled in their hearts the passions which were subdued by the events of the war. He has taught them to act as defiantly, wickedly, and cruelly as they ever did. He has encouraged them to become savage, headstrong, vindictive; and he has done everything that he could to encourage them to undertake their schemes of vengeance and malice against every friend of the Union in the South. Governor Warmoth, by the necessities of his position, is compelled to appeal to the President to allow him means to protect the honest and patriotic citizens of Louisiana against the President's friends. Does not the tone of his communication carry throughout its declarations, the heavy burden, coming back and repeating itself again and again—"See what you have done?"

[From the Chicago Journal.]

WARMOTH VERSUS SEYMOUR.—In his address to the Republicans, as Seymour's letter of acceptance has been aptly called, the Copperhead nominee for President said:

"The chiefs of the late rebellion have submitted to the results of the war, and are now quietly engaged in useful pursuits for the support of themselves and their families, and are trying by the force of their example to lead back the people of the South to the order and industry not only essential to their well being, but to the greatness and prosperity of our community."

This infamous falsehood was as well-timed as Seymour's New York speech of July 4, 1863. He then sneered at the promise of the downfall of Vicksburg, and hardly had the echo of his voice died away before the news came of its unconditional surrender. So in this case. Just at the time of the appearance of the letter of acceptance by the former, in which he declares that the chiefs of the late rebellion are submissively pursuing the arts of peace and are engaged in the occupation of industry, Governor Warmoth, of Louisiana, in sending to the President a requisition for troops to protect the loyal men of that State, makes a statement in striking contrast with Seymour's. The latter speaks from hearsay, the former from actual knowledge. Here is what his Excellency the Governor of Louisiana says:

"In many parishes (Louisiana) there exists no protection for the citizens in the courts; men are shot down in the roads and at their homes without any steps being taken to bring the offenders to justice. The Judge of the Twelfth Judicial District refuses to go to the parish of Franklin without a force is sent to protect him. The sheriff of the same parish, a Democrat, has resigned, confessing his inability to make arrests. Prominent Union men in the parish of Caddo write that their homes are beset by desperadoes, and that their lives have been saved thus far only by armed men who volunteered to guard them. District Attorney Hudspeth says men, women, and children have recently been murdered in the parish of St. Landry by bands of armed men who remain unmolested. No doubt a hundred and fifty men have been murdered in Louisiana in the last month and a half, and there seems to be a settled determination by the rebels (these are the chiefs Seymour speaks of) either to kill or drive away all Union men and leading colored men, so as to be able to terrify the masses of the colored people into voting as they shall dictate."

Such are the "useful pursuits of Seymour's 'friends.'" Is Seymour an ignoramus or a deliberate liar, or does the above from Governor Warmoth's letter meet his ideas of equity and prosperity?

[From the New York Commercial Advertiser.]

SUPPRESSING THE TRUTH.—Why does the World continue to refrain from publishing the speeches which Wade Hampton delivered in South Carolina? Why fill its columns with long harangues from third-rate politicians, like Glover, of Missouri, for instance, and then omit the speeches of the platform makers, managers, and conductors of the Democratic campaign. Wouldn't the rank and file be interested in reading what they have to say, or must the latter continue to look to Republican journals for reports of their remarks from time to time?

We have here the queer spectacle of party journals pretending to uphold and work for their party's success, and yet completely ignoring all the principal leaders, like Hampton, Wise, Bowie, Forrest, Forsyth, Vance, and Pike.

We can assure our cotemporary that this little dodge will never succeed. The people subscribe to newspapers to obtain the news. If it is withheld from them they will repudiate these organs as dishonest, and seek the information where it can be found.

The Democratic journals assume altogether too much when they take it for granted that the Democratic rank and file are so benighted and easily imposed upon. We admit that they are generally badly "gulled," but not in this matter of supressing news. The World and other Democratic sheets tried on the same game after the New Orleans massacre, and what was the result?

[From the Boston Transcript.]

A SUGGESTIVE FACT.—The most prominent supporters of Seymour in the South are Wade Hampton, ex-Governor Wise, Howell Cobb, General Forrest, and other malignant haters of the loyal cause—men chiefly known for their atrocities during the war—while Pendleton and Vallandigham, the advocates of "peace at any price," manage the canvass for the Northern wing of the Seymour party. Such a political allocation indicates better than labored argument the reigning spirit of the party now attempting to brag itself into power. The politicians foremost in the rebellious South, and their principal apologizers in other sections of the country, who while the strife lasted did what they dared to embarrass the government, now give law to the "Democracy." Hardly a War Democrat is anywhere heard on the stump for the election of Seymour. Undoubtedly the number is very few desiring thus to stultify themselves, but it is noteworthy that no Democrat of this stamp, of any prominence, advocates the candidate whose best "friends" are among the draft rioters of New York. The speaking of the Democratic campaign is performed in the Northern States by Pendleton, Vallandigham, and Voorhees,—notorious Copperheads, whose advice during the war, had it been followed, would have destroyed our nationality. In the South, the "Democratic" campaigners can only get their speeches published in Republican papers, so reeking are these addresses with hatred of everything loyal and patriotic. In 1864 the opponents of the Republicans were overwhelmed by their disloyal platform. The present canvass will witness a similar result, produced by the disloyalty of the men sent to the front to uphold the Democratic candidate.

[From the Chicago Post.]

The evidences are abundant that the South is as ready for a second war as it was at the firing of Sumter. Put Seymour in the Presidential chair, and he will prove a second Buchanan ready to their hand. And what is more, he will have a Cabinet not a whit behind such thieves and revolutionists as were Floyd and Cobb. No lover of his country, not absolutely insane, will vote for Seymour and Blair.

[From the New York Sun.]

Governor Warmoth's letter to the President, transmitting the resolutions of the Legislature of Louisiana asking for the military aid of the United States to suppress the disorders in that State, which the civil authority can not put down, is a model State paper. No man after reading that letter can honestly charge the Southern Unionists with a design of keeping alive the dissensions still smouldering in Southern communities. If the President were the man he ought to be he would not have hesitated for one moment to grant the prayer of the authorities of Louisiana; but if he were, the disorders now necessary to be squelched by the strong arm of military force would never have occurred, for they are all the legitimate fruit of his own conduct.

[From the New York Commonwealth.]

The "Conservative chaps" in the Louisiana Legislature are not pleased with Republican Governor Warmoth's determination to keep the peace in that State. A "Jewell" of a Democratic Senator, day before yesterday, showed his dislike to the Governor in a vindictive speech in the Senate, and also his chagrin at the fact that the Grand Army of the Republic of New Orleans are ready and sufficiently powerful to prevent any repetition of the thirtieth of July massacre of loyal citizens. Governor Warmoth's letter to the President, calling for military aid to suppress lawlessness and murder in the sparsely settled country parishes, does not suit the wishes of these rebel outlaws.

[From the Chicago Post.]

The case made by Governor Warmoth, of Louisiana, in his application to the President for troops to aid him in enforcing the law, is so strong that refusal to comply with his demand must be accepted as an evidence that the Executive is willing, for partisan reasons, to permit the shooting and hangings of which Louisiana is the scene to go on unchecked. We shall see what he will do.

THE NORTHERN PRESS ON THE CAMPAIGN.

[From the New York Commercial Advertiser.]

THE STAMPEDE.—We shall not be at all surprised at soon witnessing a stampede from the Democratic party like unto that which followed the firing of Beauregard's guns on Sumter. Our advices from every quarter point to such a result. The indications are unmistakable. That sad, lugubrious "it might have been" editorial in Tuesday's Journal of Commerce clearly revealed what thoughts are uppermost in the minds of many Democrats. We quote:

"We suggested a platform upon which every thoughtful man, every good citizen of whatever party, could have planted himself without reproach. Had the July convention adopted this in its main features, and passing by all party hacks and ultra demagogues, nominated on the issue thus presented two sound conservative Democrats whose names brought up no bitter memories and suggested no allusion to former party feuds, the ticket would have been elected by an overwhelming majority. To this end we contributed what we could, but not being in the councils of either party, we had no control of the petty machinery by which the wires are usually manipulated, and our efforts were unsuccessful. * * We shall not be surprised if the proportion of those who actually refrain from voting should be of itself beyond all former precedent. * * * It might have been far otherwise if there had been virtue and decision enough among those who are directly responsible for the action of the convention."

This very Democratic Journal does not fail to read the signs of the times. It has heretofore denounced the platform as being outrageous and disgraceful in the extreme, and it now virtually places the candidates in the same category. The Journal has not taken a survey of the political situation to no purpose. It perceives and understands that the people now regard Democracy and repudiation and revolution as synonymous terms, and it hastens to cast off all responsibility for the overwhelming defeat which is coming.

The stampede has, in fact, already commenced. The trenchant letter of P. H. Sibley, the member of the California Democratic State Committee, who has repudiated the Tammany nominees and declared for Grant and Colfax, will determine the course of all the War Democrats of the Golden State. They will be found in the Republican ranks in November. Mr. Sibley says:

"In remembering that I am a Democrat I can not forget that I owe a higher allegiance to the American Union. I should be glad to remain in the Democratic party could I believe that in doing so I am not sacrificing those principles of patriotism that are higher and holier than any sentiment of mere party fealty."

The Hon. T. W. Green, a very prominent Democrat of Indianapolis, Indiana, announces that he can not stand upon such a platform or vote for such candidates as the Tammany convention foisted upon the party, and he shall accordingly work and vote for the great captain of our armies. Judge Studdiford, who was a Democrat up to the time of the Tammany nominations addressed the Sixth Ward (Brooklyn) Grant Club a few nights since. General J. B. Sweitzer, who was the Democratic nominee for Congress in the Pittsburg (Penn.) District, two years ago, has now deserted the Democratic camp and declared for the chieftain who led him to battle. The Lawrence (Mass.) American informs us that one of the most prominent Democrats of Essex county repudiates Seymour and Blair. Said a well-known lawyer in St. Louis the other day: "I have been a Democrat, but I can not vote for Seymour. I will not vote to surrender everything we fought for. If I can do any good I will take the stump for Grant and Colfax."

Hon. David Kilgore, of Indiana, who for late years has been a Democrat, now pronounces for Grant and Colfax, Baker and Cumback. The Elmira Gazette, the only Democratic daily paper in Chemung county, this State, declares that Horatio Seymour can not and should not be elected, and accordingly runs up the Republican nominees. We are assured by the Elmira Advertiser that no attempt will be made to establish a new Democratic daily in the county. The very Democratic Vindicator, of St. Joseph, Missouri, pronounces Mr. Seymour "the most magnificent of all humbugs," and it is preparing to bolt him as such. Mr. Belfoy, publisher of the Democratic organ at Minneapolis, Minnesota, has bolted Tammany, sold out his concern, and established a Republican newspaper. The stirring appeals of the Zanesville (Ohio) Germania, since it repudiated the Tammany platform and candidates and declared for Grant and Colfax, are having great influence upon the Western Teutons, and the Steubenville Herald says: "The German Democrats of Ohio are abandoning that party by thousands and enrolling among the friends of Grant and peace." With hardly an exception Republicans who have gone into the Democratic party for the past three years, owing to the extreme action of some of their own leaders, will now return and be found right at the polls. The Times observes on this point:

"The Conservative Republicans struggled a couple of years to moderate the course of the dominant party, but were uniformly frustrated by the unprincipled partisanship of the Democratic members. They contributed their full share to whatever is extreme in reconstruction legislation. And when they and their party raised the flag of resistance to law in Tammany Hall, incorporated Wade Hampton's doctrine in their platform, and otherwise afforded proof that Copperheadism is still in the ascendant in their councils, the last plea for Conservatism, as a disintegrating element in the Republican ranks, vanished. The nomination of Grant at Chicago on a platform at once conciliatory and just, laid the foundation for the reunion of all shades of Republican opinion. The New York nominations, on a platform of repudiation and revolution, removed all lingering doubts as to the course of duty, and rendered the Republican strength more compact than ever."

In view of these and other indications, the Springfield Republican and other sheets are not far out of the way in predicting that Grant will carry all the States which voted for Mr. Lincoln two years ago, with majorities even more decisive.

[From the New York Journal of Commerce, Independent.]

It was the teaching of an old philosophy that one extreme in human conduct always begot another, which followed it inevitably like the alternate swing of the pendulum. If this is the law of action it should teach a lesson to politicians.

* * * * *

The mistake which has been made is too serious to be overlooked. The reaction was not from the Republican party in its elements, so much as from radicalism. It was a movement in which conservative Republicans would have joined as heartily as conservative Democrats. To have secured the alliance of the whole body, there was needed a conservative platform and a conservative ticket. The change desired was not from the radicals of one party to the radicals of another, but from radicalism itself toward that safer conservative policy so essential to the national Union and prosperity. Radical Democracy, represented by men of the Blair school, is almost as distasteful even to conservative Democrats as the Stevens and Sumner radicalism is to the conservative Republicans.

Instead, therefore, of a fair issue between the two parties representing the radical and conservative policy, we are likely to have only a fight between the two radical factions.

[From the New York Evening Post.]

There was a time when the Democratic party was the party of progress, the party of sound ideas, of generous instincts, the party of justice, of human brotherhood, of equal rights, of freedom. Then its leaders had courage, they were aggressive, they were not afraid to attack wrong wherever they found it, or to maintain the right wherever it led them. If it were that now; if it had in it even any of the old leaven of righteousness, it might be well to support it, and keep it from destruction. But it has not a single good Democratic quality remaining; it is the party of hate, of inhuman prejudice: it has planted itself on injustice and dishonor. During the war it was ready to surrender the Union; since the war it is ready to disgrace the nation by repudiating the debt. It denies justice, and boastfully appeals to the baser passions of the multitude.

Is that a party with which the young men of the nation, generous, full of ardor, loving liberty, having faith in mankind, believing also in the irresistible progress of this great Union in intelligence, virtue, and wealth, can join? * * *

There is hope of the Republican party; it seems to have a future before it; it can be wielded and formed by the young men of the nation. But even if it could not, it should, in this election, receive the support of all young men, of all voters who wish to get done with the negro in politics, of all who desire to recognize accomplished facts, and who see that the country imperatively needs that other questions than those relating to the rights of negroes shall be discussed and settled without loss of time. These questions can not come up until the present issue is decided; until by a repetition of the defeat of 1864 the Democrats are forced to accept reconstruction as an accomplished fact, and turn to other questions.

[From the New York Tribune.]

The World is explaining "more precisely" what it meant by predicting a Waterloo defeat of the Republicans next November. This must be satisfactory to those interested. Will it now oblige us by stating that the Democratic blacklegs have all become so virtuous and moral that none of them have called at the St. Nicholas to take the bet of $10,000 on Grant's election which has there been publicly offered since the day of Seymour's nomination? and that George Wilkes's offer to accommodate them in sums of $5000 and upward on Grant are likewise unaccepted? Considering that they have been fully assured by the World that Grant is to be defeated, we pronounce this the greatest moral reformation ever heard of.

[From the Providence Journal.]

THE OLD STORY.—How the speeches and resolutions and newspaper articles of the South have the ring of the old secession time. The Democratic ratification meeting in Virginia resolved that if the Radicals attempted to carry out their schemes there would be another civil war. Their "schemes" are the laws of Congress; and the offense of the Radicals is the carrying out of these laws. It is the old story over again. The Democrats in the South enter upon the Presidential election with the determination to enjoy its fruits if they win—to repudiate the authority if they fail. They mean to treat Grant as they treated Lincoln. Not satisfied with the flogging which they have received they court another. Of course, if there is any civil war they will make it. It must arise from resistance to the law; and that it will be put down no man this side of Mason and Dixon's line doubts.

But fortunately the Southern Democrats who threaten a second war, if they are beaten a second time, are not as strong as they were when they defied the might of the nation before, and they have within their own limits a loyal population, no longer enslaved, and although suffering from ignorance and long oppression, yet rapidly rising in the scale of civilization, and daily growing more fitted to take a part in the government. The way to avoid further commotion, the way to secure that peace which the country wants, is to elect the man who made peace with his sword, a peace for the time perfect and profound, and which would not have been broken had his wise counsel been followed. Never was the path to peace plainer before a people. Elect General Grant and the discomfited rebels will be as meek as they were after the surrender at Appomattox; and the country will rest assured that no madness in the White House will arouse the spirit of the rebellion to new energy.

GENERAL COLFAX, WASHINGTON'S LIFE GUARDSMAN.

The Washington correspondent of the Cleveland Leader writes:

Down at the old Virginia city of Alexandria I saw, not long ago, a faded flag of white silk, fringed, well worn with mold and rain, bearing an old fashioned device of a soldier, holding in one hand a fiery horse and the other receiving from the Genius of Liberty, who sits beside the American eagle, a streamer bearing the motto "Conquer or die!" This was the original standard of the Life Guard of General George Washington, commanded by Captain (afterward General) William Colfax, the grandfather of Schuyler Colfax, candidate for the Vice-Presidency of the United States. The old man died in 1838, when the present Speaker of the House of Representatives was fifteen years old, and the latter's recollection of his distinguished ancestor is vivid and enthusiastic.

Mrs. Matthews, Colfax's mother, recalls, as it were yesterday, the time when she entered the General's family as the wife of his son. He was a hale and handsome man, positive in his opinions, a Washingtonian in his politics, something of a traveler, for he visited Indiana among the earliest of his family, and he knew by the association of the whole war the military life and habits of the first President. He is buried at Pompton, New Jersey, the seat of his family.

The side of this old standard, so much older and more storied than our newer shotriven and grimy guidons, impelled me to make some search in the library of Congress for the life of William Colfax. In this, Mr. Spofford, the librarian, assisted me, and although the results were meagre, they were of the highest interest.

First, out of Peter Force's collection manuscripts I drew a yellow foolscap sheet, in the hand writing of "William Colfax, Commandant," bearing the date of June 28, 1783, and containing the names of sixty-five men, constituting the life-guard of the commander-in-chief. Across the back of the report, in the hand writing of George Washington, was written: "Report of the body-guard of the commander in-chief approved."

Then, out of Lossing's Field Book, Howe's New Jersey Historical Collections, and other documents of the war of Independence, I gathered the following data—thrice interesting now in the light of the brilliant career of his grandson—of William Colfax, the life guardsman of the Father of his Country.

The Life Guard was organized on New York Island in 1776, soon after the siege of Boston. It was composed of one hundred and eighty men, and was at first commanded by Callett Gibbs, of Rhode Island. There were three Lieutenants—Harry P. Livingstone, of New York, William Colfax, of New Jersey, and Benjamin Goymes, of Virginia. In 1779 William Colfax was raised to the chief command, and the number of the guard was increased to two hundred and fifty men. Colonel Nichols, of Virginia, was Lieutenant under Colfax.

It was Colfax whom Washington personally relied upon and preferred to hold this important place near his person, and it was through the solicitations of Captain Colfax that Washington was initiated into Free Masonry, taking his first degree at Morristown, New Jersey, while the army lay there in winter quarters. This ceremony was performed in what was known as the Morris Hotel, opposite the village green of Morristown, over what was recently the barroom.

At Morristown Captain Colfax was particularly the guardian of the safety of General Washington. The latter had his headquarters then in the house of Gabriel Ford, still standing. It was a mile or two out of town. The General and his family occupied all the house except a couple of rooms reserved for Mr. Ford and family; in a log hut, on one side, he kept his office, with his aidesdecamp Hamilton, Tilghman, and others; a log hut on the opposite side accommodated his cook. Surgeon Thatcher, in his diary, relates the hardships of that winter. The Life Guards occupied fifty rude huts in a meadow near by, and the army was encamped over a long sweep of hillsides, two or three miles off in either direction. The near proximity to the British army obliged Captain Colfax to be constantly alert. When the alarm gun was sounded, successive interior pickets repeated it till the whole line of camps was aroused. If the alarm was near by, the Life Guard at once filled the house. Five marksmen were placed at each window ready to shoot down any enemy; the staircases were guarded, and in this way the Life Guards held the General's person till the earliest regiment appeared in sight.

Captain Colfax used to relate in his old years, with a good deal of humor, an instance of the complacency of Washington. One time the alarm was sounded. Confusion reigned. An aiddecamp rushed into the house, crying, "Where's the General? Where's the General?"

Washington, coming out of his room and walking composedly down stairs, said:

"Be quiet, young man. Be quiet."

Before the door of this house Count Pulaski used to drill his famous cavalry. Captain Colfax relates that Pulaski used to fire off his pistol, throw it into the air, catch it, hurl it at an imaginary enemy, and then, with one foot in the stirrup, bend to the ground without losing his rein, and recover the pistol.

At this place Washington rode a light bay horse, so small that the General's legs, astride him, almost touched the ground. Captain Colfax often told of one of the few instances when Washington was known to laugh heartily. It was when describing Arnold's precipitate flight from Robinson's house at West Point, on the discovery of his treason. The estimate of Washington, given by Colfax will not be inapplicable to General Grant:

"He was reserved, and his mind appeared continually in exercise. He united sound judgment with the extremest degree of caution."

The Life Guardsmen continued in existence, under Captain Colfax, till 1783, the last year of the war, when there were but sixty-four of them besides their commandant. They were selected by quotas from each of the States, with reference to their physical, moral, and intellectual attributes. To imagine the leader of this famous band of picked patriots we have but to revive the strong, devoted, faithful face of Captain Colfax dressed in the uniform of his company; blue coat with white facings, white waistcoat, breeches, half black gaiters, and cocked hat, with a blue and white feather.

Mrs. Matthews has now in her possession the silver shoe buckles of General Washington—part of the tokens which the chieftain gave his beloved attendant. It was while at Washington's headquarters that Colfax made the acquaintance of General Schuyler, and married into his family.

TO THE SOLDIERS OF THE UNION.

[From the New York Irish Republic.]

The crisis is again upon us, and the hour near at hand when we shall decide to enter upon a four years' reign of peace and great national prosperity, or awake from that bright dream of peace to find ourselves standing upon the verge of such a revolution as the world has never seen, and it is to be supposed that every man endowed with a citizenship that gives him a voice in the affairs of our nation has decided where he shall stand in the contest, and will, so far as in him lies the power of discerning, do his duty to his country and his fellow-men.

But if there be any honest and peace-loving citizens who have stood by the nation in her past trying hours, in the hours when chaos reigned supreme in our nation's capital, reigned o'er vacant seats, made thus vacant by the acts of traitorous sons, fostered in her hours of national prosperity—any who followed her varying fortures through her subsequent defeats and painful disasters—any such, there are, who unwittingly it may be, are about to betray or commit acts, which, if successful, will lead to a base betrayal of the nation into the hands of her former traitorous sons and present enemies, let us see what men or means or party acts have caused this mighty fall.

For one, the writer has long and patiently awaited the hour in which he could rally under the standard of his former leader, and follow on to the contest where the ballot, that choicest gift mankind have ever enjoyed, shall usurp the deadly bullet's power against those high-handed traitors, the very Hamptons, Forrests, and Toombs, and their confreres in treason, once by bullets beaten; but as they were not conquered, returned in an evil hour from the exile an indignant and betrayed people justly consigned them to, returned erect in form and bearing, to stalk boldly into the councils of their late apologists and abettors, and in the name of a party once justly esteemed, but now nobly defunct and honorably consigned to the tomb of oblivion, in the name of Democracy, if you will, they resolve and re-resolve that the glory of our past victory shall be turned to ridicule and shame, our dearly bought peace once again disturbed by the groans of dying honor and the labor pains of a nation in her travail. And if they will attempt a reaction, they may rest assured their former enemies are more earnestly so to-day than ever before. But let us hope the traitors' punishment may be left to God and future generations, to mete out to their souls and their memories forever; and while we flatter ourselves on our security from disasters that might be brought upon us, let us be sure that the prime movers in this campaign, both men and parties, are so thoroughly righted as to give no room for prejudice nor mistake.

Now, one word to the soldier, be he of whatever nationality or party he may. Let us stand by our country as before, and show the people that 'tis to our cause alone and to no party we cling. Our old leader, General Grant, is the same common man and soldier we knew at the Wilderness, at Spottsylvania, and Petersburg. The same who would never flatter or be flattered. He never broke his promise to us, and we trust he never will. Added to his career of greatness in the field, look at his acts as a military ruler and civil executive. Justice and impartiality mark his every deed. He has accepted the nomination for President of the United States from the people and not from the Republican party. The people have demanded it for four years past, and the Republican party have been first to ratify the people's choice. For this, as soldiers, let us thank them.

From the life-long position of General commanding the armies of this republic our leader stoops to administer, as he tells us, a four years' reign of peace, in which the will of the people shall rule the land. As you trust your own honest hearts and your leader's honor, are you not satisfied to leave the issue with him?

As you fought for the victory that brought our present peace and prosperity, as yours was one of the many hearts and hands that fought and bled for the glory of the present hour, that moves this mighty people to place the life and honor of the nation in the hands of our leader, and by that act into the hands of every common soldier in the Union ranks, you may receive the people's choice of General Grant for their ruler as a compliment to yourselves and your comrades; as a recognition by that people of your valor and devotion to the cause of liberty; and a direct manifestation of the nation's dependence for her present glory and future greatness upon each and every one of you who stood in the ranks of her armies.

AWFUL SITUATION.—A more deplorable state of affairs has seldom if ever existed in this country than exists to-day.

Monday night last a band of mounted Ku-Klux paraded our streets, and did us great honor in calling upon us, and requesting us to leave the country within three days on pain of death. Aaron Bysaw, colored man, was attacked, and only saved his life by flight. After finishing their mission in our hitherto quiet little city, they proceeded to the country, and at the dark hour of midnight, for no cause whatever, brutally murdered James Stephenson, a colored man residing a few miles from this city. With this bloody act ended the Monday night tragedy.

Was ever a country in a more deplorable condition than the South at present? Armed bands of men are prowling around nightly, spreading terror everywhere. No man is safe, no matter what may be his politics. On Monday night the Ku-Klux played their cowardly and savage part, and were followed on last night by a band of armed negroes, who paraded the streets.

We are pleased to know that the citizens of Decatur, both Republican and Conservative, deprecate the action of those who, without authority or invitation, have brought trouble and disgrace upon our city. We take the privilege of speaking for the citizens of this place in saying that we feel fully able to regulate our affairs without the assistance of midnight prowlers. Your acts will bring troops here if persisted in. As you are not invited, please come "nevermore."
